This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

MONKS, POPES, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price, 1

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY, it having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, ret. 11 price $1 00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price.....75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price.....75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price.....1 50
One collar-button, retail price.....50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price.....2 00

Total.....$5 50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6 50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1 50, or 12 sample lots for $1.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting.....$1 20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1 05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring.....2 00
One gent's large seal ring.....2 00
One ladies' long neck chain.....2 75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain.....1 75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud.....75
One beautiful scarf-pin.....1 00
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons.....1 00

Total.....$13 50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

6m3

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Nichols

PHOTOGRAPHER,

697 Broadway,

3 doors below 4th St. NEW YORK.

DON'T PAY ENORMOUS prices for Pictures any longer, when NICHOLS makes CARD PHOTOGRAPHS Retouched and Burnished for $1.50 per dozen, & 4 large Pictures Album size, for 35 cts. finished in ten minutes. LOCKET PICTURES only 35 cents.

NICHOLS' GEMS,
18 FOR 25 CENTS.

Finished in ten minutes.

OLD PICTURES COPIED.

Good pictures made in cloudy weather Open every day, come early to avoid the rush.

The latest and best Negatives in the Country of GEO. FRANCIS TRAIN. Large photo. size, 15c.

When you visit New York call at my Rooms and examine my pictures.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU,

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CHAVEN, Price, by mail, $1.00. Address
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth Street, New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINEON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 150

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

Gems of Thought.

THE head without the heart is a bereft mourner sitting alone.—Bartol.

MY mind is to me a kingdom, and it furnishes me abundant and happy occupation.—Epictetus.

NOTHING can bring you peace but yourself. Nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principle.—Emerson.

SINCE I cannot govern my tongue, though within my own teeth, how can I hope to govern the tongues of others?—Franklin.

OF the future we know nothing, of the past little, of the present less; the mirror is too close to our eyes, and our own breath dims it.—Walter Savage Landor.

AFTER all, what is a true Deist? One who says to God, "I adore and love thee"; one who says to a Turk, a Chinese, an Indian, and a Russian, "I love thee."—Voltaire.

HALF the sorrows of women would be averted if they could repress the speech they know to be useless—nay, the speech they have resolved not to utter.—George Eliot.

ENERGY will do anything that can be done in this world; and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities, will make a two-legged animal a man without it.—Goethe.

THE philosopher ought to destroy bad usages not submit to them. He owes obedience to the laws only when they are not contrary to a superior law, which he carries within him.—Porphyry.

LET us honor the great empire of silence once more, the boundless treasury which we do not jingle in our pockets, or count up, and present before men. It is, perhaps, of all things, the usefulest for each of us to do in these loud times.—Carlyle.

GREAT thoughts belong only and truly to him whose mind can hold them. No matter who first puts them in words; if they come to a soul and fill it they belong to it—whether they floated on the voice of others or on the wings of silence.—Donald G. Mitchell.

IT is too early in the history of the world to tell what is true. Our fathers were slaves. Their fathers were intellectual serfs, and there has never yet been a generation of men and women upon this globe. Wait until we have a few ages of liberty. It will then be time to say what is true.—Ingersoll.

TRANQUILITY, or peace of mind, which is also called wisdom, is a thing so desirable that its value is beyond all estimate; possessing it, we wonder at nothing; we fear nothing; and we enjoy everything—for, when we know how properly to frame our manners, order our actions, and moderate our desires, we are continually happy.—Democritus.

IS the church-God an Asiatic monarch so jealous that we must bow before his throne servilely to gain his approval? A god making such botch of creation that we, his misbegotten abortive creations, creep to his feet to ask his pardon for his having thus shamed us, of all others is the most loathsome.—Hudson Tuttle.

THE greatest man is he who chooses right with the most invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptation from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is calmest in storms, and most fearless under menaces and frowns; whose reliance on truth and virtue is most unflinching.—Seneca.

IS there no advantage in a piety which permits a man to be a scamp. I do not see how society is to be benefited by a religion which is not applied to the destruction of these vices. If Christianity cannot stop a man from lying, and slandering, and cheating, then what is it good for? And has not the time come for us to define religion as to make it mean virtue and nothing, short of it.—Rev. W. H. H. Murray.

THE belief in future punishment will never cease as long as there is so much punishing done in the now and to-day. As long as man believes in a wrathful, angry, punishing God, just so long will he be the reflected image of the god he creates. Aye, and worse than his god, for a man's god is an embodiment of his wisest, greatest and best conception of goodness. Reform and enlighten a nation, and you create for it newer and better gods; and these in turn influence for the better the nation itself, thus ever acting and reacting, one upon the other. Create gods that are all love, charity and forbearance, and at once men will cease to punish each other, and be themselves the reflex of their better gods.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

DURF! In that one name more crime has been committed, more misery created, than in any other. All the persecutions of the world have been carried forward to compel man to obey God. Jesus was nailed to the cross that the Jews might not fail in their time-honored temple-worship; and the petty-churches of to-day wrangle and would crucify each other remorselessly for rejection of their peculiar views. Little cares the Infinite whether a mortal is sprinkled in the face, plunged in the water, or neither sprinkled nor plunged; whether he works on Saturday or Sunday; whether he circumcises, knocks out a tooth, cuts off a finger, or says grace. The only duty we owe is the observance, of the laws of our being; and it is time we cast aside the trappings, the ceremonies, and observances which mislead and divert. Here we cannot mistake our duty. We stand face to face with these laws, and need no priest between them and us. If we obey, we at once reap the reward; if we fail, we at once incur the penalty. If in our extremity our lips utter a prayer, it is from habit acquired in childish days, which we know to be as valueless to help us as the breath which gives it sound.—Hudson Tuttle.

Odds and Ends.

FIGHTING parsons may properly be styled sassy-dotal characters.

FROM Puck.—Adam, the inventor of sin, died before the war. He left a large family.

TOAD-STOOLS are not made by toads, and there is much room for improvement in mushrooms.

CRUEL TREATMENT.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written a poem on his grandmother's mother.

The Sun's readers are patiently waiting to hear Dana allude to Hayes as the "Fraudulent President."

A THING hard to understand—a clergyman often loses his voice by exposure to night air, a cat never does.

HUSBANDS and fathers will be pleased to learn that "small checks" are to be fashionable for silks next summer.

When the soul leaves the body people often remark that the individual has "pegged out." This slang phrase no doubt originated as follows: Pegs hold the body and sole of a shoe together, and when the pegs are out the body and sole part company.

And now the hard-shelled oyster sleepeth quietly in his bed, while dreams of peace and happiness float through his little head; erstwhile the succulent seductive clam in anguish lies in wait, until the heartless, sharp-toothed hoe shall capture him for bait, or some other use, and all because there is no r in May.

THERE'S MANY A SLIP.

The lovers strolled in Central Park. As twilight's shade came softly stealing. When suddenly Augustus Charles Before the maiden fair was kneeling.

"Arise, my love!" she quickly said. Her trembling tones true love revealing: "The passers-by will see you, dear! Try and repress your ardent feeling."

The youth arose, and sadly said: "For wounds like this there is no healing. I have no tale of love to tell; I slipped on that banana peeling!"

He sat alone in her father's parlor, waiting for the fair one's appearance, the other evening, when her little brother came cautiously into the room, and, gliding up to the young man's side, held out a handful of something, and earnestly inquired, "I say, mister, what's them?" "Those?" replied the young man, solemnly, taking up one in his fingers, "those are beans." "There!" shouted the boy, turning to his sister, who was just coming in, "I knew you lied. You said he didn't know beans, and he does, too!" The young man's stay was not what you would call a prolonged one that evening.

WRITING AS IT IS SPOKEN.

Phonetics:
Onion garden bed reclining,
Beet a youth his aching head:
"Cauliflowers, low weeds confront me;
Lettuce hence" he sadly said,
"Carrots out the stoutest manhood,
Peas my wounded soul doth need;
Bean O! strife for me hereafter,
Else my art will go to seed."

Pronounced thus:
On yonder garden bed reclining,
Beats a youth his aching head:
"Cull iflowers, lol weeds confront me:
Let us hence," he sadly said,
"Care roots out the stoutest manhood,
Peace my wounded soul doth need;
Be no strife for me hereafter,
Else my heart will go to seed."

FUNNY SCENE ON A NEW YORK FERRY BOAT.—The ferry boat between New York and Jersey City, some time since, was the scene of an occurrence not very often witnessed. The day was particularly pleasant, and the lady passengers, which, by the way, comprised about a dozen, were seated upon the benches enjoying the scenery. Pretty soon a shout was heard.

"Mien Cot! Mien Cot! mien wife is going to be sick!"

Instantly the ladies rushed into the ladies' cabin, and sure enough, there sat a florid specimen of a Swedish woman enduring the pangs of parturition with great patience. The husband was speedily turned out of the cabin by the ladies, one of which kept watch at the door, while the others made preparations to receive the expected stranger. Of course we cannot enter into the details of the subject, for we were on the outside observing the husband, who begged lustily for admission.

"Oh mien Cot!" he shouted through the door, "Keep a stiff upper lip, Katrain; don't be scared. Oh, mien Cot!" And he danced around the deck in a perfect fever of excitement.

It was impossible to quiet him, until, in a few minutes, one of the ladies informed him, though without granting him admission, that "it was all over."

"Is it a boy or gal?"

"It is a girl," said the lady sentinel, anxious for a little amusement.

"Oh, dunder," was the vexed reply. "No matter; a gal ish better as nothin'."

"It's a boy," again said the lady.

"Vot; ish it changed—vos it a gal vonst, and now a leetle boy?"

"No."

"Tousand tuffels, vot ish it den?"

"There are two—a boy and a girl. You had better procure a carriage when the boat lands."

"Oh, dat ish goot. Dat ish better as goot—a boy and a gal mit one job. Katrain ish pumpkins; I always know it."

And the happy husband disappeared in search of a cab to conduct his family homeward.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Coma to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snoda. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	5
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	1
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	2
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Free Thought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	6
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	9
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills We Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	6
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	6
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Godman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Free Thought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: Is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsherg. M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27, 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Charters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" " Radical Rhymes.	1 25
Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of All Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fierbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Gray's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Free Thought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature, Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc. Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jameson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 70 cuts, Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	3 40
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples' All Around the World, Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strass' Old Faith and New.	2 00</

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
& HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 23. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY }
BY D. M. BENNETT.

New York, Saturday, June 9, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

"BLESSED are the dressmakers," is what a Brooklyn woman understood the text to be last Sunday, when the new clothes blossomed out in all their glory.

THAT lady was slightly nonplussed, who, on a recent warm Sunday at church went to open her fan and found she had by mistake taken her husband's razor.

"Go it hearty, brudders! Go it hearty, sisers!" is the animated style in which the Rev. Jeremiah Beulah Murray encourages his congregation while they sing "Hold the Fort."

THE Rev. John C. Simpson, of Oregon Co., Mo., was recently convicted of illicit distilling, the jury finding him guilty on all the five counts of the indictment upon which he was tried. Simpson is fifty years of age, and has been a Baptist minister for twenty years.

"BUT I pass," said a minister one Sunday, in dismissing one part of his subject to take up another. "Then I make it spades," sang out a man in the gallery who was dreaming away a happy hour at euchre. It is needless to add that the man "went out" on the next deal being "assisted" by the deacon, who held a good hand at clubs.

THE latest from St. Petersburg is said to be that the Czar has ordered the blowing up of a Turkish monitor, with the loss of two hundred lives, to be observed as a day of national thanksgiving in all the churches. They wish to thank God for being so good to them while he was so cruel towards the Turks. Wait till Allah gets a good chance at the Russians. He will try and pay off Jehovah.

THE Rev. John Cowan has sued the Rev. Mr. Sweetzer for defamation of character in charging him with stealing a pair of boots. Will the Universal Peace Society, which has just held its annual convention in this city, please step in and command the peace between these Christian clergymen? They seem bent to keep on with their quarrelling, etc., until they convince everybody that clergymen are no better than other folks.

IN a religious debate in Newark on Monday, between Whalen, Catholic, and Wheatley, Protestant, in order to emphasize his argument, Wheatley knocked Whalen down with a chair, and Mrs. Wheatley knocked Whalen on the head with a hammer. Whalen did not fancy that kind of Protestant arguments, even though they were very effective. Whalen was sent to the hospital and the Wheatleys to jail. They all worship the same Jesus and the same Virgin.

THE Rev. Father Preston takes a gloomy view of the religious condition of the world. He said the other evening, at the Roman Catholic Young Men's Convention, that at no time since Christ was on earth has spiritual darkness been so deep as now. The Father is right as to the decline of religious credulity, but wrong as to the darkness. The more of the latter, the more faith in myths and superstition, and the more the light of science and truth shines upon the world the more blind faith has to retire.

AN English clergyman named Ramus has invented and submitted to the British Admiralty a "rocket float," which weighs fifty tons, and pushes itself along the water at the rate of 275 miles an hour. On coming into collision with a vessel or other object, it makes a great explosion, destroying everything within its reach. Mr. Ramus is said to be peacefully disposed. His object in inventing such a machine is to make it so disagreeable to engage in maritime warfare that hostile navies will eventually have to be abolished.

THE Congregational ministers of Massachusetts have just held their annual meeting in Boston, very few of them being present. One of the chief subjects of discussion was the ecclesiastical standing of Adirondack Murray, who was named as preacher of the next annual sermon. There was considerable difference of opinion as to whether Mr. Murray was or was not enough of a Congregational minister to be honored with such an appointment. He is not exactly like other people, nor is his church exactly like other churches. The trouble among the Congregational churches is that nobody seems competent to decide as to what orthodox Congregationalism is.

ABOUT a year ago crowds of people flocked to St. Palais, France, where a little boy named Jean Lasmereaux said he had seen the Virgin, who, among other things, told him to swallow some pebbles in a stream, the healing power of which was announced. Many sick persons bathed in and drank of the waters and were miraculously cured. The boy has since admitted that he never saw the Virgin at all, but was indulging in a joke when he pretended to have conversed with her. This promising youth, who deceived generals, prefects and at least 100,000 devout persons, and is only eight years old, has been sent to prison. It is very fortunate for the credulous believers in the remarkable virtues of the curative water that they were so miraculously cured by it before it was discovered that the whole thing was a hoax.

THE walls of Russian churches are almost entirely covered with pictures of the Virgin and child, of saints, and also of the Creator, who is represented as an aged man with long white hair and beard, having the triangle, or symbol of the godhead, either above his head or in his hand. Sometimes he sits on clouds, with his foot placed upon the globe, and in this seems merely a copy of Jupiter or Thor. The halos upon the brows of the saints are usually of silver gilt, but very often of pure gold set with precious stones and pearls. The dresses are of gold or silver gilt, also studded with jewels. They are brilliantly lighted by the numerous little lamps suspended before them, and by the enormous candles, in the silver sconces, near the shrines and altars. The robes of the priests are also splendid, and the general magnificence serves a good purpose in attracting the masses to a frequent attendance. This is all little better than the cruder fetishism and idolatries.

"INFIDELITY INCREASING."—Under this caption the following paragraph appears in the San Francisco Chronicle of the 6th ult.: "Rev. Mr. Roberts, who has been employed by the American Tract Society as a colporteur in Oregon during the past year, writes to the Messenger that infidelity in that section is 'greatly on the increase'—that labor and recreations on Sunday are 'very general,' and that 'in very many instances there is no desire to read religious works.' He further states that the feeling against religion in the public schools is so strong that in some places whenever the name of God, Jesus Christ, or religion is found in the school books, they are blotted out, and there was so much of the infidel element in several places he visited that the people 'had let their Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings go down,' and even where stated preaching is enjoyed, 'one infidel lecture, one Spiritualistic camp-meeting will destroy about all the moral effect of ordinary preaching for a whole year.' Such preaching must be very ordinary. The statement about the obliteration of names is doubtless overdrawn. There may have been one instance of the kind, but not many."

THE PALE FACE OF SUPERSTITION.—In his last Sunday's discourse in the Masonic Temple, O. B. Frothingham made the following most sensible remarks: The members of the Roman Catholic Church all over the world celebrate to-day the fiftieth anniversary of the elevation of Pope Pius IX. to the episcopacy as Bishop of Spoleto. The Pope has issued a special proclamation promising plenary indulgence and forgiveness of their sins to all who in humbleness of heart do partake of the sacrament. The Jesuit Fathers would make it appear that there is nothing at all harmful or wrong in this. But the injury is great to humble, ignorant Catholics who believe that out of the celestial treasury, which is at the Pope's command, they shall be paid for their works done in the Church—all their sins wiped away and a new account commenced with Heaven. The conditions upon which the faithful are to receive these eternal benefits are allegiance and obedience to the Catholic Church. This Church arrogates to herself the power of conducting men safely through this vale of sin and lodging them at last in heaven. The Pope, as the Vicar of Christ, is supposed to possess—of course under Divine guidance—the power to allot to all members of his fold that amount of heavenly grace for which each one is fitted. This sort of belief is the heart of superstition, as understood from its Greek and Latin origin—superstare—to stand above; some one standing supreme above our heads. Superstition is the recognition of the powers that stand above, and the belief that the incantations and machinations of those who stand above are partaken of by us who stand below. Sometimes the power revered is a church, an altar, a priest, a prediction, a belief, a book, the flight of a bird, or the entrails of a beast. Sometimes it consists of necromancy, waiting upon the dead, as Saul did when he went to the Witch of Endor to call up the shade of Samuel, and as Macbeth did when he consulted the witches on the heath in order to learn his fate in battle. It is a mistake to say that the days of superstition are among the past and an error to believe that it belongs to the Asiatic more than to the European nations—to the South more than to the North. Here, in this great city of New York, the metropolis of a so-called civilized and free country, it is to be found as rampant, wild, frantic, grotesque, and absurd as it could be found anywhere in former days or places. The Roman Catholic Church teaches to-day precisely the same superstitions, severe rules and rites that it did 1,500 years ago. In Paris a little book called "The Holy Crusade" has lately been published. It has gone through sixty editions, and is approved by the bishops and priests as being a work which gives the best directions for the battle of life. What are its arguments? None. The Church never argues. It gives an amulet for a reason, a scapular for a proof, and refers you to the altar as undoubted evidence for all its dogmas. It says your military decoration is the medal struck in honor of the immaculate conception; the artillery to be used, the fervent voice and upturned eye in prayer. An amulet, a scapular, a cord, a bit of wood—these are the weapons which the Roman Church at this very day employs to combat modern philosophy and the logic of potent facts. This is the quintessence of a dangerous because degrading superstition. The Protestants rightly charge the Roman Catholics with superstition, but those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. Is there no superstition about the Protestant's exaggerated belief in the Bible; the sacred holiness of the Sabbath; their fury of prayer and the idea that by its efficacy blessings can be reached which are not otherwise attainable? Protestants are careful to urge that those who remain away from the communion table are in danger and darkness, and the priest says, "Eat of this bread and drink of this cup, which are the body and blood of Christ, that your souls may be saved from everlasting death in the next world." These are the teachings of superstition; say, and the question is, Can the Christian idea inculcate aught else but superstition? Hear Moody and Sankey; attend any church in New York and you will see that all, including the Universalists, believe in the worship of the Christ—who is unseen by the eye, unfelt by the senses, but still there present, somehow, yet unapproachable. Superstition will not pass away till this habit of applying for relief to some supposed power outside ourselves, perhaps latent in ourselves, shall have passed and disappeared. The method to combat it which was employed by Voltaire, Diderot, Thomas Paine, and in the French Cyclopaedia, of denouncing it, is not the right way to conquer superstition. An attack in front by this means only makes men who are about to abandon the fort run back into it and defend their cherished error with more zeal than ever. Superstition, in the bosoms of such admirable men as Dr. Samuel Johnson, Sir Thomas Moore, and other great and good characters, is a misfortune to the human race. Here the speaker told the historical anecdote of Pompey's succeeding in capturing the citadel of Jerusalem, after all other means had failed, by attacking it on Sunday, at a time when the Jews would not fight, and when they superstitiously expected the Lord God of Hosts to work out their salvation as he is said to have done at Jericho with an army of angels. He alluded to the species of superstition found in the celebrated Oliver Cromwell, who said to his troops when crossing a water to attack the King's army, "Put your trust in Providence, but take care the water does not touch your powder." That saying rang the death note of superstition. It was then argued that a general raising of the intellectual temperature all over the land, by means of education, would thaw out superstition, as snow yields to the gentle influences of a spring sun.

Events of the Week.

HEAVY fires are raging in the forests of Nova Scotia.

GEN. GRANT is meeting with very complimentary receptions in London.

THE grand lodge of Free and Accepted Masons has been in session here this week.

JOEL WILSON, a farmer near Middletown, N. Y., was gored by a mad bull and fatally injured.

THE village of Orota, Michigan, was destroyed by fire. Caught by the burning forests?

THE first entire strawberry train of the season came to the city on Tuesday. It was composed of seven cars.

THE Shoshone Indians are said to be starving in Wyoming in consequence of the non-arrival of stores from the government.

It is estimated that not less than 1,000 persons have perished by earthquakes and tidal waves in Peru, Bolivia, and Chili within a few weeks.

FOREST fires are raging furiously among the pine woods in the northern part of Michigan. Two small towns have been burned, and hundreds of people forced to flee for their lives.

THE seventeen-year locusts have put in a general appearance in various parts of New Jersey. They cover trees and grass in many places, but as yet they appear to be harmless.

A WHIRLWIND passed over the northern end of Monroe county, Pa., which did considerable damage to property, numerous houses and barns were prostrated. Two men and a girl were killed.

RAPID TRANSIT IN THE CITY.—A meeting, largely composed of leading merchants and citizens, was held at Chickering Hall on the evening of the 6th. Strong resolutions warmly favoring rapid and cheap transit were passed.

"AUNT SALLY," a blooming bride of of eighty-five summers, took her fourth husband at Riverhead, N. Y. We will not wish the pair a large family of children, but that they may have a long life of happiness.

THE "Universal Peace Society" held its annual convention in this city the present week. Four antiquated females and three old men were in attendance. Can it be possible, after this demonstration, that the Russians and Turks will continue to butcher each other?

A TOWN DESTROYED.—A terrible tornado passed over Mount Carmel, Ill., a thriving town of 3,000 inhabitants, on the afternoon of the 4th, which ruined the young city. Twenty-five persons were killed and many wounded. Among the buildings blown down were the court-house, two school-houses, three churches, twenty business houses, and one hundred and fifty residences. The damage to property is estimated at from $300,000 to $500,000. Men, women and children were blown in every direction for hundreds of feet. A boy on his way home from school was taken up and carried half a mile and dropped without serious injury. He says he passed over a church steeple which was going in the opposite direction. Seventy families thus in a few seconds were rendered homeless. A fire succeeded the storm, which also did much damage. The same storm did considerable injury at other places in the vicinity.

THE Eastern war drags a little. Diplomacy may have something to do with it. Russia has probably been inquired of by the other powers as to how far she intends to press the conquest. She replies that she does not want to increase her territory in Europe, but only desires autonomy for Bulgaria, and the independence of Roumania and Servia. She also demands a cession of Armenia from Bayazid to the coast, but not including Erzeroum. 150,000 Russians are massed on the Danube, but have not yet effected a passage. The river is reported higher than before for thirty years. The Turkish gunboats have seriously embarrassed the Russians in constructing a pontoon bridge, and compelled them to cease operations. In a minor battle near Malat, lasting several hours, the Turks were defeated with a loss of 500 men. The great German general, Von Moltke is reported as considering that the Russians are steadily gaining in strength and position, and that they must ultimately bring the Turks to their terms.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

As soon as the gods became anthropomorphic, they interested themselves in the affairs of men. Their aid could be procured by prayer, but not with certainty. The most exalted hero might innocently provoke their implacable anger. They were offended when mortals forgot, in the intoxication of success, their own weakness, and claimed equality with themselves. But uninterrupted success, even meekly borne, was odious. "I know the invidiousness of fortune; your extraordinary prosperity excites my apprehensions," said Amasis, King of Egypt, to Polycrates, whose friendship he therefore renounced. Minor afflictions were courted by the prosperous as satisfying the gods, and thus averting greater calamities. The deities were always pleased with rites and ceremonies performed for their own especial benefit, and these were so important that even their involuntary omission received terrible retribution. Natural law and the fixed order of events have no place in this system: the gods act arbitrarily. Theology explains everything after the manner of the Mohammedan, who says earthquakes are due to the cow throwing the world from one horn to the other; or the Mucpas, who say the world-supporting god wearies, and changes his burden from one shoulder to the other. In the progressive growth of ideas, a unitizing power is found in a chief god, who reflects the highest ideal of the worshiper. The chief god is absolute and perfect, yet his omnipotence and perfection are limited by finite conceptions. Zeus has his weakness, and Jehovah is a narrow despot. The way is slowly prepared for Monotheism by the dependency of the lesser gods on one all-powerful chief. The amenability of even this god to law—the shadowing forth of what is now absolute Science—is expressed in a sentence of Herodotus: "It is impossible even for God to escape Fate." This state of ignorance and childishness was the paradise of the priesthood; for Catholicism truly says: "Ignorance is the mother of devotion." The medicine-man advanced with swift strides to supremacy in the State; he unscrupulously grasped power in any and every form and exerted it in a remorseless manner. The intellectual activity of Greece escaped in the exuberance of its youthful vigor the servile obedience to the priestly caste, but on other nations it has been the veritable Old Man of the Sea, clutching and holding fast. Their history is written in blood—a history of the most atrocious crimes and terrible misery the world can ever produce. No outrage on Nature, no corruption of the human mind, has been sufficiently appalling to satisfy the demands of priestly theology.

By pretending to the occult knowledge of astrology and divination, they seemed to the credulous masses to hold the keys of fate in their hands. They monopolized learning, and the most superficial knowledge of physical science was of invaluable service to them in an age of ignorant credulity. Accurate observations of the weather, enabling its changes to be predicted, the adroit management of poisons in an age when their symptoms were not understood, have made the reputation of many a prophet. The priesthood has generally surrounded itself with the awful mysteries of self-sacrifice, renouncing the world, dwelling in cells in their temples little better than dungeons, observing series of fasts, vigils, penance, ablutions, flagellations, and tortures, often becoming more fanatical than those they led.

Being the only learned class they have always sought—and generally with success—to seize all the means of education. Understanding the plasticity of the young mind and the ineradicability of ideas once firmly fixed, they have craftily moulded the minds of youth to their wills, and secured from the matured man abject and unquestioning reverence for their religion. They have, on the other hand, served a purpose for good. They have nourished the arts and sciences so far as comported with their advantage; they were for continuous ages the only educated class. Levying tithes in the names of their gods, the priesthood becomes free from want, and their whole attention directed to study and contemplation. They wield their subtle influence over the ruling classes, and form the power behind the throne. The will of the gods, expressed through the priestly oracle, is of greater potency than the united voices of the people. Their "Thus saith the Lord" becomes the watchword of unspeakable crimes and tyranny. They have been regarded as necessary to the progress of the race most falsely, for the race has advanced in antagonism to its spiritual rulers; they have been a dead lock on the wheels. Whenever and wherever they have been in the ascendancy, the nation thus controlled has sunk in decay, and, prematurely old, become the vassal of stronger powers. Egypt furnishes an extreme example, attaining great perfection in that knowledge encouraged by the priesthood, but becoming stagnant and effete. Hindoostan is another, showing the lethargy induced by theocratic rule. Rome was not repressed by its influence; and Greece, freest of all ancient nations, attained the highest civilization. The priesthood is necessary, as it is necessary for early man to be a cannibal; but it cannot from this be argued that the latter is necessary to progress. Cannibalism in some instances has almost destroyed savage peoples, and, pressed into the service of the gods, it has produced—as in Mexico—deplorable results, blasting the nascent civilization there springing up. While those nations over which the priesthood has wielded the most undisputed power have fallen into the lethargy of death, in exact ratio as others have escaped such influence has been the nobility of their civilization. Greece, most emancipated from theocratic rule, shines like a star amidst the darkness of ancient night. Her band of freethinkers bore aloft the ægis of intellectual life and handed it down to the present through the flood of Roman conquest and theocratic barbarism of the Middle Ages. In her free atmosphere, where the ceremonials of worship were celebrated by the father for his household, or the prince for his people, a class of men arose—the philosophers—impossible in a nation governed by a theocracy, who, free from all authority, pursued the studies of art, literature, and science, and blessed all succeeding ages of the world.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. V.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: Upon the principle that "scattering shot kills the most game," your last letter should have brought down a bag-full, for your gun scattered widely.

You think me incorrect in the assertion that England had no deadlier foe to American freedom than John Wesley. If you will consult the Life and Times of John Wesley, A. M., by Rev. L. Tyerman, vol. iii, pp. 185-195, London edition, you will find that I had sufficient grounds for making the assertion. You will see that while the Colonists were submissive to the rule of Great Britain, and were willing to abide by laws the enactment of which they had no hand in, and were willing to be taxed to sustain them, Wesley was a friend to the Colonists. But when they presumed to resist the principle of taxation without representation, none were more zealous in opposing their movement than the great apostle of Methodism. He early took ground against their efforts in opposition to being taxed without their consent. He preached, in 1775, powerful sermons against the resistance the Colonists were making. The Rev. Tyerman thus writes: "Both England and America were terribly excited; but space prevents our entering into details. Suffice it to say that the alleged grievance of the American Colonists was their being taxed without their consent by the English Parliament. Dr. Johnson was known to be a great hater as well as a great genius. 'Sir,' said he, concerning the miscellaneous and mongrel Colonists across the Atlantic, 'Sir, they are a race of convicts and ought to be thankful for anything we allow them short of hanging!' No wonder that the English government, already at their wits' end, applied to Johnson to assist them with his powerful pen. He did so by the publication, in 1775, of his famous pamphlet, 'Taxation no Tyranny, an answer to the Resolutions of the American Congress.' No sooner was it issued than, with or without leave, Wesley abridged it, and, without the least reference to its origin, published it as his own, in a quarto sheet of four pages, with the title, 'A calm Address to Our American Colonists, by the Rev. John Wesley, A. M. Price one penny.'"

Thus we have the best of evidence that Wesley endorsed and fathered the bitter arguments and invectives against the Colonists of the man who said: "They are a race of convicts, and ought to be thankful for anything we allow them short of hanging!" His little abridgment of Johnson, at one penny, of course had a wide circulation. Wesley had then arrived at the age of seventy-two, and, through his continuous preaching and writing, wielded a great influence. There were few men in England who were more conspicuous or had more influence, so that what he published against the American cause was quite as effective as the labors of any man in England.

There was a warm friendship between Johnson and Wesley, and the former was evidently pleased that the latter had so emphatically endorsed what he had written against the Colonists. In a letter to Wesley, Feb. 6, 1776, Johnson wrote: "I have thanks to return for the addition of your important suffrage to my argument on the American question. To have gained such a mind as yours may justly confirm me in my opinion." Wesley's course was regretted by the warm friends of the Colonists, and many opposed the position he occupied, and several pamphlets were published mercilessly combatting him. For further confirmation on this point I will refer you to the British and American Cyclopedias. I will not take room for further quotations, having, I think, produced sufficient proof to show you that at the very time that Thomas Paine, the Infidel, was using his entire efforts to rouse the Colonists to the importance of resisting the oppressions of the British Government, John Wesley, the Christian par excellence, was using his great ability and influence to aid their oppressors.

You seem not altogether pleased with my showing of Jefferson's Christianity or his Infidelity, whichever it may be regarded. I am sorry for this, as I wish to have his case clearly understood. I showed that he advised his nephew and ward to "fix reason firmly on her throne," to "question boldly the existence of God," to read the Bible as he would Livy or Tacitus, to believe nothing in it without authority more than other books. He cast discredit upon such statements in the Bible as disagree with the laws of nature, like Joshua's causing the sun and moon to stand still, Jesus being born of a virgin, etc. I showed that the leading Presbyterian paper of the country, Sidney E. Morse, editor, declared Jefferson unfriendly to orthodox religion, a disbeliever in Divine Revelation, and a "scoffer of the very lowest class," a "Materialist and a Humanitarian of the lowest kind." I quoted Jefferson's own letters in which he characterized the Trinity as a hocus-pocus phantasm of a God, like another Cerberus, with one body and three heads; that he wrote to Adams, "The day will come when the mystical generation of Jesus, by the Supreme Being as his father, will be classed with the generation of Minerva in the brain of Jupiter." I showed that he spoke freely of the stupidity of some of the Evangelists and early disciples, and of the roguery of others; that he said, "Of this band of dupes and impostors Paul was the great Coryphæus and first corrupter of the doctrines of Jesus;" that he pronounced himself a "Materialist." I showed that he denounced the clergy of Europe and America, and pronounced them an injury to the people; that he spoke very disparagingly of revivals, prayer-meetings, etc.; that he approved of much of D'Holbach's

Atheistical writings; that he wrote to Col. Pickering about "the incomprehensible jargon of the Trinitarian arithmetic, that three are one and one is three."

I gave you much more that he said and wrote, and still you are not satisfied—still you insist that he was a Christian; and that on one occasion he called himself one. If he did so I think it must have been in a very Pickwickian sense, for few men have more strongly expressed themselves as unbelievers in the divinity of the Bible and the Christian religion.

You allude to my mention of the fact of Franklin stating in his autobiography that he "became a thorough Deist," and wish to counteract the effect of it because the time he alluded to was when he was young, but you failed to show where he stated that he had ceased to be a Deist. He was somewhat offended when Whitefield spoke as though there was little difference between an Atheist and a Deist; Franklin had a distinct idea of a difference. He denied being an Atheist but never denied being a Deist. You will remember that Dr. Priestley, who knew Franklin intimately, regretted that he was a Deist. When Franklin had arrived at the great age of eighty-five he acknowledged that he still entertained doubts of the divinity of Jesus. I wish you would show where he ever gave any acknowledgment that he believed that Jesus was the son of God or was God himself.

As to Washington, I showed by Jefferson and Gouverneur Morris that he was an unbeliever in the Christian religion, that he never wrote or spoke a word in a public or private capacity that committed himself to it, and I showed by the Rev. Mr. Abercrombie that the General was a Deist. I showed Aaron Burr to be of the same belief, that even at the hour of death he could not be induced to admit that he believed in the divinity of Jesus.

The same may be said of John Adams. Although he was envious of Paine, and said unkind and untrue things of him, he did not accept the leading Christian dogma, and in this respect sympathized closely with Jefferson.

You do not quote me correctly when you say I promised to show "James Madison was an Infidel." I only said I would probably have more to say of him. He is not a central figure, and I have given but little attention to him. I think information is rather meagre touching his religious views. His biographers have been rather non-committal upon the subject. In the "American Cyclopaedia" the statement is made that in early life "his attention was particularly directed to the evidences of the Christian religion, but no account is given of his having embraced it at any time of his life. Jefferson thus wrote respecting Madison: "From three and thirty years' trial I can say conscientiously that I do not know in the world a man of purer integrity, more dispassionate, disinterested and devoted to pure republicanism, nor could I in the whole scope of America and Europe point out an abler head." But in this not a word about his "standing up for Jesus." Jefferson and Madison were particular friends, and entertained many views and opinions in common. If Madison was a Christian, he was in all probability a Christian of the Jefferson school. The phrase you quote from the eulogy of J. Q. Adams about his being a man and a Christian, amounts to very little. In one sense every man in the United States may be called a "Christian," as this is a boasted Christian land.

Of Gouverneur Morris, the data respecting his religious views are meagre. We know this much, that he and Jefferson were intimate and cordial friends. Jefferson thus wrote of Morris in connection with Washington: "I know that Gouverneur Morris who claimed to be in his (Washington's) secrets, and believed himself to be so, has often told me that Washington believed no more in that system (Christianity) than he himself did." This one quotation is sufficient to settle the question so far as Morris' views are concerned. Had he been a Christian, he would hardly have repeatedly told Jefferson that Washington did not believe in the Christian religion. If, also, he thought Washington an unbeliever, and he wished to show the fact, he would hardly have compared Washington to himself unless he was perfectly willing to have it understood that he was also an unbeliever. If he was a Christian at all, he was of the same type with Jefferson. After he is dead and buried it is very easy to set up the claim that he was a Christian, but in this case the claim greatly needs confirmation.

You still adhere to the idea of Paine's "Infamy," and say you meant that the "period of his infamy began when he became infamous." As he never became infamous, the time when is very indefinite. When he wrote the "Age of Reason" he was far from infamous. That effort was glorious; it is so regarded now, and will be for centuries to come. It is a little singular after admitting that "Paine was a man of talent," that "his assistance in the cause of independence was very great; that he had good traits, that he was honest, not uncharitable, that he abstained from profanity, that he opposed slavery, etc., that you should still insist that he was infamous. Is that a Christian spirit? Is it infamous to doubt?

You are mistaken about my speaking contemptuously of Madame Roland. Nothing could be farther from me. It is not contemptuous to regard her or to speak of her as a woman. To show Paine to not have been a statesman, you quoted this lady. Thinking, as a general thing, women are not so well informed as to what pertains to statesmanship as men, I thought your case would have been stronger had you quoted some masculine authority on that head.

You allude to the formation of the Constitution of our country, and make the singular assertion that "it was not the work of Infidels, but was the achievement of believers in the Holy Scriptures." Here you are wrong, at least partially so. It was a mixed convention of believers and unbelievers that framed our Constitution. If a large share of them were Christians, they were Jeffersonian Christians, who believed very little, and had but little reverence for antique superstitions. In proof of this, it is only necessary to adduce the fact that neither God, Jesus Christ, nor the Bible are recognized nor mentioned, in that remarkable instrument. If they were strong believers in the trio, and deemed their recognition of any special importance, they were certainly very remiss in their duty in not inserting them and founding the government upon them. I think were a convention of leading Christians held to-day to frame another Constitution for our country, and it were composed of the highest Reverends in the land, including Bro. Talmage, Bro. Fulton, Bro. Tyng, Bro. Deems, Bro. Crosby, Bro. Moody and yourself, that "God," his "Son Jesus Christ," and the "Holy Scriptures" would most unmistakably appear in the instrument, and every man who presumed to doubt them would have but few rights and prerogatives. What a world of uneasiness would have been saved to millions of the pious Christians of to-day had the framers of the Constitution recognized Jehovah, Jesus and the Bible. It would have spared them the great labor of getting up mammoth petitions, bearing hundreds of thousands of names, asking that the instrument be amended, and that the great trio be recognized.

It is hard to estimate with any accuracy how many times the framers of our glorious Constitution have been devoutly but secretly cursed for this unpardonable omission. They were not near equal to the framers of the Constitution of the Confederate States, for they recognized God, Jesus, and the Bible, in the true Christian spirit. But, nevertheless, it did not avail them. With all their veneration, all their reliance, all their prayers for success, their Constitution and their cause had to go by the board, while our Constitution, without a God or a son of a God or a Bible of any kind in it, the Constitution upon which is based the government which Washington solemnly declared "not in any sense founded on the Christian religion," was triumphant and is so still.

I think it is quite fair to conclude that the Christian element was not strong in the convention that framed our Constitution or there would have been some Christianity in it. Its God, its Savior, or its revealed law, would assuredly have been mentioned. I think that, under the circumstances, much boasting of their ultra Christianity is decidedly superfluous. Our Constitution, essentially Infidel as it is, ignoring alike God, Christ, and the Bible, is a fair illustration of how much Christianity and faith had to do with this country's achieving its independence or in framing its laws. Infidelity was certainly as conspicuous all the way through as was Christianity.

You say: "It would be relevant to our subject to show that believers in the Bible have done much more than unbelievers to bring about the abolition of American slavery." Yes, it would be quite relevant, if it can be done truthfully. In view of the fact that neither Jehovah nor Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Joshua, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Jesus, Peter, Paul, the popes, bishops, and leading saints of the Christian Church, down to fifty years ago, ever took it upon themselves to say a word against the principle of slavery, it is quite cool and refreshing, this hot weather, to hear you declare that the credit of the anti-slavery movement belongs exclusively to believers in the Bible.

You say, "Slavery is older than the Bible, therefore the Scriptures did not create nor establish that institution." But is slavery older than God? If he was opposed to its origin and continuance and yet it existed for thousands of years, does it not argue either want of will or want of power on his part? If slavery was regarded as wrong by the founders and sustainers of Christianity, why were they not brave enough to denounce it boldly and clearly? "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you," etc., scarcely meets the case. It is general and vague; besides it was a sentiment abundantly taught by the Pagan sages, hundreds of years before he of Nazareth uttered it.

If the authors of the Bible were earnest and honest opponents of slavery, why did they let such injunctions as these form so conspicuous a part of the book: "A servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren," "Servants, obey your masters," "Obey them that have rule over you," "The powers that be are ordained of God," and much more in the same line? If they believed slavery was wrong, why did they not say so with force and directness? Ah, my friend, they were not anti-slavery men, and it is useless to undertake to show that they were. Who were the leaders and workers in the anti-slavery movement in this country—earnest workers while the cause was still unpopular—who fearlessly risked their lives in defense of the downtrodden? They were Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Stephen S. Foster, Abby Kelly, Theodore Parker, Henry C. Wright, Parker Pillsbury, Gerrit Smith, Wendell Phillips—Infidels every one! They were persistent opposers of slavery when their lives were endangered by that course, and it was not until the cause had become partially popular and safe that the Christian Church embraced it. It was with this as with most other reforms, the Church followed, but did not lead. On the contrary, the Church for many decades was a zealous defender of slavery. Many a person was denied admittance into a church to make an anti-slavery speech. Leading Abolitionists were mobbed and grossly insulted by church-members. The white-cravated clergy would not be seen upon anti-slavery platforms nor in Abolitionist conventions. Half the Christians of the North were in favor of the institution, and nearly all in the South, so that about three fourths of the Christians of the United States were defending slavery while a great majority of the Infidels were opposing it.

The Churches North and South, or a portion of them, divided upon this subject. Your Church—the Presbyterian—if I remember rightly, did not divide, but tacitly supported slavery until the war of the rebellion broke out, and since by force of circumstances and the advance of Liberal ideas it has ceased to exist, they not only shout over its defeat but claim great credit for having killed it. How unjust it is after the Churches of the United States upheld slavery for two or three generations, while Infidels and unbelievers were earnestly fighting it, to now turn around and claim all the honor of its suppression and give the opposite side none. Thus it has been with the cause of temperance. For decades the Church opposed the cause of temperance and threw cold water and wet blankets on the struggling child as long as they could, and now they fain would make the world believe they are the parents of the grown child and have done in its favor all that has been done. This is not true. While many Christians have been and are now earnest friends of temperance, thousands and thousands for a long time retarded its progress so far as lay in their power.

The distinguished clergyman and author, Albert Barnes, uttered the simple truth when he solemnly declared that the greatest obstruction which the cause of temperance had to contend with was the apathy and unfriendliness of the American clergy.

The brilliant Rev. Joseph Cook, in a recent discourse in Boston, made very truthful statements touching the subject of anti-slavery in this country. He said: "If the Northern Church had done its duty the South would have had no hope of a divided North, and the war would not have been. Let not the Church grow proud over the fall of slavery; it was not her work. The Church could have refused to uphold secession in the South; it could have made slave-holding a bar to church-membership, as the Quakers did; it could have given direction to the reform movement by putting itself stalwartly on the right side. United action would have prevented apathy in the North and united action in the South, and would have made war impossible."

He complimented Theodore Parker highly for the faithful services he performed in the anti-slavery cause. He said: "Theodore Parker stood upon a high pulpit in Music Hall. But it was anti-slavery, and not anti-Christianity that made that pulpit as high as Strasburg steeple. It was high because other pulpits were low. Parker was with God in the anti-slavery struggle, but the Church was not where it ought to have been."

The reverend gentleman is quite correct. Parker was right and the Church was wrong—not where it ought to have been. Had the Church in this country acted right and in concert, slavery would have been ended fifty years ago and the terrible war of slavery-rebellion, with its cost of one million lives of the promising young men of the North and the South, and five hundred millions of treasure might have been saved. The Church acted the dastardly part in the foul business of slavery. It worked for generations to sustain and uphold it, and sadly failed to come up to the high instincts of human nature. It was not the Church that overthrew slavery; it was the spirit of humanity which pervaded the minds and hearts of the people.

You gratuitously make uncomplimentary allusions to Robert G. Ingersoll, and refer to the time when he coöperated with the pro-slavery party. I cannot give the precise date when he left that party, but perhaps it was about the time he turned his back upon Christianity and the Church. You are pleased to speak of his "prating about the liberty of man, woman and child." Yes, he prates, and to some effect, too. There is hardly another man in the United States doing so much to-day toward forming public opinion, and in the interests of humanity and truth, as is Col. Ingersoll. O, that there were hundreds more that could prate like him! If the sixty thousand clergymen of this country could prate as he does, it would amount to vastly more than the idle and childish prating about gods and devils and hells which they now give us.

I was not aware that the religious views of Abraham Lincoln were to form a part of this discussion, but I will endeavor to follow where you lead. Let us see whether he was a Christian or an Infidel. The position he occupied, and the necessity which forced him to strike the fetters from the limbs of the slaves, have made him a very distinguished character in our country's history, and the Church must needs claim him as her own, so she can monopolize the entire credit of overthrowing slavery. Lincoln had clear and settled views upon theological subjects, which he maintained through life, but it must be admitted that, after he became exclusively a politician and realized now much his success depended upon the support of the masses, a large share of whom were at least professed Christians, he did not at all times make his secret views known; that in his public speeches he used some of the cant phrases which he well knew would fall pleasantly upon the ears of the superstitious masses. It must be conceded also, that he did occasionally drop a remark that might be construed to mean that he had some faith in the Christian religion, and that from a spirit of playfulness, or of enquiry, he appeared at times to be investigating the subject of Christianity, but that Lincoln was all his life an out-and-out Infidel is one of the clearest propositions that can be made; and had I the space I could give you many pages, of the size of this, of certificates, letters, and statements of the men who knew him intimately, and all confirming the fact of his unbelief.

Lincoln was eminently a kind-hearted, humane person, but he became an Infidel to Christian theology when a mere youth. He never believed in the divinity of the Bible, nor that Jesus Christ was God or the begotten Son of God. By referring to pages 486 and 487 of Lamon's Life of Lincoln you will read as follows: "Mr. Lincoln was never a member of any church, nor did he believe in the divinity of Christ, or the inspiration of the Scriptures in the sense understood by evangelical Christians. His theological opinions were substantially those expounded by Theodore Parker. Overwhelming testimony out of many mouths, and none stronger than that out of his own, places these facts beyond controversy. When a boy he showed no sign of that piety which his many biographers ascribe to his manhood. . . . When he went to church at all, he went to mock, and came away to mimic. Indeed, it is more than probable that the sort of 'religion' which prevailed among the associates of his boyhood impressed him with a very poor opinion of the value of the article. On the whole, he thought, perhaps, a person had better be without it. When he removed to New Salem he consorted with Free-thinkers; joined with them in deriding the gospel history of Jesus; read Volney and Paine, and then wrote a deliberate and labored essay wherein he reached conclusions similar to theirs. The essay was burnt (by his friend, Mr. Hill) but he never denied or regretted its composition. On the contrary, he made it the subject of free and frequent conversation with his friends at Springfield, and stated with much particularity and precision the origin, arguments, and object of the work."

James H. Matheny, of Springfield, Ill., who intimately knew Mr. Lincoln for over twenty-five years, in a letter to Wm. H. Herndon, uses this language: "I knew Mr. Lincoln as early as 1834-7; know he was an Infidel. He and W. D. Herndon used to talk infidelity in the Clerk's Office in this city, about the years 1837-40. Lincoln attacked the Bible and the New Testament on two grounds; first, from the inherent or apparent contradictions under its lids; second, from the grounds of reason. Sometimes he ridiculed the Bible and the New Testament; sometimes he seemed to scoff at it, though I shall not use that word in its full and literal sense. I never heard that Mr. Lincoln changed his views, though his personal and political friend from 1834 to 1860. Sometimes Lincoln bordered on Atheism. He went far that way and often shocked me. . . . Lincoln would come into the Clerk's Office, and would bring the Bible with him; would read a chapter; argue against it. . . . Lincoln often, if not wholly, was an Atheist; at least, bordered on it. He was enthusiastic in his infidelity. As he grew older he grew more discreet; didn't talk so much before strangers about his religion; but to friends, close and bosom ones, he was always open and avowed, fair and honest; but to strangers he held them off from policy. . . . Mr. Lincoln did tell me that he did write a little book on infidelity. This statement I have avoided heretofore; but as you strongly insist upon it, I give it to you as I got it from Lincoln's mouth" (Lamon's Life of Lincoln, pp. 487 and 488).

Mr. Lamon gives numerous other letters of the same tenor from the old friends and acquaintances of Lincoln, bearing testimony to his infidelity. I would be glad to lay them before you and my readers, but space will not permit their introduction here. I will give in addition a few passages from a letter of the Hon. John T. Stuart, of Springfield, Ill.: "I knew Mr. Lincoln when he first came here, and for years afterwards. He was an avowed and open Infidel; sometimes bordered on Atheism. Lincoln went further against Christian beliefs, doctrines and principles than any man I ever heard. . . . He always denied that Jesus was the Christ of God; denied that Jesus was the Son of God, as understood and maintained by the Christian Church. The Rev. Dr. Smith, who wrote a letter, tried to convert Lincoln from infidelity so late as 1858, and couldn't do it!" Also the following from Wm. H. Herndon Esq., who probably knew Mr. Lincoln as intimately as did any man in America: "As to Mr. Lincoln's religious views, he was, in short, an Infidel. . . . A Theist. He did not believe that Jesus Christ was God; was a fatalist; denied the freedom of the will. Mr. Lincoln told me a thousand times that he did not believe the Bible was the revelation of God, as the Christian world contends. The points that Mr. Lincoln tried to demonstrate (in his book) were: "First, that the Bible was not God's revelation; second, that Jesus was not the Son of God. I assert this on my own knowledge, and on my veracity." Mr. Lamon gives more than twenty pages of similar matter, but I must quote no more. Now, in the face of all this, it is rather up-hill work to make a pious Christian of Lincoln.

If you can make a good Christian of a man who totally denies the divinity of Christ, the inspiration of the Bible, and who borders upon Atheism, why Ingersoll, Underwood and myself might as well be counted in at once. We have not been more pronounced in our infidelity, either by speaking or writing, than was Abraham Lincoln. There is no use in trying to evade the testimony of honorable men who knew him for a life-time, and quote against their evidence what some priest or interested sectarian biographer might imagine or wish as to Lincoln's views.

As to Mr. Colfax, he did say in his lecture delivered in Brooklyn, March 25th, 1876, that Lincoln was not a believer in Christianity. I got it from a party who heard the lecture. It was so reported also in some of the daily papers, and to make the thing doubly sure, a friend of mine writing to a party in South Bend, Ind., the home of Colfax, asked him to call upon Colfax and enquire of him in regard to Lincoln's belief. He did so, and Colfax confirmed what he had said in his lecture. But as Colfax knows no more about Lincoln's religious opinions than hundreds of others, and inasmuch as the veracity of this "Christian statesman" on some other important matters has been seriously questioned, pertaining to questionable operations in which he was implicated, I will not insist upon his testimony being taken in this case.

Now, as we are about taking leave of this branch of our discussion let us take a brief review of the ground gone over and the results achieved. I claim, in the first place, to have shown that the original pure article of Christianity as taught by its founders does not recognize nor admit the right of its devotees to fight for national or personal liberty, and that those who do so violate the injunctions imperatively given against fighting under any circumstances, and to that extent, are Infidels; hence the Americans were, in addition to being rebels, Infidels also.

I claim to have shown that the persons who did most towards arousing the Colonists to the fighting-point, in conducting and fighting the battles of the Revolution, and in organizing the form of government we have since lived under, were Infidels. Those men were Franklin, Washington, Paine, Jefferson, Allen, etc., etc.

I claim to have shown that our Constitution is an Infidel instrument, entirely ignoring God, Christ, and the Bible.

I claim also to have shown that the warfare against American slavery was originated and continued for decades by leading Infidels, while the Church lent its power and influence in favor of the slaveholders; and finally,

I have shown that the man who, at one blow, struck off the fetters of four millions of slaves, was a staunch, persistent Infidel, Honest Abraham Lincoln.

I am, Dear Sir, very truly yours,

D. M. BENNETT.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 26.

Great Jehovah, let us, for the present, turn from the consideration of rites, ceremonies, sacraments, and sacrifices, and contemplate, for a time, thy own Revealed Word. We are told that the book called the Bible was written by thee, or that the individuals who penned it wrote by thy dictation.

If, then, thou didst perform the job, or if thou didst direct it and it was accomplished according to thy dictation, as thou art a perfect being, as in thee there is no falsehood nor inconsistency, shall we not find the Word which emanated from thee perfect in every particular?

May we ask thee whether thou didst absolutely write the book thyself or whether thou employedst the several writers who penned it to do it for thee?

If the several writers at different times wrote the parts of which the Bible is composed, didst thou move their hands as a man would operate a machine, or didst thou put the matter thou wishedst them to communicate into their minds and leave them to express the same in language of their own choosing?

If the latter was the mode in which thou didst the business, was there not great danger that sometimes the impression would be so weak that they would be under the necessity of supplying the defects from their own brains and minds, and that they would be at a loss to know whether it was thou or themselves who did the talking?

If thou didst intend the Bible for a revelation, was it not a revelation only to those to whom thou gavest the impression? Is it a revelation to those who take it upon trust at second-hand from the unknown parties who wrote it?

Is there any inherent proofs that the Bible was written by thy hand or by thy dictation? Is there anything in it beyond the capacity of a tolerably smart man? Have not thousands of men lived in the past capable of writing such a book?

Have not great numbers of books been written in the world by man containing quite as great an amount of ability, truth, and accuracy?

Is it claimed in one of the sixty-five books composing the Bible that the writers were acting for thee, or that thou didst dictate it to them?

If it is nowhere so stated in the whole book, have we sufficient grounds for believing that the Bible was written or dictated by thee?

In the absence, then, of any such assertion, even, who has the right to command us that we must accept it as thy word on pain of suffering the tortures of hell forever?

If it was stated in each part and by each writer that the work was directly from thy hand or from thy brain, would that make it so, and would we be compelled to believe it?

Hadst thou written the book, or employed others to write it for thee, wouldst thou not have done as much as to state the fact so that the world might have some way of knowing it?

Is not the very truth that nowhere in the entire volume is it claimed that the book is from thee almost proof positive that the writers themselves did not think it was from thee, and that the claim that it was was altogether an afterthought, long subsequent to the times when it was written?

Was not this claim of divine origin first made by an interested priesthood, and wholly without authority from thee?

Is not a large portion of the book made up of the accounts of the worldly experiences of the nation of Jews, their adventures, their journeys, their contentions, their wars, their marryings, their illicit and adulterous connections, and much of that kind of detail which thou wouldst be very unlikely to spend thy time in writing or dictating to others, and which any fourth-rate scribe or clerk would be fully competent to write if the events had actually occurred, and which a third-rate scribe or priest could invent if the incidents never did take place as narrated?

Dost thou not, as the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, have vastly too much to attend to, to spend thy time in writing down, or dictating for others to write down, all the trivial affairs of any nation, as when an old patriarch had connection with his wife, whether she conceived or not, and whether the result was a boy or a girl?

Hadst thou the leisure and the disposition to record the conduct of all the patriarchs and kings, how they went out to slay others of thy offspring and to state how many were made to bite the dust?

Didst thou find it convenient to make entries of the success thy people had in cattle-raising and in accumulating worldly property, and how many wives they severally had?

Even if thou tookest pleasure in that kind of literature, and even if it possessed some value in the age of the world in which it was written, is it of the slightest importance to us in this age, and cannot we find a greater amount of historical and scientific matter, immensely more valuable to us than those old legends and big stories?

Is it not quite probable that if thou hadst sat out to write a big book to present to the world that thy name and glory might be perpetuated among mankind, wouldst thou not have been likely to have had it contain matters that would have been of some practical value to the inhabitants of the earth—some scientific truths and discoveries that the world had before no knowledge of?

Couldst thou have done better, inasmuch as thou didst wish to be the author of a large book and to make a present of it to mankind, than to have filled it with useful facts and discoveries which men have been compelled since to find out by tedious study and diligent research?

Is it not a suspicious feature in the book that it was written greatly in the interest of a particular class—the priesthood—to the utter neglect of all scientific and practical truths?

Did not the writers of the book often exhibit the utmost ignorance of the simplest matters of fact now perfectly understood by little school-boys and girls ten years of age?

Did one of the writers of the Bible have the least knowledge of the rotundity of the earth, that every twenty-four hours it revolves on its own axis, and that every year it makes a journey round the sun, describing an orbit of one hundred and ninety millions of miles in diameter?

Did not the way they talked about the ends, the corners, and the foundations of the earth show positively that they knew nothing about its being round, swinging in space, and resting upon nothing?

Can it be that thou wast ignorant of these simple facts; that thou couldst not write it in thy book or couldst not convey the intelligence to those thou employedst to write for thee?

Had the writers of the Bible the least adequate idea of the size, number, and distances of the stars which so gloriously stud the vast vault of space?

Did they not regard them as mere glimmering points, placed in a firmament not far from the earth, and exclusively for the benefit and pleasure of the inhabitants of this small globe?

Did they not regard the earth as the centre of the Universe, and by far the greatest portion of it, while it is now known that it is but an infinitesimal part of the Universe, and that there are thousands and probably millions of blazing orbs larger than the sun, and larger even than the entire solar system combined?

Did not the writer of the first book in the Bible think that the sun is a small affair, gotten up expressly for the use of the earth, and was not brought into existence until the earth was old enough to produce all varieties of vegetation—trees, shrubs, plants, and grains, each perfecting its fruit and seed in a perfect manner?

Was he not ignorant of the great fact that without the light and heat of the sun not one stalk of corn nor one spear of grass could grow out of the earth?

Do not such blunders show the most palpable ignorance on the part of those thou didst employ to write thy book?

Is there any other conclusion to come to than that either thou didst not thyself know about the facts of the Universe which thou hadst created, or that the people who assumed to write a book for thee, and who have since been set up as men inspired by thyself to write for thee, were not employed by thee at all, and that they wrote at their own option, jotting down such truths and errors as they happened to be in possession of?

Were not Bibles or "Sacred Writings" somewhat common with many of the ancient nations?

Did not the Egyptians have their sacred writings? Did not the Hindoos have theirs, the Chaldeans theirs, the Persians theirs, the Phoenicians theirs, the Arabians theirs, the Grecians and Romans theirs, and in later times have not the Shakers and the Mormons had theirs?

Were not all these Bibles, and many more not mentioned, just about as divine and about as true as the one gotten up in the Jewish nation?

Didst thou not have as much to do with all of those Bibles as thou hadst with any particular one?

Is there not a similarity between them in point of ability, talent, and truthfulness?

Do they not all exhibit a vague, indefinite, mythical, oracular style of composition not found in modern works of science?

Is it not correct in us to look upon all those old Bibles as merely human productions, written in no case by the hand of any deity, and not dictated from the head of any deity whatever, possessing no value to the present inhabitants of the earth save as land-marks and finger-posts on the record-page of Time, indicating the progress which mankind has made from the low plains of primitive ignorance to the better-informed mental elevation now occupied?

Is it not about time that enlightened people should cease to worship and bow down to those old Bibles like they were idols or fetishes?

Is it not far better that mankind should explore the astronomical Universe, delve into the very bowels of the earth, become acquainted with the properties of all forms of matter, whether in concrete, solid, fluid, aerial, or etherial conditions, the chemical combinations of all substances, the character of all forms of life—to study these, and to understand the intricate laws of the Universe, of which we form a small part—than to be hugging to their breasts the musty, imperfect old Bibles of the past days of ignorance under the delusion that deity is in them more than in the vast Universe with all its combinations and forms of existence?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

Before this issue of our paper reaches our patrons THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION will be ready to send to subscribers. We will mail it at once, as soon as received from the binders, to those who have remitted the amount of seventy-five cents. Let us again urge every reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER to send for a copy of FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS. We wish to have the pleasure of sending a copy to every patron and to every reader.

B. F. Underwood's Return Home.

Friend B. F. UNDERWOOD made a call upon us on his return trip from the far West, via. Canada. He is in good health, though we fancied he seemed somewhat worn with his arduous labors. He proposes to give himself but a short rest this summer for recuperation. He is under engagements to go West again in July, and will then probably be steadily in the field for ten months. He is doing a great amount of good in disseminating the truths of science and reason in the lectures he is giving and the debates he is holding all over the country. Thousands have been greatly benefited by the efforts he is making in the cause of truth, and it is gratifying to know that his labors are being more and more appreciated. He has far more calls than he can possibly fill. Long may he live to speak the words of truth and to reveal the value of science to the millions.

HEREDITY. RESPONSIBILITY IN PARENTAGE. By Rev. S. H. Platt, A. M. New York: S. R. Wells & Co., Publishers, 737 Broadway. This is No 2 of a series of Science Tracts now being issued by the well-known publishers and phrenologists above named. It is a neat little pamphlet of 14 pages, and, though it is a sermon preached by an Episcopalian clergyman, might pass for a scientific statement of facts were it not for a few passages such as the following: "By the special indwelling and impact of the Holy Spirit upon the nerve-cell, noble aspirations and upward tendencies shall be projected as impressions upon the forming nerve-cells of the embryo being," etc. A scientific treatise is weakened by religious dilution, and theology should be "served up on a separate plate." The little work is worth reading. Price ten cents.

Our Florida Letter—No. 7.

LAKE-SIDE, May 28, 1877.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER:

"O magnet South! O glistening, perfumed South! Again in Florida I float on transparent lakes—I cross the hummock land, or through pleasant openings, or dense forests. I see the parrots in the woods—I see the paw-paw tree, and the blossoming tite."

And this is all the poet records of Florida. Some of us, unfortunately, see and feel things here that are not, perhaps, as attractive as parrots and paw-paw trees. It must be nice to be a poet, and soar so easily above the unpleasant things of life. Reading this poetical rhapsody on the "perfumed South" brought to mind an encounter I had in Fernandina last year. Arriving in the morning, I was obliged to wait until 6 P.M. for the train to Jacksonville. A party of us strolled up to the nearest hotel for dinner. On entering the reception-room, I noticed that the only occupant was an old lady, weighing some two hundred pounds, fantastically dressed, sitting before a smouldering wood-fire. After a glance, I became engaged in a lively chat with our party, and thought no more about the stranger until suddenly accosted thus:

"Be you going to settle in Floridy?"

"If I like it," I answered.

"Well, you won't like it, for I do say it's the meanest hole I ever got into. Me and my old man come down here a year ago, and now we've managed to get money enough to git back with, and we're agoing just as fast as the Lord will let us. Look at me! I'm nothing but a shadder to what I was when I come here. And I've scratched every bit of the original hide off my body. I wasn't sure the fleas would leave enough of me to carry North. Me and my old man want to die a natral death; we don't want to be eat up alive. And such a lonesome place—a body might jest as well be buried alive. And then they tell so much about the flowers here; but they aint of no account; there aint one mite of fragrance in any on 'em."

Our party was in an uproar. This was a damper. You will see at once a slight difference between a poetical and a common-sense view of life. With the poet it was paw-paw. With the fantastic old lady it was scratch, scratch. The old lady was in the main correct, as my subsequent experience has proven. There is no doubt she had lost a great deal of solid substance during her stay, though perhaps a strictly truthful person would object to the statement that she had become in the least shadowy. I have thought of her since the advent of fleas this year, and I am sure that though she may be hungry and cold and suffering, she will have the consolation of dying a "natural" death. I would call the attention of stout people to the fact that we gently but surely evaporate in Florida. There is no doubt the fleas had something to do with the old lady's decline, but other causes are at work here far more powerful. A friend was accosted the other day by another whom he had not met for a year, with, "Where's the rest of you?" The "rest" consisted of some forty pounds, "gone like a bubble that bursts in the sun," in one short year.

The emotional side of one's nature gets finely developed in flea time. I am not sure but this is a wise provision of nature, to keep us active in this climate. I stopped for a week, not long since, with some friends in a large town some few miles from us, and to illustrate how one's manners get polished, I will relate or at least picture a little scene that occurred during that time. Imagine an evening party of finely-dressed Northern people in animated conversation. Suddenly one of the party vanishes. No excuse, no apology, no sailing gracefully off as at another time. There is just a momentary commotion and the company becomes painfully aware that it is minus one. Airs and graces are omitted for a time, and existence becomes a naked fact. Just here I draw the curtain as she flees (fleas).

I have had very little experience in Southern States. For all I know to the contrary, every man, woman and child in the whole land may be dodging around in pursuit of these little pests. But as I have never seen a native display any activity in this way, I conclude that there is something peculiarly juicy and appetizing about us Northerners, and that we are receiving an undue amount of attention from these lively little fellows.

In my last, I said that education was in its infancy. Music was still-born here in Florida. If the spirits of the departed ever hover over us, you may be sure no Beethoven, Handel or Mozart ever, if by chance they find themselves in hearing of Florida sounds, remain long. I wish I could describe to you the vocal gymnastics of this benighted people. Did you ever hear a choir in one of our New England backwoods villages attempt the praise of Almighty God in such strains as torture the ears of ordinary men, and most certainly agonize a well-regulated God? Then if you have, I can give you a faint idea of church music here, when I tell you that such singing is heavenly melody compared to the sounds produced by a Florida choir. My very soul pants for one strain of real music. I think now I should not be fastidious; could be content with less than Theodore Thomas' orchestra; ay, could even sit calmly and delightedly and listen to a New York street organ grind out that most absurd tune, "Shoo Fly." You will conclude from this that the most important feature of religious service here is not, as in so many Northern churches, a $5,000 choir.

O! the degeneracy of this nineteenth century! How sacred things are turned to carnal uses! Imagine the "light fantastic toe" at a pic-nic here last week, tripping about to Moody and Sankey's hymns, "Hold the Fort" and "Pull for the Shore," played in double-quick time. It is my firm belief, Mr. Editor, so rapid are the advances of science, that you and I will yet dance

"Nearer, my God, to thee."

DI VERNON.

"The Dividing Line."

INFIDEL—He who expects to meet his liabilities at 100 per cent—work out his salvation, in justice and kindness to all.

CHRISTIAN—He who has his religion rubbed on upon the outside—expects to do ever so many naughty things, take the benefit of the insolvent act, and let Jesus foot the bill.

In pursuance of modern acceptance, how will that do for "dividing line."

The genuine Christian character commands our highest veneration. But names, like man's highest powers, are lamentably prostituted to undignified purposes.

PRENTISS.

For twelve centuries the best brains of the Christian religion did all in their power to deaden scientific thought. When men actually measured the earth, north, south, east, and west, and thus made further opposition ridiculous, then religion hung its head for a time. The next battle-field was the earth's position among the heavenly bodies. The old Ptolemaic theory, that the earth is the center of the Universe, was sustained by many Bible texts. Protestantism, no less than Catholicism, found much comfort in those texts; but science was too strong for them. The waters of science kept rising higher and higher until the textual dam gave way and the Christian theology was again engulfed. Would that it had been drowned! Copernicus next appeared as the champion of science. The leaders of the Protestant religion curse him as viciously as the rulers of the Church of Rome. Campanella seven times suffered torture for his scientific and religious heresies. Descartes was awed into silence by the fate of Galileo. Kepler was abused. Nearly every advancement in medical art has encountered religious opposition. To cure certain forms of disease was bidding defiance to the will of God. The war against geology was most bitter in Protestant countries. Geologists were called infidel impugn-ers of the sacred record—enemies of God. Geology was denounced as a dark art, prying into hidden mysteries, not a subject of lawful inquiry, an awful evasion of the testimony of revelation. This warfare is not ended. Science has, so far, won every battle. Judging the future by the past, religion will suffer irretrievable defeat and science be crowned with glorious victory. Science has ever proved herself the friend of the race. She is now engaged in problems of life the solution of which will light up every human face with joy.—W. F. Jamieson.

NATURE is an Eolian harp whose tones again are keys to higher strings in us.

How I Became a Freethinker.

I was born in the State of New York on the 21st day of March, 1800. My parents were Methodists long before I was born. My father's house was a preacher's home and a preaching house from my earliest remembrance; class-meetings, prayer-meetings, quarterly-meetings, and circuit-preaching are among my first recollections up to eighteen years of age. I have seen as many as fourteen preachers at our house at once; and at quarterly-meetings as many besides preachers as could lie on straw along one side of the room; and who generally had supper and breakfast, and often I was glad to get so much as a piece of johnny-cake the next day.

Under these influences I grew up to about seventeen, when I experienced religion and joined the church. In process of time I was licensed to preach, and was received into the Genesee Conference.

During the second year of my traveling, I sent to the Methodist book-rooms at New York for a box of books to sell on my circuit. Among these books was a pamphlet called "A Narrative of the Loss of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionaries from England." I sat down and read it through before stopping. The substance of it was this: At a session of the British Conference the President at the beginning announced that the Missionary Board had determined to send eight or ten missionaries to the West India Islands, and called for volunteers, saying that volunteers' names must be handed in by the next Thursday or Friday night, on which would be held the Anniversary of the Missionary Society. By that time some ten, I believe, had handed in their names. At the Anniversary powerful sermons and speeches were made, so effective that, if my memory is right, £10,000 were collected and subscribed for the missionary cause. After the speeches the volunteer missionaries were called forward; their experiences told, and they were examined on documents, and then ordained for the foreign work by imposition of the hands of the Presbytery; the whole service being solemn and interesting on account of the "manifestation of the Divine presence."

As soon as convenient, the outfit was prepared, a vessel chartered, and all went on board, and sailed for the West Indies. They arrived safe at an island from which to the one designed as headquarters the distance was about sixty miles, and they would need a pilot among those coral reefs. Obtaining a pilot, they set sail. They approached the island of their destination so near as to be able to see people walking on the beach.

Of a sudden a squall of wind took them and drove them on a reef; their vessel careened, the waves dashed over and filled the ship, driving all upon the inclined bow.

Taken so suddenly, they could secure neither clothing nor provisions; it was as much as they could do to reach the deck. With eager eyes they gazed to the lee shore and to heaven. They instituted a prayer-meeting three times a day. Tantalized by the promises, "Ask and ye shall receive, for every one that asketh receiveth; and Jesus said unto them, If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it," they prayed and starved, and prayed and starved. Their children cried for bread; mothers wept over their perishing little ones without possibility of relieving them. Fathers, with upturned faces, appealed to their heavenly Father to interpose and save them. But for some reason he did not hear them, or, at least, did not save them. In a day or two, from weakness, they began to fall overboard. One pulled off his shirt and put it on a stick some four feet long, and waved it to attract attention from the shore. A Mr. Hillyer undertook to swim ashore, but he did not pass the first surf.

On the eighth day a man on shore picked up a glass and looked over the water. Seeing the hulk of the vessel he manned a boat and went out to it, but found only one person on it, a Mrs. Jones, wife of one of the missionaries. She was almost speechless from exhaustion, being in the water up to the waist. She wrote the narrative, and the description she gave of their cries, prayers, and sufferings, would bring the tear to any eye. In dying prayers did they raise their appealing hands towards heaven not to forsake them in their severe trouble. But no response—they perished one after another till all were gone but Mrs. Jones; and with them all that the Church had done for them to carry the gospel to the heathen, notwithstanding the earnest prayers of the Church at home for the success of the cause.

This went through me like a dagger. My exclamation was, If God would not hear them, will he hear me? I was naturally a doctrinal man, zealous for the doctrine of my church; reasoning only from the Bible, and never going back of it. I had imbibed the doctrine that faith alone was the condition of justification. I had never been taught to reason behind the Bible; to doubt was to be damned. Although I had received so severe a thrust from the narrative, yet I could not give up my long-cherished doctrine, but quieted myself with: "Great is the mystery of Godliness!"

But the "Narrative" set me to thinking, and though I banished the event from my mind as much as I could, yet kindred events would force themselves upon my attention. I was associated with ministers—men of God—who had their affinities and cliques, and often made sport over the peculiarities of others, resorting often to measures not very manly to secure perquisites and quarterage.

The question would often arise in my mind, What is it to be born again—to be created anew—to have old ideas pass away, and all things become new—regenerated—crucified with Christ? I could explain and enforce ideas, but the question would come up, Do phenomena sustain the doctrine? Two or three ministers, with as good claims to the new birth as any of us, had within a few years been expelled from the conference for too great intimacy with ladies. These events often troubled my thoughts. The papers were teeming with accounts of disasters all over the world—vessels wrecked and all on board lost—vessels burnt at sea, notwithstanding the cries and prayers of all on board; railroad collisions; houses and cities, with women and children, school-houses and churches, all burnt up together. Churches burnt or blown down in time of worship; thieves breaking into houses, killing and robbing; thousands in some countries starving to death; earthquakes destroying thousands, young and old, in a few minutes; cyclones devastating islands settled with thousands of people; millions of people wearing the chains of slavery and degradation fainting in the furrow or pursued by dogs at the bidding of Christians who believed that Jesus Christ had died for these same slaves—and the above under the eye of Infinite Love; for in him we live, in him we move, and in him we have our being. We! Who? Some or all? Every one, according to the venerable Presbyterian Confession of Faith, which says, "God, the great creator of all things, doth uphold, direct, dispose, and govern all creatures, actions, and things, from the greatest even to the least."

God, therefore, as much controls every action and motion of every thief, assassin, and debauchee, as the saint in his prayer or the minister in the pulpit. If I furnish a gun, a ball, or powder to kill a man, knowing what is designed, I am guilty of the crime; or if I permit a crime, having the power to prevent it as well as not, I am guilty of the crime. And so the confession of faith makes God particeps criminis in all the devilry of the world.

O, how difficult to divest ourselves of impressions made upon us for fifty years of our lives! How often have I shaken my head and turned about saying, I must not reason, I must believe. But thoughts would return unbidden, and the oftener they came the more familiar they became, and the less frightful. This course thus passed on for ten or more years, and yet I continued to preach and pray. Often have I gone into the woods, into the chamber, the barn, the closet, and prayed, with all the self-abnegation I was capable of, that I might know God's will, and be qualified to do it.

But after twelve o'clock or more had reached me, I must return to my needed rest, sad and sorrowful, reflecting: Can I not be what I preach others to be—holy? I would then look around on other ministers, older men than I, who had professed sanctification; standing high in the Church; filling important stations, who fell and disgraced the Church. Then the thought came, Were those men created anew? If so they are now uncreated; so I could only say "mysterious," and make the best of it. So I plodded on; often wondering how much power God has over mankind, and whether he cares as much for the conversion of the heathen as the Churches do. God is present with the heathen, and always has been, and his tender mercies are over all his works and yet he lets hundreds of millions live and die in entire ignorance of the way of salvation. The gold and the silver and the missionaries are his; and yet the churches and missionaries are praying to convert the heathen. Their prayers imply that he is able to do it, and that he can do it consistently with his plan. If he can do it consistently with his plan, why does he not do it for their own sake, and not because he is tired of being teased. If he could convert St. Paul in the very act of sin, why could he not convert every man under the same conditions? Was Paul's soul worth more than millions of others? If he can and does not, it must be because he does not want to; and when he does do it, it is because he cannot bear teasing.

One day, as I was praying God to revive his work on the circuit, and get to himself a great name, some stray spirit started the thought, Don't God know his own business, and when to do it without my asking him? Is he not as much interested in saving immortal souls for whom he died as I am? Having children weak and dependent on me for everything, and having an abundance to supply all their wants, would I wait to have some one or more say to me, "O, Mr., do feed those hungry, starving children; give them something to wear, and prevent their falling into that pit out there?" I paused and said to myself, If infinite love does not move him to save souls, there is no use in my asking him; and I gave it up.

One day, as I was thinking of the world and its phenomena, the thought occurred to me, Having omnipotence, would I let such destruction of creatures I love take place? Would I have made cattle with sharp horns with which to gore and kill their fellows? or the sharp claws and hooked bill of the hawk to catch and tear in pieces the flesh of innocent chickens? Did God care more for the hunger of hawks than for the feelings of chickens?

Then I saw the danger of reasoning, shook my head, turned away, and said I must believe. But just then that same spirit came again and said, But what was my reason given me for? A moment's thought said, To use. Then the query came, Will God be displeased if I use this faculty the best I can and follow it? With confidence I answered, No! Then, with a hand on my heart and eyes toward heaven, I exclaimed, I will be a free man, and no man shall be before me in honesty and sincerity!

I tell you, it was a mighty load that then left my brain; and then and there I became a Freethinker.

The next day a Rev. Dr. came along the sidewalk, and, after salutations, I said, "Dr., you know we believe all have immaterial and, consequently, immortal souls?" He said, "Yes." "Then," said I, "each soul must have been the result of direct creation or of propagation?" He answered, "As much the result of creation as anything Almighty God ever made." "Then," said I, "one of two things must be true; either God created all souls when he did Adam's, or some of them since?" He answered, "Some of them since." "Then," said I, "possibly some to-day?" He assented. "Then," said I, "did those he has created to-day fall in Adam?" He dropped his head a moment and said, "I must go."

My creed now is, All truth is reasonable—with one deduction, Whatever is unreasonable is untrue.

Canon, Colorado.

A. B. PIRLAND.

June Roses.

Soon in the blossoming closes
The land will be red with roses;
And the white rose, the queen rose,
With her sweet, modest face uplifted,
Like a stalk whereon snow has drifted,
Shall nod to her gorgeous sister,
Red where the sun has kissed her,
Blushing with love for the south wind
That sweeps over indolent closes,
And, faint with amorous caresses
Of flowers which his hot lip presses,
Swoons in the breath of the roses.

Of the perfumed, the tender roses,
The bed whereon Love reposes,
And the wild rose of the wildwood,
Sweet with the sweetness of childhood,
Bright with the sunshine which hovers
Tenderly over the lovers,
Shall lull him to rest with embraces
Where fern leaf and brake interlaces;
Hiding her blush in the covert—
Dreaming a dream of the closes,
Till the south wind, tenderly smothered,
There, where it lingering hovered,
Dies in the heart of the roses.

E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

Give Him a Lift.

Give him a lift! Don't kneel in prayer,
Nor moralize with his despair;
The man is down, and his great need
Is ready help—not prayer and creed!

'Tis time when the wounds are washed and healed

That the inward motives be revealed;
But now, whatever the spirit be,
Mere words are but a mockery.

One grain of aid just now is more
To him than tomes of saintly lore;
Pray, if you must, in your full heart;
But give him a lift!—give him a start!

The world is full of good advice,
Of prayer, and praise, and preaching nice;
But the generous souls who aid mankind
Are scarce as gold, and as hard to find.

Give like a freeman—speak in deeds;
A noble life's the best of creeds;
And he shall wear a royal crown
Who gives 'em a lift when they are down.

From the New York Times.

Strawberry Festivals.

These are the days when Sunday-school scholars are called upon to consecrate their youthful stomachs to a variety of pious objects. The oldest boy or girl in the Bible-class and the youngest baby in the infant-class can alike eat strawberries for the benefit of the heathen or for the purpose of painting the meeting-house. The stereopticon is now out of season, and the returned missionary has taken advantage of the quiet summer weather to sail with his last new wife for the scene of his missionary labors. The only remaining method of making the Sunday-school attractive is by organizing strawberry festivals, where the children may gorge themselves with berries and ice-cream, and thus early learn the great moral lesson that the colic of this world is of but small importance in comparison with the souls of be-nighted heathen or the decoration of the clap-boards of the meeting-house.

That strawberry festivals have their uses no one denies. They certainly stimulate the trade of strawberry culturists, confectioners, apothecaries, and physicians, besides giving occasional employment to undertakers. The dry-goods interest is also benefitted by the buying of new clothes for the children, and the immediate ruin of the same which is inevitably wrought by ill-judged attempts to carry home surreptitious strawberries in juvenile pockets. These, however, are considerations which appeal only to the worldly-minded, and have no influence with the festival managers. We may suppose that the latter desire to make a sufficient profit upon the sale of strawberries to pay for a reasonable number of heathen or for a substantial quantity of paint; but it is generally understood their chief desire is to induce the tender and growing stomachs of the young to labor for the highest and holiest purposes!

It rarely happens that the Sunday-school strawberry festival yields any large pecuniary returns. There is a spirit of selfishness among too many mothers which renders them unable to view with satisfaction the prospect of cholera infantum among their own children, and hence leads them to furnish each child with not more than the price of two plates of strawberries and one of ice-cream. Even if the managers sell both berries and cream at a profit of one hundred per cent, this mistaken parental parsimony forbids the hope of large returns. There are, indeed, in every Sunday-school, fat boys with liberal parents, and the warm welcome which such boys receive shows the high estimation in which a strong and capacious stomach is held by intelligent festival managers. Still, the fat boys, though tempted to heroic feats of eating, cannot devour unlimited berries, and when they are finally laid away howling with internal anguish, their fate has a depressing influence upon less ardent eaters. Thus, a strawberry festival often fails to yield its anticipated profit, and in many instances, superintendents and teachers who have spent hours in urging children to remember the poor heathen and to take a few more strawberries, gather sadly together at the end of the festival and remark one to another that they don't believe that a dozen children are enough to really hurt them, and that the festival has not yielded more than thirty or forty dollars.

Now, at the present ruling rates in the heathen market, thirty dollars is not enough to rescue even the smallest and cheapest heathen in India, much less the full-grown, choice, and costly Chinese heathen. If we compare the annual cost of Protestant missions and the annual amount of heathen reclaimed by them, we find that for Protestant purposes heathen are extremely dear. Of course, this is no argument against missions, since the sincere Christian cannot deny that the salvation of a single heathen is worth more than all the money that has ever yet been contributed to the cause; but it is here mentioned as a proof that the ordinary Sunday-school festival can accomplish but very little in point of heathen. It is true that Roman Catholics obtain their heathen at very low rates, since they are contented with merely baptizing them. If their ways were our ways, a strawberry festival might return an average yield of three heathen for every dozen basketsful; but as it is, to educate, clothe, and convert a heathen at a cost of from thirty to forty dollars is out of the question. By making a pool of the receipts of a dozen or twenty Sunday-school festivals a good substantial heathen might be secured, but this would entail endless discussion as to which Sunday-school the heathen principally belonged, or whether each contributing school had an equal interest in him as joint tenants or tenants in common.

It can now be readily understood why strawberry festivals, which, a few years since were held almost exclusively with a view to heathen, are now gradually becoming solely devoted to painting meeting-houses. Even now they usually fail to provide funds enough to buy more than half the necessary paint, and have to be supplemented with fairs, tableaux, and "Mrs. Jarley wax-works." For whichever purpose the average strawberry festival is held, it is usually a financial failure, and were it not for the warm support which is given to every festival of the kind by hopeful apothecaries and doctors, Sunday-school children would probably soon be released from the duty of annually surfeiting themselves with strawberries.

A Statement Corrected.

HUDSON, LENAWEE CO., MICH., May 21, 1877.

MR. EDITOR, Dear Sir: I take it, from the name of your paper that "Truth" is what you seek to publish; and having read in your issue of the 25th inst. the communication of James Bedel of this place, in which the truth is so strangely perverted, and being not only the Justice of the Peace before whom the trial referred to by Mr. Bedel was had, but a true Liberal in every sense of the word, and believing that the principles of Liberalism are best promoted by a strict adherence to the truth at all times, and under all circumstances, I take it upon me to give you a correct statement of the case in question.

First. The small boy arrested as stated by Mr. Bedel, is not a small boy, but a young man seventeen years old, as his own attorney informed me after he had inspected the family record of the young man's parents, pending the suit.

Second. The young man's arrest was not caused by the Rev. Mr. Shanafelt, but by the Deputy Sheriff of this county, who was present when the act was committed, and heard the disturbance, but could not identify the person who caused it.

Third. The Rev. Mr. Shanafelt was not baptizing another small boy; but the Rev. Mr. Cotton, a Congregational clergyman, was performing the ceremony while Mr. Shanafelt stood near by them.

Fourth. The words uttered, as testified to by Mr. Shanafelt, were not, "O, Jesus! didn't he give him a good ducking," but, "Jesus Christ! didn't Bungy (a nickname the boy goes by) get it that time?" This same language was testified to by other witnesses besides Mr. Shanafelt, and by one of them it was fastened positively on the defendant on trial.

Fifth. As to Mr. Shanafelt's "trying to blacken and forever ruin the character of a bright active boy for life," he not only did no such thing but he did not even attend the trial until on the adjourned day, when he did so in obedience to a subpoena issued by me, and served on him, by proper authority.

Sixth. Our community is not shocked at any treatment which the young man received, but is shocked to know that any one should behave in such an unbecoming, ungentlemanly, and uncalled-for manner. After the pleadings were through, the jury retired, and soon returned with their written verdict, which lies before me now and reads as follows:

First. That a crime was committed.

Second. That it is not proved to a certainty that the defendant is the one who committed it. Therefore we find the defendant "Not Guilty."

All of which is very proper. But hear the sequel: One of the jurymen says that he knew all this while that the young man was guilty; for he was standing close by him when the act was committed, and that he cannot possibly be mistaken as to his identity. But this knowledge not appearing in evidence, the jury could not take it into consideration.

In conclusion, I will say that although Mr. Shanafelt's views on religion and my own views on the subject differ so very, very widely, I esteem him as a man of high, unimpeachable character; and I further bear testimony that such is the almost universal opinion of the whole community, not only in but out of all connection with any Church or creed whatever.

Yours in truth and sincerity,

GEORGE A. BROWN.

If an incorrect statement is at any time made in these columns, we will take pleasure in correcting it.—Ed. T. S.

He who rejects with scorn the belief that the shape of his own canines, and their occasional great development in other men, are due to our early forefathers having been provided with these formidable weapons, will probably reveal by sneering, the line of his descent. For tho' he no longer intends, nor has the power, to use these teeth as weapons, he will unconsciously retract his "snarling muscles" (thus named by Sir C. Bell) so as to expose them ready for action like a dog prepared to fight.—Darwin.

Friendly Correspondence.

W. H. SADDEN, Pittsford, N. Y., writes: Please find enclosed sum for renewal of my subscription. My motto is, stand by D. M. Bennett and his paper. In these hard times, Infidels should come up to the help of their publishers against the mighty pressure. All should do to the extent of their ability.

S. B. DAY, Oto, Iowa, writes: I have been a reader of your paper since it first started, and hope I may have the pleasure of reading it as long as I shall live. It is the best weapon I know of to fight old orthodoxy with. There are a few of us here who are determined to do our own thinking. We consider Ingersoll the biggest gun in the freethought field. Give us all you possibly can from him.

JOHN GRIMSLEY, Corvallis, Or., writes: One dollar of the sum enclosed goes heartily to D. M. Bennett for the whipping you gave the Editor of the Scientific American. He richly deserved it, and you did it handsomely. I think such men as you worth more to humanity than ten thousand Moodys. I can remember when we had no such men as you and Ingersoll, men able and willing to rescue their fellows from ignorance and superstition. May your glorious paper live until priestcraft and theology shall be known no more.

F. J. FRIESE, Lawrence, Mass., writes: Your paper is doing a great and good work in this city. If all who believe in your paper would stand up and be counted, our orthodox friends would be surprised at their numbers. I am surprised myself to find so many believing as I do; but the trouble with most of them is, they dare express their sentiments only in private. You are doing a good work, and I hope you will meet with the success you so richly deserve. I trust the time is not far hence when the world will respect a man more for doing good for the sake of goodness than for fear of punishment hereafter.

W. J. S., Union Valley, Mo., writes: I have read considerable in the "Sages," and think it is just the work every Freethinker needs. The article on Jesus is worth double the price of the book. I long for its counterpart, the "Omissions of the Church." THE TRUTH SEEKER is welcomed every week, and would be as acceptable if it came once a day. I believe you will convert Rev. Humphrey yet. Well I meant to say he would make a Christian out of you, or more properly speaking, make you out a Christian. If Rev. Humphrey can put his theory into practice he would make a hellish good missionary, or a good missionary to hell. He would first prove that his Satanic Majesty was a Christian of the most noted character, and by so doing he would soon cast hell into heaven.

N. H. HARMAN, Valley Falls, Kan., in an order for fifty dollar's worth of books, writes: I have only space here to say that all the members of our society, as well as myself, begin to conclude that your paper is indispensable to our moral and intellectual progress. We are positively delighted with your "Interrogatories," and "What I Don't Believe." We hope you will get them bound in volumes. We have no great distaste for Spiritualism, and are glad to get a word from such a man as yourself on that subject. We can not give up all hope of immortality and be happy.

REMARKS.—The "Interrogatories," and "What I Don't Believe" will be issued in book form when completed. The first will probably make a volume of 250 pages and the latter nearly double that amount. The first will likely be completed in two months; the other will run considerably longer.—Ed. T. S.

J. H. MARTIN, Noble, Ill., writes: We ought to be thankful that we live in this age of enlightenment—an age far in advance of that in which our forefathers lived. Still there are those living, even in this boasted age of mental liberty, who would hang men for publishing their honest convictions as though they were murderers. They so express themselves. The clergy are perhaps excusable for opposing thought and free inquiry, for their living depends upon keeping up the old superstitions. But I cannot conceive how any other class can fight free discussion unless they be enslaved by ignorance and superstition. Considerations of pocket, position, popularity, fear of losing friends and caste, go a great way with those who would otherwise be liberally-minded. There is a sad lack of backbone and face-the-music element among Freethinkers. But Mrs. Grundy must abdicate yet—"Yes 'tis coming."

J. E. SAWYER, Cleveland, O., writes: When I was in your city two years ago, I became acquainted with your publications through the kindness of Mrs. R. W. S. Briggs. The "Sages" and Amberley's book are sufficient to insure you the praises of the free-minded and thoughtful through all posterity. But I consider the "Collection of Forms, Hymns," etc., you are now issuing, a work of far more value (because one more needed by the masses) than any with which you have heretofore blessed the world. This last is a necessary work—one for continual and practical use. With a copy of that in the house, an isolated family of Liberals or Spiritualists in some secluded orthodox community can feel truly independent—as though there were a preacher and business man in the household, and amply able to transact all the affairs of life and death without the services of lawyer, judge or parson. The possessors of this cheap little volume can do their own marrying and burying, their own preaching, praying, and singing.

When priests and parsons crowd our path,

With hell beset our way,

We'll tell them we no longer hath

A use for such as they.

A. L. THOMPSON, Prairie City, Or., writes: Please accept my sincere thanks for sending me that splendid work the "Analysis of Religious Belief." Though I read the book perhaps too hastily for a critical review, yet I assured myself that the author has treated the subject in a masterly manner, and that it is a work of rare value. I discover none of the prejudice that characterizes most writers. In fact, Amberley seems to have divested himself entirely of personal prejudice and only earnestly sought to present the truth. To me the whole work is intensely interesting, and the most of it cannot fail to prove so to the general reader, whatever his religious views. The majority who read it will be agreeably disappointed in finding it far better than they anticipated. It will exceed the estimate formed of it from reading prospectuses or published extracts. It will be considered a pleasing publication even by those who cannot coincide with the conclusions of the author. The discussion whether there be a power separate from and superior to the possibilities of matter, will be the most apt to provoke disagreement among readers. But all will acknowledge the candor and ability with which the subject is treated. Whoever fails to derive profit and pleasure from its perusal must be better informed than the writer, or possessed of more bigotry than common sense. You have rendered the cause of Freethought great service in placing this work within the reach of those of limited means. All ought to feel the necessity of sustaining you as far as compatible with their circumstances. Every true Liberal should feel under obligation to you for your successful efforts to advance the cause they claim to cherish. We ought not only to feel grateful to you, but should ever bear in mind that it takes something more substantial than gratitude to provide the staff of life, and to print papers and books.

J. H. GRANTHAM, Ashby's Mills, Ind., some time ago wrote as follows: We have been having a series of revival meetings and lectures in this our Christian neighborhood. They did not bulldoze but two poor victims during the whole of their meetings, notwithstanding the great amount of intimidation brought to bear upon the poor miserable sinners. The divine doctor said he had understood that there were a few Infidels in this neighborhood who had been asserting that the Bible contained contradictions, but he would just say that if they would present to him a single contradiction in the Scriptures, he would disbelieve the whole, because, said he, "God cannot contradict himself. Therefore if the Bible does contain contradictions, it cannot be the word of God. But," says he, "we deny the charge; they are not there." After his saying so much, we had the boldness to send him a few contradictions. At the close of the meetings he appointed a time to harmonize said contradictions, and hoped he would have a large audience on the occasion. When the appointed time arrived, instead of doing what he promised to do, he began a series of lectures on the authenticity, credibility and inspiration of the Bible. The believers say he succeeded admirably, but to the unbeliever his effort was hardly sufficient to convince. He challenged the Infidels to produce a man (that was, a gentleman) to argue our side of the question, and he would discuss the subject as long as we desired. We did wish for an Underwood, but we had none in reach. He would be rather small game for such a gun as Underwood. He is not smart by a good deal, although the members of his church think him a very smart man, able to vanquish almost any man who might oppose him. He made some statements about the dying hours of Thomas Paine that were barely false according to the "Sages." He said when Paine felt that he could live but a few hours longer, he became almost paralyzed with fear, and would cry out in his anguish, "Jesus save me." He said that immediately after his death, his wife became almost frantic with grief and said that she had left a good husband and dear children, and had taken up with this Paine and now he was gone and she was disgraced.

MRS. SALLIE J. MINER, Angola, Ind., writes: I have received an anonymous postal card and would like to answer it, but do not know how unless you will publish it in your paper. I will send you my reply and leave it to your own good judgment whether to publish it or not.

REPLY TO AN ANONYMOUS LETTER.

Some individual claiming me as a friend writes: "My friend, say from the heart, 'Lord Jesus I cannot believe in thy name, help thou my unbelief, make me a child of God.'" I have no idea from where or whom this came, but with the hope that my reply may not escape the observation of my unknown friend, I ask you to publish it in your paper. I can say from my heart, "Lord Jesus I cannot believe in thy name," for I cannot believe anything without some evidence—but I cannot say from my heart "help thou my unbelief, make me a child of God." My God is the creator of all things and beings, including myself; therefore I am a child of God. My unbelief cannot be helped in any other way than by positive evidence. There are many things I neither believe or disbelieve, because I have very limited knowledge of them; therefore I am not competent to decide whether to believe or disbelieve in relation to them. But I feel, judging from the little knowledge I have of the laws of God, that the Christian's idea in relation to Christ's mission is false. I do not believe the God of the Universe cohabited with a woman that she might bring forth a child to be, after a few years' sojourn on this earth, murdered to redeem the human race, or any portion of them, from the consequences of the eating of an apple by Adam or Eve, or a bushel of apples, or of any other act of Adam or Eve. We expect to be rewarded for our own deeds whether they be good or evil. I can say sincerely, I am not so selfish that I would willingly see any one suffer for an error of mine, however small, for there is no justice in the innocent suffering for the guilty, and I do not believe that such is any part of the plan of salvation. All the salvation I want is salvation from superstition and ignorance, and there is no way to be saved from them but by studying God's works and learning to obey his laws. I will now say to my unknown friend, "say from the heart 'I will study God's works more, and the silly dogmas of priests less, that I may become a child of reason.'"

Special Notices.

Two young men of average brains and intellect, and rather skeptical in matters of faith, would like to correspond with two young ladies similarly afflicted. Object—addition to both qualities. Address, Jerome or Everett, care of TRUTH SEEKER.

A GENTLEMAN of Materialistic proclivities wishes to correspond with a lady of liberal ideas; object, marriage. Address L. V., Kansas City, Mo. 3223

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

INTELLIGENT lady, without incumbence, would like to make herself useful in the home of Liberal party. Small salary. AMIABLE, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type, 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," his Theological Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL, AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

MONKS, POPES, and their Political Intrigues. By JOHN ALBERGER, containing an interesting history of the Crimes, Corruptions and Vices of the two hundred and ninety-seven Popes that have professed to fill the chair of St. Peter. Price.

E. P. Cooley,

Manufacturer of

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fictures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament, and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

MRS. BEVIER,

ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed Life and Energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COGNATE OAGLOSRO'S SECRET. 465 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

Radical Constructive Literature.

DISCOURSES AND LECTURES

DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY

OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.

2. The Old and the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.

3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN,

Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway.)

22d.

New York.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.

To which are added:

1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
2. Best age for Bearing Children.
3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
4. Small Families.
5. Importance of Physiologic Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
6. Celibacy.
7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain."

Gokey's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

Bankrupt Sale of Jewelry.

GREAT FAILURE OF THE MILTON GOLD JEWELRY COMPANY IN LONDON

Their Entire Stock Consigned to us to Raise Money as Soon as Possible.

Everybody has heard of MILTON GOLD JEWELRY. It having been sold in this market for the last ten years, and worn by the best and richest class of our population. Still it takes an expert to distinguish Milton Gold from Virginia Gold. In order to dispose of this large consignment in the speediest way, we have put up lots which we offer to the public for the tenth part of their value.

FIFTY-CENT LOT.

One pair elegant sleeve-buttons, retail price $1.00
One set spiral shirt-studs, retail price..... 75
One beautiful scarf-pin, stone setting, retail price..... 75
One elegant gent's watch chain, latest pattern, retail price..... 1.50
One collar-button, retail price..... 50
One elegant wedding ring, very heavy, retail price..... 2.00

Total.....$6.50

Remember that we will send you the above-named six articles, which we have retailed for $6.50, by mail, post-paid, for fifty cents, 4 sample lots for $1.50, or 12 sample lots for $4.

ONE DOLLAR LOT.

One pair gent's sleeve buttons, stone setting..... $1.20
One set elegant spiral studs to match same 1.05
One beautiful ladies' band engagement ring..... 2.00
One gent's large seal ring..... 2.00
One ladies' long neck chain..... 2.75
One gent's heavy plate watch chain..... 1.75
One gent's "Lake George" diamond stud..... 1.00
One beautiful scarf-pin..... 75
One pair ladies' engraved sleeve-buttons..... 1.00

Total.....$13.50

TWO DOLLAR LOT.

One set gold front pin and ear-rings.
One ladies' long neck-chain.
One elegant locket for the above.
One ladies' "Pompadour" watch chain.
One pair stone sleeve-buttons.
One pair engraved sleeve-buttons.
One amethyst stone ring.
One gent's large seal ring.
One ladies' band engagement ring.
One set spiral shirt studs.
One gent's Lake George diamond stud.
One beautiful scarf-pin.

FIVE DOLLAR LOT.

One ladies' opera chain with slide and tassel.
One heavy ladies' neck-chain.
One beautiful locket for the above.
One ladies' Cameo pin and earrings.
One pair (2) elegant bracelets.
One pair amethyst sleeve buttons inlaid with pearls.
One pair onyx sleeve-buttons.
One set studs to match the above.
One fine gent's watch-chain with charm.
One amethyst ring inlaid with pearls.
One topaz ring inlaid with pearls.
One ladies' heavy band ring.
One ladies' chemise button.
One gent's Parisian diamond pin.
One collar button.
One extra fine set studs.

The above figures are the prices these goods have been retailed at in our leading cities. We mention these figures to give you an idea of the goods.

A FINE SOLID SILVER WATCH FREE.

On receipt of $15 we will send by express, one dozen 50 ct. lots and one of each of the others; also one elegant Watch, Ladies' or Gents' size, guaranteed to be a good timekeeper. Such opportunity is offered but once in a lifetime.

We want our patrons and the public in general to understand that this is Milton Gold Jewelry and no common Plated Ware. Satisfaction guaranteed in every instance or money refunded. Send money by P. O. order or registered letter.

Our Firm and Milton Gold Jewelry are endorsed by all the leading newspapers of the country. Goods sent C. O. D. if $5.00 is sent with the order, not otherwise. Address all orders to

RALSTON JEWELRY CO.,

Importers of Watches and Jewelry,

LaSalle and Randolph Streets, Chicago, Illinois.

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- The Male Organs of Generation.
- The Female Organs of Generation.
- The Origin of Life.
- Sexual Generation.
- The Psychology of Menstruation.
- Impregnation.
- Pregnacy.
- Embryology.
- Parturition.
- Lactation.
- The Law of Sex.
- Regulation of the number of Offspring.
- The Theory of Population.
- The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
- Hereditary Transmission.
- Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2.00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1.00
Health and Diseases of Women......25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses..... 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS.

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00

ARABESQUE, colored leather, red

burnished edges, - - - 4.00

MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked

head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, New York.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 35,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GULD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $3 a day sure to all. SAMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. SAMPSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

Gems of Thought.

PREFER truth before the maintaining of an opinion.—Sir Philip Sidney.

To be nobly wrong is more manly than to be meanly right.—Thomas Paine.

GIVE me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.—John Milton.

EVERY violation of truth is not only a sort of suicide in the liar, but is a stab at the health of human society.—Emerson.

A MAN of true honor thinks himself greater in being subject to his own word than in being lord of a principality.—Sir Philip Sidney.

THE faith that does not throw a warmth as of summer around the sympathies and charities of the heart, drop invigorations like showers upon the conscience and the will, is as false as it is unsatisfying.—Paul Potter.

So long as men believed in special providences, there was a premium on poor sanitary and social regulations. Why dig a drain to hinder typhus, when a prayer, which costs nothing, will keep it off? Why clean the streets if prayer can fence a city against cholera?—Chadwick.

THE Holy Inquisition selected with extreme great care the freest and boldest men in order to burn or imprison them. In Spain alone some of the best men—those who doubted and questioned, and without doubting there can be no progress—were eliminated during three centuries at the rate of a thousand a year.—Darwin.

THE perfectly just man is he who loves justice for its own sake, not for the honors and advantages that attend; and is willing to pass for unjust, while he practices the most exact justice; who will not suffer himself to be moved by disgrace or distress, but will continue steadfast in the love of justice, not because it is pleasant, but because it is right.—Plato.

So much as one holds woman in esteem, Purely or basely as he deals with love, So much is his regard for honor, or So little; such the honor he receives, Who not himself respects, honors not woman, Who does not honor woman, knows he love? Who knows not love can he know honor then? Who knows not honor, what has he beside?—L. Schefer.

How so many absurd rules of conduct, as well as so many absurd religious beliefs have originated, we do not know; nor how it is that they have become, in all quarters of the world, so deeply impressed on the mind of man; but it is worthy of remark that a belief constantly inculcated during the early years of life whilst the brain is impressible, appears to acquire almost the nature of an instinct; and the very essence of an instinct is that it is followed independently of reason.—Darwin.

ARM high and you will be sure to reach a point farther up in the scale of existence, farther up toward the summit of the mountain of fame, than if you sit idly and carelessly at the bottom and make no effort to climb at all. There may be difficulties to surmount and stumbling blocks in the way, but when once overcome, these hindrances serve only as helps toward future progress, guide-boards pointing onward and upward. Make a mark in the world, but be sure that it is a good mark. Life can only be once lived. How important, then, that we live it aright.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

In every good man there are affections, moral impulses, aspirations, far more intense and deep than would accord with any secular proportions; and he instantly becomes aware of this, if he falls into unsympathizing society, where he is put upon his self-defense. As soon as he tries to justify an enthusiasm, however true, and casts about for visible and definite grounds on which to rest it, he is conscious of weakening it by the argument designed to give it strength; he feels that it has rights of its own beyond the reach of all his words; he is hurt that his advocacy, vainly struggling to speak for it, has but spoiled the harm with which it speaks for itself. Let any one endeavor, upon a mind of hard, clear surface, to infiltrate some moral conviction to which it has hitherto been impervious; and he will find how little he can open the living pores of conscience by showering down pleas of reason and interest that turn to dust ere they alight.—Martineau.

On religion, in particular, the time appears to have come, when it is the duty of all who being qualified in point of knowledge, or have on mature consideration satisfied themselves that the current opinions are not only false but hurtful, to make their dissent known; at least if they are among those whose station or reputation, gives their opinion a chance of being attended to. Such an avowal would put an end at once and forever to the vulgar prejudice that what is called very improperly unbelief, is connected with any bad qualities either of mind or heart. The world would be astonished if it knew how great a proportion of its brightest ornaments—of those most distinguished even in popular estimation for wisdom and virtue—are complete skeptics in religion, many of them refraining from avowal less from personal considerations than from a conscientious, though now in my opinion a most mistaken apprehension lest by speaking out what would tend to weaken existing beliefs, and by consequence (as they suppose) existing restraints, they should do more harm than good. Of unbelievers (so called), as well as believers, there are many species, including almost every variety of moral type. But the best among them, as no one who has had opportunities of really knowing them, will hesitate to affirm, are more genuinely religious, in the best sense of the word religion, than those who exclusively arrogate to themselves the title.—John Stuart Mill.

Odds and Ends.

"PA," said little Jimmie, "I was very near getting to the head of my class to-day." "How is that, my son?" "Why a big word came all the way down to me, and if I could only have spelt it, I would have gone clear up."

A WESTERN lawyer who was defending a man on trial for wife murder sought for some euphonious and innocent phrase with which to describe his client's crime, and finally said: "He winnowed her into paradise with a fence rail."

IRATE HIBERNIAN—Boots, you baste, where are my shoes?

Boots—Sure, sir, I left them in your room. Irate Hibernian—I can't find them there, and if ye don't bring them I'll throw them at your head.

"I DON'T see how you could have been working all day like a horse," exclaimed the wife of a lawyer, her husband having declared that he had been thus working. "Well, my dear," he replied, "I've been drawing a conveyance all day, anyhow."

How to WRITE WRIGHT RIGHT.—John Wright, I write to you to let you know that you don't write Wright right. To write Wright right you should not write it right, nor should you write it write, nor even right, but to write Wright right, you should write it Wright.

AN old colored preacher in Georgia was lecturing a youth of his fold about the sin of dancing, when the latter protested that the Bible plainly said, "There is a time to dance." "Yes, dar am a time to dance," said the dark divine, "and it's when a boy gits a whippin' fer gwine to a ball."

"I HEAR you are desperately courting the chambermaid," said a man to his servant. "That is my business," was the reply. "But I hear, too, that she favors your attentions." "That is her business," "But do you know that I shall instantly put you outside the door?" "That is your business."

LEGAL ADVICE—"Now state your case," said a Detroit lawyer as he put away the five dollar bill which he had just received as a fee. "Well," began his client, "suppose the man living next door wants to put up a barn right up against my line coming within two feet of my house?" "He can't do it, sir—can't do any such thing," replied the lawyer. "But I want to put my barn right up against his line?" remarked the client. "O—ah—yes—I see. Well sir, go right ahead and put your barn there. All the law in the case is on your side."

A SCRUB-HEADED boy, having been brought before the court as a witness, the following amusing colloquy ensued:

"Where do you live?" inquired the judge. "Live with my mother." "Where does your mother live?" "She lives with father." "Where does he live?" "He lives with the old folks." "Where do they live?" says the judge, getting very red, as an audible titter goes round the court-room. "They live at home." "Where in thunder is their home?" "That's where I'm from," said the boy, sticking his tongue in the corner of his cheek and slowly closing one eye on the judge.

LOVE AND A MULE.—He rose early and gulped down his morning cup of coffee, as if his life depended upon his haste. Then he rushed to the grand delivery window of the post-office and inquired for a letter. The clerk handed him a perfumed missive, directed in a fair, round hand. He ripped open one end of the envelope with his lead-pencil sharpener and commenced to read as he crossed Broad street toward Centre Market. What to him were the country wagons with their loads of beets and cabbages? He reads: "As I sit by the open window and hear the waves thunder upon the shore—" There he stopped suddenly and tumbled head first into a basket of squashes, as if a thunderbolt had been launched at the seat of his thirty inch pantaloons. That was where it struck. "Hellow. Say, can't you keep away from that mawl?" sang out a bronzed agriculturist from Caldwell. "Help yourself to squash," yelled one of Lew Francis's students from the tontorial chambers of the market building. He gathered up his girl's letter dripping with black mud, surveyed the photograph of the mule's foot upon the base of his pantaloons, and limped disconsolately away. The course of true love never did run smooth.

ABOUT the hardest work a fellow can do is to spark to gals at once and preserve a good average.

Hope is a hen that lays more eggs than she can hatch out.

I honestly believe it is better to know nothing than to know what aint so.

Did you ever hear a son bragging about his father whose father could, with justice, brag about him?

I never knew a profound fool yet who did not affect gravity, nor a truly wise man whose face was not always cocked and primed for a laugh.

A gentleman is a gentleman the world over—loafers differ. I suppose this uneasy world would grind around on its axletrees once in twenty-four hours even if there weren't enny drones. They must be good for something, but I kant think now what it is. There haint been a bug made in vain, nor one that want a good job; there is ever lots of human drones loafing around blacksmith shops and cider mills all over the country that don't seem to be necessary for anything but to plug tobacco and swear and steal watermelons, but you let the cholera break out once, and then see the wisdom of having just sich men laying around loose; they help count.—Josh Billings.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arraignment of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heresies and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	2
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft.	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike, Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	1
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	1
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	3
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	1
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	1
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	1
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	3
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	5
56.	Bible Contradictions.	8
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	1
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	9
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	10
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Attestation. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Idea of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	1
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	10
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	3
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	2
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent off; on ten dollars' worth 60 per cent off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.
By D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth street, New York.
Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth.	50
" " with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacquot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., svo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Blagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and 60	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegeses.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
Radical Rhymes.	1 25
Who are Christians. Deluge.	1 75
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Imp'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	36 & 50
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and 80	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
Safest Creed.	1 50
Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Credits of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	1 00
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50 etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. svo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 outs.	3 40
Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
Orisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Fote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	20
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., svo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 24. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, June 16, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St.,
NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

Look out for warm times. Brother Boanerges Fulton of Brooklyn says he is "going to make it hot" for the churches which use fermented wine at communion. Could he not persuade them to change off to lager beer?

A CHICAGO artist has painted a picture of hell, representing sinners in a lake of burning brimstone. He desires to sell it to some evangelist to be displayed at public meetings. Here is a fine opportunity for some enterprising revivalist or some showman to make a fortune.

THE recent burning of the Church of the Holy Cross in Columbus, Ohio, was from candle flames blown against altar drapery, and within a few weeks there have been two church panics, one in New York, and one in Brooklyn, both caused by gauze-veiled girls with lighted tapers.

PUBLIC opinion in Germany is thus reflected in a conversation between two good burghers of Berlin, taken from a Berlin paper: First Burgher—"So we are likely to have another war with France?" Second Burgher—"Let us pray they may thrash us, so that they may be as poor as we are."

IN the annual report of the Michigan State Board of Health, Dr. Scott describes a disease that he thinks is a result of using tobacco. The patient feels a violent pain in the left side, and believes that his heart is affected. The trouble is a rheumatic condition of the wall of the chest. Abstinence from tobacco cures.

DR. SWING foresees the passing away of Calvinism, and thus discourses about it: "So numerous are the names of those who are thus attacking the standards, and so high is the position of the speakers, that it is obvious that the Calvinistic theology has passed its zenith, and is now entering a new and rapid decline."

BENEVOLENT clergyman to Jo—"Why are you standing there, little man?" Jo—"Cause I've nowhere to go to." Clergyman—"Where are your father and mother?" Jo—"Dun no; gone away this ever so long." Clergyman—"Poor little fellow! Well, well, can you answer me this question: When your father and mother forsake you who is it that will take you up?" Jo—"The policeman."

CONCERNING ghosts the Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., says: "I remember the reply of a prominent officer in the naval service, when a friend asked him if he possibly believed in ghosts—some thing which he had said having seemed to indicate that he had a certain unconfessed faith in such apparitions. 'Not a bit of it in the day time,' was his reply, 'but in the night I must confess that I have my doubts.'"

RECENTLY the ministers of London voted down a proposition to open the museums on Sunday by a vote of 48 to 36. Dean Stanley favors the opening, and he has written an address on the moral improvement of the poor which would result from their admission to the museums on Sunday. This was read before the Sunday Society on May 12. Prof. Tyndall and Prof. Huxley also addressed the Society, and it was resolved to ask the aid of the Government to bring about the change.

A STATEMENT is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that twenty-seven young men in one of the Baptist theological seminaries have offered themselves as foreign missionaries to the far away heathen. It would be gratifying to have the name of the institution which contributes so largely to the foreign work. To go out of the country is a good thing for these young theologues to do; for, as is well known, our churches have more young ministers on their hands than they are likely to find work for in the next dozen years.

A SWEET LITTLE GIRL.—A sweet little girl sat next to me at the first recital of Chopin's music given by Mme. Essipoff. During the pathetic "Marche Funebre" from the Sonata, opus 36, her attention was fixed, as if the music had entranced her very soul. Her eyes glistened with emotion, and her whole face was expressive of admiration and excitement. When the pianist had finished, the gentleman who was with this sweet little creature turned to her and said, "How beautiful!" To which she replied, "Yes, indeed; doesn't it fit exquisitely in the back? How much do you suppose it cost a yard?"

SOME of our church fairs and festivals are lively enough, but the French can beat us. This is the announced programme of religious exercises in a French town at a recent Sunday fete by the Club of St. Joseph: "At 7 A.M., mass and communion; at 10 A.M., grand mass, with music and singing; at 1 P.M., divers games, races, gymnastics, climbing the pole; at 3 P.M., vespers; at 4 P.M., sword exercise, shooting at a mark and other recreations; at 8 P.M., sermon and solemn benediction, sung by the members of the club; at 9 P.M., illuminations, fireworks, and balloon ascension."

THE Presbyterians of the South, in their General Assembly at New Orleans, spoke their mind on dancing, and declared that some forms of it are more mischievous than others; the round dance than the square; the public ball than the private party; but none of them are good, and all are evil, and to be discountenanced. And the Northern Presbyterians said at Chicago that both Sunday newspapers and Sunday mails were wicked and must be discountenanced by all good Presbyterians. Nevertheless, the girls will dance as before, and their fathers will mail letters on Saturday night and read papers on Sunday morning while the mails are carrying their letters along the wicked mail routes. Most of those who pass these laws for the churches are well-meaning but impractical persons.

ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS says that on January 15, 1877, he had "a telescopic clairvoyant view" of the planet Jupiter, and was able to observe the inhabitants. He adds: "My attention was suddenly attracted to a massive assemblage of men, women, and children, walking about beneath a bright sky, and performing peculiar acts; the majority of the host walking in an inclined position, and many of them actually using their hands also in accomplishing locomotion. And yet, compared with the bodily appearance of many tribes on earth, their physical forms were exceedingly handsome, and their intelligence was quite spiritual and commanding." He was informed—he does not tell how—that these people were engaged in a religious ceremony. This is thought to be the latest intelligence that has been received from that distant orb.

THE Flower Missions in our principal cities are now doing a good work in making the rooms of bed-ridden sufferers fragrant and beautiful. A few flowers kindly given and tastefully arranged do more good than long sermons or dry tracts. A mission of this sort requires no expensive agencies, for the young ladies generally attend to the business on the voluntary principle. The customary nuisance of an anniversary, with columns of statistical reports, is also a thing from which Flower Missions are exempt. The statistical souls who find full swing for their benevolent industry in figuring up the number of good deeds they have done would make themselves intensely ridiculous in tabulating the number of bouquets given out, the varieties of the flowers composing them, their estimated cash value, and the probable good they accomplished. The Flower Missions are particularly in season just now, and should be liberally encouraged.

SOME of our contemporaries are scolding and others are making fun of the good people of Rochester on account of an incident which occurred at one of Mr. Train's recent lectures delivered in that city. The lecturer declared, doubtless in an exposition of the popular religious opinions of the world, that there would only be about 3,000,000 saints in heaven, and that all the rest of the human race would be condemned to the infernal regions. Among the latter such men as Byron and Franklin would certainly be found, and Train in his enthusiasm for these great men, exclaimed, "I want to be able to grasp their extended hands if I have to go to hell to do it. And by the way, all those in favor of going to hell with me say 'aye!'" The audience responded with a unanimous "aye!" that made the hall ring. The fact is, hell is fast losing its terrors. It is not near as hot and sulphury as it used to be. Thousands would now rather go there and enjoy the society of such men as Franklin, Jefferson and Lincoln than to go to a seven-by-nine heaven all walled in and perpetually sing psalms with Talmage, Moody and Elder McGhee.

REV. AUGUSTUS BLAUVELT, of the Dutch Reformed Church, has just had a second trial before the Grand Synod of the Church—this being an appeal from a trial by the Classis—and has again been found guilty of heresy. The worst charge made against him by his brother clergymen was that he had "betrayed Christ." That is doubtless a very heinous offense, and perhaps it is serving him just right to suspend him—if not by the neck, from the office of pastor. His crime consisted in writing a number of magazine articles, some four years ago, in which he showed that compared with the scientific advancement of the age the Church is entirely in the background, and that she would be compelled to step forward on more tenable ground and adopt an improved system of defense. His brother clergymen insist that Christianity was perfect in its inception, and that there cannot be and must not be any improvement in it. Mr. Blauvelt intimates that he will be followed by other clergymen, and that the defection among the clergy is very wide-spread. Come on, Brethren, don't always remain back in the myths and mists of antique superstition.

A REVEREND MURDERER ON TRIAL.—The trial of Elder Samuel H. McGhee for the murder of his wife has commenced at Dixon, Ill. His case has been alluded to before in these columns, but not stated fully. The prisoner belongs to the Christian or Campbellite denomination, and formerly preached in Huntington, Ind. The church at Ashton, Lee Co., Ill., wanting a shepherd, extended a call to McGhee. His trial or test sermon was satisfactory, and he was duly employed. He is a tidy, genteel, dressy fellow, and soon made a very favorable impression upon his congregation, especially the female portion of it. One young lady, Miss Rilla Paddock, eighteen years of age, daughter of a rich farmer, fell greatly in love with him, though he had a wife, and a daughter nearly as old as herself. The fondness between the pastor and the young lady increased to such an extent that it was observed and talked about by the members of the congregation, many predicting that mischief would grow out of it. It was not very long (the 7th of February) before the Elder's wife was taken very ill with painful spasms and vomiting, but after two days she partially recovered. In a week she was again attacked with the same but more alarming symptoms, but after three days she again partially recovered. On the evening of Feb. 25 the symptoms returned with increased violence, while McGhee was conducting a revival meeting, he being regarded as having a splendid forte, or extra "gift," in manipulating revival meetings. He was called home, and a physician was also summoned, who prepared four powders of bismuth and calomel. He gave her one and prescribed one every two hours. When the second powder was given she noticed it was very bitter and unlike the first. It increased her distress. When she took the third she remarked: "That is like the one the doctor gave me." When she took the fourth she said: "That is bitter like the second." The last powder being strychnine she soon died, being in great distress, and evidently with the conviction that she had been poisoned. The Elder was at once suspected and arrested. It was brought out that he had bought arsenic and strychnine while conducting a revival meeting in Capron, Boone Co. The contents of the poor woman's stomach, and the spoon in which the medicine had been administered, were sent to Prof. Haines of Rush's Medical College, and he at once discovered strychnine. The proof against McGhee is most damning, and shows that while he was administering poison to his wife he was zealously conducting a revival meeting with the ostensible purpose of bringing souls to Jesus. The business of Jesus must surely be in a bad way when it is left for such villains and murderers to attend to. Not the least among this man's crimes was to induce his simple daughter, sixteen years of age, to sign a confession which he wrote, that she had poisoned her mother; but this did not serve him; his game was defective. The simple-minded girl told the whole story, and exposed his deep villainy. He is reported as carrying himself in the courtroom with great dignity and clerical assurance. He has dark hair, white hands, and sits with them folded in true clerical style. He has the self-control and composure which great criminals often evince. That he is murderer of the deepest dye there can be no question. Is the kingdom of heaven composed of such?

Events of the Week.

ELDER JOHNSON, an Advent preacher in Cumberland county, Tenn., married on Monday, and eloped with his wife's niece on Tuesday.

SEVERAL heavy financial failures have recently taken place in Boston. The protracted hard times are still producing their sad results.

250 WORKMEN at the Marion watch factory in Jersey City have discontinued work because they have not been paid. $3,000 is due them.

A HAT factory burned in Bridgeport, Conn., and while a number of men were removing a safe a wall fell and crushed eleven men to death.

BELIEVERS in a new religion, called Moranism, are gathering in Walla Walla, Washington Territory, in expectation of a second coming of Christ.

A FIRE in the dry-goods house of the Auburn Woolen Mills at Auburn consumed three hundred thousand pounds of wool. Total loss, $100,000.

THE seventeen-year locusts are making their appearance in immense quantities in parts of Pennsylvania. They appear to be doing no great damage.

HEAVY rains have taken place in Northern Mississippi and Western Tennessee. Thirteen and one-half inches fell within forty-eight hours. Crops somewhat damaged.

DURING the late jubilee the Pope received in presents over $1,000,000. Poor man, with $32,000,000 only in bank how can he manage to get along with such a short allowance?

THE cut-worms are extremely bad this year in New Jersey. They are taking everything in the way of corn, cabbage, tomatoes, onions, etc. The cut-worms have never been so bad there before.

TALMAGE has gone to his summer home at Easthampton, Long Island, to snare the peaceful clam, and wrestle with the ferocious crab. Dr. Fowler who edits the Christian Advocate will preach at the tabernacle.

THE weather for the past week has been agreeable and seasonable. Frequent showers have visited various parts of the country, and vegetation is progressing finely. In some sections the rain has been too profuse.

GREAT floods have taken place in Missouri, Kansas and adjacent States. Bridges have been washed away and railroad travel seriously impeded. The Missouri river is over its banks and doing considerable damage.

NELLIE SMITH, aged sixteen, while at work in a button factory in Water street, Brooklyn, was caught by her hair in the belt, jerked from the floor, whirled around and thrown with great violence to the floor. Her scalp was torn and her spine injured. She died.

A MOST severe famine is now prevailing in parts of China and in Corea. No possible means, it is said, can be employed to avert the death of hundreds of thousands of persons by starvation. In Corea a deadly pestilence also prevails, caused by the exposure of great multitudes of dead bodies over the country.

NO serious battles have been reported within the last week between the Russians and Turks. The former are massing their armies on the Danube and also in the vicinity of Erzeroum. The Czar is reported as having taken command in person on the Danube, but the river has again become so high as to prevent immediate operations. A deadly engagement will doubtless soon take place at Erzeroum.

A TERRIBLE earthquake has taken place in South America on the Peruvian and Bolivian coasts, which caused a most disastrous tidal wave, said to surpass in fatality the similar disaster of 1868. Six hundred lives have been lost, and over twenty million dollars worth of property destroyed. The shocks were numerous at Mollendo; the waves rose from ten to fifteen feet. Houses, cars, locomotives, boats, etc., were tossed about like shuttle-cocks. At Chenar the earth opened in crevices fifteen metres deep; two hundred killed. At Guanillos the wave rose sixty feet high, and at Mexillones sixty-five feet high. The utmost terror prevailed.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

The morality of Polytheism was greatly superior to that of Fetichism. It shows either gross ignorance or wilful misstatement to pronounce the ancients, prior to the advent of Christianity, wanting in morality. The lives of some of their great men are comparable with any of those of modern times. The philosophers of Greece and Rome taught that sin was a disease, and virtue health of the spirit—that perfection should be the aim, and all should endeavor to live divine lives. Never have the duties of man been more clearly set forth. The theocracy separated religion from morality, and the observance of the routine of sacrifices and ceremonies came to stand for a well-ordered life, just as it does under the Monotheistic system of the present. It has been truly said that Rome, conscious of her strength and destiny, worshiped herself. The larger part of her festive days were commemorative of great events in her annals, rather than devoted to special duties. The eagles of her conquering legions were sacred, and the altar was placed in the centre of the camp as the Ark of God was in that of the Israelites. Rome deified and erected temples to her virtues. Concord, Faith, Constancy, Modesty, Hope, and Peace had their respective votive shrines. The deification of these virtues indicates the noble aspirations of their devotees, and the constant presence of their gods must have produced a salutary effect.

The gods, though dwelling on high Olympus, possessed domains on the earth, held in the same regard as those of the king, distinguished by an altar protected by a sacred grove. Temples were erected on these holy grounds, which were often cultivated for the maintenance of the ceremonies prescribed by their possessors and of the priests. Every trade had its presiding deity, as it now has its patron saint. There was a god to protect the traveler, the sage, and the warrior. The influence of a firm belief in such divine presence, cannot in this age be appreciated. That it was implicitly believed, and even to a late day, there can be no doubt. In the age of the Antonines the Attic husbandman believed in the power of the hero of Marathon, and the Arcadians could hear the pipings of Pan. The belief of the common people was a religious faith. National misfortunes, by making them cling with greater affection to the past, strengthened the influence of the old faith.

The religion of the ancients was not deficient in elements of fear. It was not an easy system, presenting no punishment for sin, but gave positive assurance that no wrongful thought or action could escape its consequences. The messengers of the gods, the Furies, by the terror they awakened, placed on the actions of mortals the restraint of fear. Homer wraps them in dreadful obscurity, places their dwelling in the awful depths of the invisible world, and makes them horrible to the gods whose mandates they execute. Shrouded in darkness, they go forth on their errands, and by no means can they be propitiated. Stern, inevitable retribution for crime was theirs. Sooner or later, with soft but swift steps, they overtook the guilty, and no prayer or sacrifice could loosen their remorseless hands. Absolute and eternal justice was their goal.

Not beliefs but actions reveal the moral status of a people. Man's ideas of God have very little influence on his practical morality. A Catholic, a Deist, or an Atheist may entertain equally elevated moral views. The idea of God is rather an effect than a cause. The great sects—Brahmins, Buddhists, Moslems, and Christians—entertain conceptions of God and have a standard of morality evolved from the circumstances peculiar to each, and the worshiper at one shrine is as often an upright, honest man as at another. The better the individual, the higher and purer his moral conceptions and intellectual aspirations, the more exalted and refined his ideal personification. If the negation of Atheism is reached, the manly boldness which denies the received dogmas of the time is a guarantee of an upright mind. Atheists are notable for uprightness of character. The idea of God presented by others may have its effect on those who receive it, but not on its originators.

Polytheism, in its highest form, led to a cheerful acceptance of the good and ill of life, and enjoyment of present blessings. Religion was joyous, and rarely made unreasonable demands on its receivers. The Sacred Mysteries absorbed religious fervor, and through symbolic ceremonies became a strong tie, binding its votaries together, and a teacher of all the noble virtues and manly living. They were the embodied conceptions of sages and poets, of the future life, the characters of the gods, and the soul's transition to them. The secrets of the greater mysteries were so carefully preserved that little is known of the grand philosophy of life they sought symbolically to impress on the trembling initiate, but enough is known to show how deeply early Christianity imbibed its forms and philosophy.

The popular belief in immortality among the Greeks differed little from that of the early Christians. Names changed, but the ideas remained the same. The spirit at death at once entered Hades, but it enjoyed no rest until its funeral rites were properly performed. It was as important that the body of the slain hero be recovered as that the battle be won, and the most desperate contests occurred over the fallen. In the Under-world they pursue occupations the same as on earth, only like phantoms. They have no strength; this they receive by means of the blood of victims sacrificed by living friends; then they regain memory and affection for a time, and recognize and feel for those they have left on earth. The vast multitude in Hades are in a stupified, half-conscious state. While the shades of heroes and sages were transported to an island in the ocean, exempt from all the vicissitudes of the seasons, and perpetually fanned by cool and fragrant western breezes, the enemies of the gods were removed to the abyss of Tartarus, as far beneath Hades as that was beneath the earth. Its iron door shut them from the mercy of the offended gods; its brazen floor was pressed by the footsteps of never-ending toil; and its vaulted arches echoed the groans of never-satisfied longings. This poetical conception was afterwards refashioned into the loathsome Purgatory of Catholicism.

Sacrifices often were enacted poems, visible expressions of gratitude to the unknown and incomprehensible forces of Nature. Out of awe grew a sense of dependence, and the performance of a given labor was as nothing without the approval of the gods. Libations were made at the social meal; the harvest gave its offerings; the youth and maiden gave votive locks to certain deities. Simple rites were these, but satisfying. The earliest sacrifice was made to appease the anger or court the favor of the invisible powers, and when the anthropomorphic ideas strengthened, the earthly ruler became the image of the gods, and what to him was pleasing was regarded so to them. They were envious, and must be appeased by costly presents and rich banquets. The costliness of these was in proportion to the supposed displeasure of the gods. This belief carried to extreme would require the life of man as the greatest sacrifice. The immolation of the twelve Trojans by the Greeks on the funeral pyre of Patroclus to soothe his departed soul, of two Greek and two Gallic captives by the Romans when the gods through Hannibal threatened the life of their city, the fate of Jephthah's daughter, and the command to Abraham to offer up his son, and the sacrifice every fifth or seventh month by many ancient peoples of a victim chosen by lot, indicates the universality of this belief.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

PART II.

THE SERVICES OF INFIDELITY AND CHRISTIANITY TO LEARNING AND SCIENCE.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Just a word of review, and then we will proceed to the second proposition.

You say my "gun scattered widely." There are two reasons for that:—the comprehensiveness of the subject, and the "scattered" condition of the "game." Perhaps you ought to be thanked for the tacit admission that my "scattering shot kills." There are indications, however, that you will die "game."

Ghosts will not down. You repeat what you have already said about Franklin, Washington, Jefferson, and others. I will refer you to my former letters, and especially to the references contained therein, for a disproof of those reiterations. I am more anxious to furnish the firmest facts and the strongest arguments than to get the last word.

If you will re-peruse my last letter you will find proof that John Wesley did not "endorse and father bitter arguments and invectives against the Colonists." There is not a "bitter" word in his "Calm Address;" and in his letter to Lord North he spoke in the most respectful and flattering terms of the Americans.

As to the religious views of the framers of our Constitution, I will let the reader choose between your assertion and Judge Story's opinion, quoted in my last letter.

The Slavery question is a complicated subject. One thing, however, is certain, viz: that "the pioneers of modern Abolitionism were almost uniformly devout, pious, church-nurtured men" (Greeley's American Conflict, vol. i, p. 121). William Lloyd Garrison was a church-member when he started out as an Abolitionist. Wendell Phillips' religious position is somewhat uncertain. But he is not an Infidel of the Paine stamp. A writer in the Boston Investigator, May 30, 1877, condemns and ridicules him because he gave an exhortation in one of his speeches to "take heed to the promises of God," and to "trust the future to God." Benj. Lundy, the first Abolitionist, properly so-called, was an orthodox Quaker (Greeley's Am. Conflict, vol. i, pp. 111, 113). So is John G. Whittier. W. C. Bryant is a Universalist. Gerrit Smith, though not a church-member, had family worship in his house. The Paineites who identified themselves with the Abolition movement were very scarce indeed. On the other hand, Christians espoused the cause when it was "unpopular." It cost several of them their lives. Who can estimate the influence of Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin"? Who can measure the effects of Albert Barnes' anti-slavery utterances as expressed in his "Notes" and other writings? If many ministers were gagged by fear or policy, or received the hush-money of the wealthy slave-holder, it must not be forgotten that there were clergymen—and they were not a few—that dared cry aloud against the injustice and inhumanity of slavery. Religious bodies declared against it. Ever since the Revolution the Quakers have refused membership to such as traffic in slaves. The Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists, have not always been consistent on this question; but they have repeatedly, in their highest tribunals, expressed their disapproval of slavery. This is more than was done by any "Radical Club" or "Liberal Association." People who do little or nothing themselves are often the readiest to criticize the doings of others.

You try to make out that Lincoln was an Infidel. When you thought you had Colfax on your side, you called him a "respectable Christian authority" (Sages, p. 774); but after discovering that he is against you, you say sneeringly that the "veracity of this Christian statesman on some other important matters has been seriously questioned." This is only the fox crying "Sour grapes." We have four elaborate biographies of Lincoln—Arnold's, Raymond's, Dr. J. G. Holland's and Lamon's. The first three say Mr. Lincoln was a believer in the Christian religion. Holland especially is clear and strong on this point. Lamon alone tries to make out that he was a skeptic.

The following points should be carefully considered respecting Mr. Lamon's "Life of Lincoln":

1. It extends only to Lincoln's inauguration as President.
2. It studiously avoids quotations from Lincoln's own utterances.
3. It bears internal evidence that the writer is anxious to establish this allegation. Infidelity, too, has its "interested" biographers.
4. The witnesses that Mr. Lamon brings forward are inconsistent and contradictory. One says Lincoln "sometimes bordered on Atheism," while another declares "he fully believed in a superintending and overruling Providence." One tells us he was "utterly incapable of insincerity," while another insinuates that "he played a sharp game" on the Christians of Springfield." One informs us that he was a "fatalist," and then the biographer assures us "Mr. Lincoln was by no means free from a kind of belief in the supernatural." Hon. David Davis says: "I do not know anything about Lincoln's religion, and I do not think anybody knew;" but Hon. John T. Stuart says: "He was an avowed and open Infidel."

The jewel of consistency is not to be found in this mass of testimony. The truth is, the whole thing is the result of Mr. Herndon's culling, collocation, jury-packing and special pleading. This Mr. Herndon is himself a "Freethinker," and he was deeply "interested" in showing that his famous partner held views similar to his own.

If Lincoln was an Infidel, how was it that his political opponents did not bring this charge against him in the campaign of 1860? If he was an Infidel, and "incapable of insincerity," why did he say that "Christ is God," and that "intelligence, patriotism, and Christianity . . . are still competent to adjust in the best way our present difficulty"? If he was an Infidel, how was it that he asked the people of Springfield to pray for him, when he was leaving them to assume his Presidential duties? Mr. Herndon said he "was mortified, if not angry, to see him (Lincoln) made a hypocrite" (Lamon's Life of Lincoln, p. 496). But Mr. Lincoln must have been either a hypocrite, or a believer in the Christian Religion, as the citations given above, and many more that might be added, clearly prove. Christians have never charged Lincoln with hypocrisy, but Infidels have, and Mr. Herndon is as guilty of this as anybody. (See Lamon's Life of Lincoln, pp. 497-504.)

Let us now take up the second proposition, THAT BELIEVERS IN THE BIBLE HAVE DONE MORE THAN UNBELIEVERS TO PROMOTE SCIENCE AND LEARNING.

I will occupy my remaining space with proof that the Bible itself contains nothing inimical to science and learning, but that, contrariwise, it praises and encourages them. When the Jewish people were, according to the narrative, objects of the Lord's special care and instruction, they were inferior to no race in their cultivation of the arts and sciences. They were eminently a civilized nation. The Scriptures never mention skill, invention, and refinement with disrespect. On the contrary, they represent the Most High as commanding the first man to discover and utilize—in one word, "subdue"—the forces and resources of Nature. In the fourth chapter of Genesis we find honorable mention of Jubal, as the first musician; of Tubal-Cain as the first foundry-man; and of Lamech as the first poet. And the first poem of this poet is preserved. Nothing is condemned in the antediluvians but their wickedness. Noah, it is said, was an object of the Divine favor. But he must have been a first-class architect, and practical builder, or he could never have constructed the ark. And he must have been no mean naturalist, when he could classify the animals according to his instructions. Even if you regard this whole account as mythical, it will still remain that Genesis speaks with approval of art and architecture.

The Tower of Babel indicates an advanced stage of civilization. The people had a language. And their applied ambition showed that they were not inferior to the builders of the Pyramids.

Abraham possessed considerable knowledge of surgery, as is evinced by his administering the rite of circumcision.

The ancient Egyptians were among the most civilized people of the world. In the course of events, the descendants of Abraham made their abode with that people for a period exceeding four hundred years. There they learned all that the Egyptians knew. The common people obtained a knowledge of the practical arts, by a hard experience, and the more fortunate Moses acquired the learning and science of the royal court. When they left Egypt they took all that knowledge with them. And they added to it by their subsequent contact with other nations, and as the result of their varied observation. If you examine Josephus and the Old Testament, you will discover that the Jews were inferior to none in their study and practice of the arts and sciences that characterized ancient civilization.

The women were exquisite cooks. They could make bread, leavened and unleavened, and cakes of all kinds. They could roast, dry, and broil meat. They knew how to make butter and cheese. In short, they could get up a meal in first-class style.

They were excellent milliners and dress-makers. They could use cosmetics to as great advantage as any of our modern ladies. If jewelry, and rich apparel, made most tastefully, are indicative of civilization, then, most assuredly, the Jewish women were highly civilized. The latter part of the third chapter of Isaiah sounds very much like a scrap from some olden Demorest.

And the men were equal to the women. Their division of Canaan shows that they possessed considerable knowledge of surveying. They were well versed in geography, as their frequent allusions to it indicate. They were interested in astronomy, as their naming of several constellations signifies (Job. ix. 9; Is. xiii. 10; Amos v. 8). They were familiar with the uses of medicine, and the diagnosis of disease, as is proved by their law respecting leprosy, and by the frequent mention of physicians and healing herbs. They were well acquainted with books, as their many references to them show. They had a taste for poetry, and an appreciation of first-class poets, as is evidenced by their fondness of Job, the Psalms, and Isaiah. They were superior musicians. They were fine players on the organ, flute, harp, trumpet, cymbal, dulcimer, drum, psalter, timbrel, gittith, higgsaon, sackbut, and the harp of a thousand strings. They were accurate historians, as their genealogical tables, and the Bible itself attest. They were the very best of architects, as the tabernacle, their cities, and especially their Temple, demonstrate. Every Jew was required to learn some substantial trade.

They had fixed weights and measures, an established currency, and a calendar equal to Caesar's or Gregory's. They were active in domestic and foreign commerce. Their ships traversed the seas. They encouraged philosophy. They honored statesmanship. They had their seven wise men, as well as Greece. Solomon was the pride of the Old Economy, because he was a great natural philosopher. "He spake three thousand proverbs; and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things and of fishes" (1 Kings iv. 32, 33). He was a Tupper, a Linnaeus, an Audubon, a Cuvier, and an Agassiz, all in one.

Nor is the New Testament less friendly than the Old to learning and science. Jesus wept as he contemplated the downfall of the beautiful Jerusalem. It was with profound sorrow that he foretold the destruction of the Temple—that crown of ancient architecture. His many parables show that he was a close observer and tender admirer of Nature. Very significantly, his first worshippers were the sages and scribes of the East. When only twelve years old, he sought the company of the best scholars of the land. His "learning" was the wonder of his contemporaries (John vii. 15). If he chose illiterate disciples, it was in order that he might educate them. The last Apostle whom he called had passed through the two best schools in the world in that age—the classical school at Tarsus, and the divinity school at Jerusalem. This Apostle Paul visited the greatest cities of the world. He beheld the highest monuments of genius. Did he show them any disrespect? Never. He was at Ephesus, and saw the temple of Diana—one of the Seven Wonders; but he did not utter a word against its artistic and sculptural grandeur. He was at Corinth, and looked upon the crowning achievements of culture and refinement. He found no fault with the impregnable fortress of the Acrocorinthus. He expressed no contempt for Corinth's extensive commerce, or for its invention of the triremes. He was at Athens. He quoted their own poets to the Athenians. He walked through the Acropolis and witnessed the Erechtheum and that masterpiece of Phidias—the snow-white Parthenon. The works of the Greek masters were all around him. But he never said a word derogatory to Greek literature or to Greek art. He saw, too, the magnificence of Rome. In its walls, arches, aqueducts, fortresses, palaces and Capitol, he found only objects for admiration. Paul condemned only "science falsely so-called" (1 Tim. vi. 20). He despised only the quack-philosophy that has been the plague of every age.

I have made the foregoing remarks to show that the Bible itself contains no disrespect to the highest forms of civilization. It rather sanctions and encourages it. And it is demonstrable that the most advanced type of civilization has hovered around the Holy Scriptures ever since they were written. In my next I will try to show some of what professing Christians have done to foster and expedite education and progress. Yours sincerely, G. H. HUMPHREY.

Materialism.

[It is but just to say that the following communication has been a long time on hand. We should have been glad to have given it a place earlier had not the pressure upon our columns been so great.—ED. T. S.]

MR. EDITOR: In No. 19, Vol. III., of your valuable paper D. B. Hamaker—a truth seeker, no doubt—threw down "A Nut for our Materialistic Friends to Crack." I was in hopes to see at least one Materialist open the eyes or the nut of the inquirer. But the question yet remains open for discussion, the cause of which I hope is not for lack of Materialistic correspondents in the line of your readers.

There are several questions asked, but I shall not answer all separately; nevertheless, all that require an answer shall receive one. D. B. Hamaker says, in accepting the Materialistic theory, "If force is indestructible, I will take the position that the individual conscience, or soul, is likewise indestructible." Would he assume from the basis that matter is indestructible, that an apple will never cease to be an apple and is indestructible—not resolvable into its elements?

Thought is not a power, but an effect, produced by the action of the brain; a diseased brain, a diseased mind.

"What becomes of the force that generated thought?"

It is transmuted (not necessarily into other brains, nor will this force continue to think unless it has a brain in which alone it can think).

Büchner says: "The force that moves our iron-horse, the hurricane, the lion to his prey, is alike transmuted, perhaps stored away into great coal-beds, to be used again as heat, light and power. The force that moves the locomotive is a drop of the sun's heat, exchanged into labor by a machine, just like the work that produces thought in the brain of the thinker, or beats nails in the arm of a blacksmith."

"The heat with which we warm our rooms is heat from the sun, the light by which we make night into day is light borrowed from the sun" (Liebig).

The reader, no doubt, is aware that the body of a grown person continually throws off as much matter as is taken for nourishment. Each movement of the arm, the eye, and the brain is no exception to this rule, but requires fresh molecules, while the molecules that furnished us with new thought yesterday, are to-day thrown overboard as waste material, i. e., parts deprived of qualities essential for the production of thought. Were this not so, for what use are the veins leading from the brain?

Force is motion, and to produce motion there must be matter, in which force is inherent.

"To think matter without force is just as unthinkable as to think force without matter" (Büchner).

All forces, like water, have a common origin, and whether they propel a vessel across the ocean, drive a rolling-mill, ply a needle, pencil your likeness, or discover a great fact in the brain of man, a stratagem in the brain of a fox—Matter does it all. The sheep consumed by a wild animal will give to its brain the force [instinct!] to catch another (for the forces are not so much dependent upon what a stomach digests, but upon what kind of a brain that stomach feeds). If the sheep is eaten by a malefactor, it will give force [thought!] to his brain much like that in the brain of a lion; he may not only cogitate plans how to steal a sheep, but how to slay his fellow-man, and this "great indestructible soul" is baser and far below the "destructible instinct" of a lion. But were the sheep eaten by a philosopher, a philanthropist, an honest statesman, how many good and benevolent forces would the same matter bring into the brains of such individuals!

The matter carried to the brain for its support is arrested in death; the juice or sap carried to an apple is arrested when severed from its nourisher, and both will decay. The parts of which they consisted dissolve, perhaps nevermore to meet again. The transmutation of force is well seen in the application of steam. We there see the coal, apparently forceless, burn and pass into gas [fire], smoke and heat, which, transmuted to water, becomes steam. As long as the locomotive remains stationary, the transmutation of force is invisible to the eye, but it may be felt on the boiler and cylinders as heat, which we know is matter in motion. But as soon as the engineer opens the throttle-valve, force is transmuted to the lever, it moves, and a train with passengers is drawn swiftly along, all done by force, i. e., its transmutation. For, were force not transmutable, how could we apply steam? how could we have fire? or, in fact, how could we perform any action whatever? and how could we perceive its existence? When the engineer cuts off the steam, the feeder of force, the train does not stop immediately, but moves still along, by the transmutation of force until overcome by friction—the same as a dreaming brain still acts unconsciously. It does not reason. In sound sleep there is no more thought in the brain of man than in the brain of a sleeping animal. And are we still asked, what becomes of these forces after the train has stopped? We give the same answer as above, though perhaps invisible to the layman—"The motion of a ripple is communicated to the whole Universe." When the train has run across the rails, the force that moves it causing friction between wheel, and rail, and air, left visible marks on all; it compressed the iron, shook the embankment and foundation. The agitated air shakes grass, shrub and tree; the plant, so shaken, receives a new stimulus to growth, and growth is motion. The force continues there exhibiting itself, and when the plant is eaten by a living being, continues its action, and when this being dies, it decays and force marches again into other plants; thus there is a constant going and coming in a circle.

In eternal motion without rest,
All matter moves to meet its birth,
And all beginning strives to attain
To where the ends do meet again.

Force cannot properly be arrested, though it might appear to be, as in the coal; it will continue in either repulsion or adhesion, expanding or contracting matter. If force does not continue to exist in the rock and the coal, what then holds their parts together? If force departs from solids, the parts of which it consists must dissolve. When we extract the forces from coal, it departs as heat and light [gas]. When iron is beaten into steel, its parts are more closely united, it will take as much more force to separate and break these parts as it took to compress them. The force that revolves the earth keeps on contracting her until another force changes her equilibrium, when the same force that now contracts the earth will then be busily engaged resolving her parts into nebulous matter, until arrested again, when it again will employ itself in contracting matter.

I must acknowledge my utter astonishment in hearing scholars argue that "force is indestructible; mind [soul] is force, therefore the soul is indestructible." With as much propriety can they argue that Matter is indestructible; the lion is matter; therefore the lion is indestructible. The force, or rather the forces that generate the soul [mind] are indestructible as forces, but not as soul, for it is an aggregation of forces that constitute a soul, and when these separate, as in death, the soul separates and ceases to be a whole, a thinking medium. Or is it demonstrated that the force will always move a plow that moves a plow to-day; or that the forces employed writing these pages will always write; or that the force that moves the earth, giving us light and life, will always do the same? Is not life to one what death is to another? Must not the plant and the animal die and give up their parts, in order that another plant, another animal, yes, even man may live? Does not the force die [when transmuted] the very moment it is born [when perceived]? As long as the plant or the animal lives its inherent forces and food are required to sustain its life and its thinking medium, but in death, when the body gives up its elements by a different method, the body and the mind are both deprived of their nourisher and sustainer. And man, when dead, is no more a person, a self, an ego, than the rubbish of a prostrated steeple is a steeple.

When speaking of matter being indestructible, it does not mean that we cannot destroy a house, but it means that the element, the atoms, of which it consists cannot be destroyed or annihilated, but that they can only be made to change their position, not their inherent qualities. Truly will the force busily employed this hour in producing sound reasoning live forever, but it will be impossible to live as a thinking medium after it has left its shell—after the machinery has become cold and motionless for want of fuel. For in the whole Universe there is no production that remains as such forever. Were matter capable of producing souls that could live forever, the time would approach when all matter would become souls, when there would be no earth, no moon, no Jupiter, no sun, no star, but all would be changed into souls, human (?) souls, singing "hallelujah unto the Lord!" Some have taxed their indestructible minds, with the question: "What becomes of the light that illuminates this side of the earth to-day?" That very light in connection with gravity, is the source of all force and soul, some of which is stored away into wood that grows in our forests, and into fruit that grows in our garden. Without light our earth would be deprived of all life.

George Stephens says: "The rays of the sun stored into earth thousands of years ago, move our machinery."

And mother sun still continues sending more, and our earth keeps packing it away, body, brain, soul, and all. But when we have received all our luminous benefactor can spare we will be called back again, body, brain, soul, and all, to assist in grinding, when a similar planet with similar beings might be reproduced.

If the reasoning faculty should live as such after the body is decayed, it must have lived before the body was born, but there is nothing that proves this. We can hardly detect a germ of thought in the babe, any more than in the brain of an animal. We only find a receptacle, a reservoir, an organ capable of storing up matter, which in years will think and develop reason in man, by taking nourishment. The force that prompts the young animal to find its mother's breast, is the same in quality that actuates the sucking infant. Both causes are alike and both effects and results the same. In one it is called instinct, in the other it is called soul. After severe toil our strength is exhausted, and if hungry, the mind is also weak, but as soon as nourishment is taken both body and mind are soon restored to their former usual condition, i. e., the parts, molecules, [forces] that left the body are replaced by new ones. The convalescent takes certain prescribed victuals in order to be strengthened. So we also see here the transmutation of force into muscle and mind.

So the soul grows gradually when fed, and dies gradually if deprived of its proper food. In fact, it dies every moment, while new molecules keep reviving it. The mind of a person who is left to starve will at first become stupid, and idiotic. His limbs will refuse to carry his body, and the mind will refuse to reason. Like a maniac he devours articles that will give him no strength. Taste has left him. All the other senses are deprived of their usual acuteness from want of matter in the body, and in the brain. Speech is the next part of the soul that leaves him, then sight and hearing, and at last he feels no more. The mind died by gradual steps, as it was born; body and soul both dead as an individual being.

Davenport, Iowa.

G. H. KRUSCHKE.

A FACE that is full of the expression of amiability is always beautiful. Cosmetics are superfluous for it. Rouge cannot improve the cheeks, nor lily-white mend its complexion. Its loveliness lies beyond all this. It is not the beauty that is but skin deep. For when you gaze in the face of a noble hearted man or woman, it is not the shape of the features you really see nor yet the tint of the cheek, the hue of the lip or the brilliance of the eye. You see the nameless something which animates all these, and leaves for your instinct a sense of graceful fascination; you see an indescribable embodiment of the heartfelt goodness within, which wins your regard in spite of external appearances, and defies all the critical rules of the aesthetic. Cultivate good nature, therefore. It is better than "apples of gold, in pictures of silver," for gold will take to itself wings and fly away, silver will tarnish in time, and both, when abundant, lose their comparative value; but good nature will never lose its worth—never abandons its possessor to the mental poverty or the esteem of the world. It is always in fashion, and in season. Everybody admires it. It costs little to acquire, and nothing to keep. It is beyond diamonds in its worth to its owners, and can neither be stolen nor lost, however neglected. Surely it is a jewel that merits protection.

THERE is dust on sea and land; in the valley, and on the mountain top; there is dust always and everywhere; the atmosphere is full of it; it penetrates the noisome dungeon, and visits the deepest, darkest caves of the earth; no palace door can shut it out, no drawer so secret as to escape its presence; every breath of wind dashes it upon the open eye, and yet that eye is not blinded, because there is a fountain of the blandest fluid in Nature incessantly emptying itself under the eyelid, which spreads it over the ball at every winking, and washes every atom of dust away. But this liquid, so mild, and so well adapted to the eye itself, has some acidity, which, under certain circumstances, becomes so decided as to be scalding to the skin, and would rot away the eyelids were it not that along the edges of them are little oily manufactories, which spread over their surface a coating, as impervious to the liquids necessary for keeping the eyeball washed clean as the best varnish is impervious to water.

Good words, like dew drops, fall silently; but who can tell their effects.

The road to ruin is always kept in good order, and those who travel it pay the expenses.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 27.

Great Jehovah, were not the persons who wrote thy book, the Bible, greatly at fault when they talked about the stars falling from heavens to the earth?

Are not all the stars that we can behold on a clear night many hundred times larger than this diminutive globe, and if one body was to be attracted to another, would not the earth be far more likely to fall to one of the stars than for the stars to fall to the earth? and would not the earth be far more likely to be attracted to the sun than to the far more distant stars?

Was not the writer of Genesis greatly in error when he said there was no rain upon the earth until after the existence of vegetation of all kinds? Could it hardly be possible for trees and plants to perfect themselves when there had never been a drop of rain upon the earth?

Do not geologists find abundance of proof by the impression of raindrops in both the Silurian and Devonian rocks which existed on the surface of the earth long before the earth produced any vegetation?

Is it not true that rains fell in immense quantities, and evaporated again rapidly when the surface of the earth and the surrounding atmosphere was at a high degree of heat, and this for thousands of years before there was a spear of grass, a tree, or a shrub growing upon the earth?

Did not the writer of Genesis have a very crude and imperfect idea of how the operation of rain is produced when he talked about "the fountains of the great deep being broken up," and "the windows of heaven being opened," that the water might descend?

Did he not think that heaven had a water-tight floor interspersed with windows, gates, or sluice-ways, which had to be opened when rain fell to the earth?

Could an ignorant Esquimaux or Hottentot have a much more childish and erroneous idea of the phenomenon of rain?

Were there not thousands of ages after the surface of the earth cooled so that the rocks crystalized or congealed before they oxidized or decomposed to make soils and to produce the conditions by which there could be any vegetation, and during all this time was there not abundance of rain on the earth?

Was not the writer of Genesis much mistaken when he said that grass, herbs and fruit-trees were created before the lower orders of animal life?

Do not geologists find proofs that cannot be disputed that the lower orders of life, such as the radiates, the mollusks and the polyparia, and these followed by fishes and reptiles existed before there were fruit-trees or even grass growing upon the earth?

Did not sea-weeds and other water plants grow for incalculable years before trees bearing seeds and fruits, or grass and flowers had an existence?

Do not all geologists agree that the lowest fossiliferous rocks yield only marine forms of vegetation and low down in the scale of organization?

Is there not a great discrepancy, too, in the statement that birds and fowls of all kinds came into existence at the same time with the lower orders of animal life, the jelly-fish, star-fish, the coral animals, clams, oysters and fishes?

Did not all these lower grades of animal life which exist in the water have an existence for a great length of time before birds, quadrupeds and mammals came upon the stage?

Was it not untrue, then, to say they were all created on the same day?

Is it not equally untrue that man was created on the same day with beasts, cattle and creeping things?

To the reverse of this, do not geologists find the remains of creeping things or reptiles as low as the time of the carboniferous period, while the signs of cattle are not found till the tertiary, which must have been long ages after, and did not man come into existence near the close of the tertiary period, possibly millions of years later than the advent of beasts and cattle?

Does not thy book teach that man first came into existence less than six thousand years ago? Is there not abundance of proof showing that the bones of the human race have been found in caves and under deposits, side by side with the bones of races of animals long since extinct, proving that man in a wild, savage state has lived on the earth twenty times as long as the Bible says he has lived here?

Is it not strictly true that there were many races of men in existence at the time when the Bible was written, and whose offspring have since continued to occupy the same portions of the earth with whom the Bible-writers had no acquaintance at all?

Is not the Bible nearly as defective in what it omits to state as in the incorrect details which it purports to give?

Does it make any allusion to the original highly-heated condition of the earth, of which there are so many positive proofs?

Is not the surface of the earth much cooler than when penetrated to the depth of a few hundred or a few thousand feet?

Is it not true that the temperature of the earth increases one degree to every fifty feet as we descend towards the center, and is it not highly probable that if two hundred miles could be penetrated everything would be found in a state of complete fusion?

Was not the surface of the earth during an immense period so hot that no organized life could possibly exist upon it?

Had the writers of the Bible the slightest idea of this state of things, and does not their silence upon the subject prove their utter ignorance of the facts?

Is not the Bible entirely silent upon the subject of the glacial period which scientific people find abundance of proof had a real existence, and that by the movement of vast bodies of ice immense rocks were moved great distances?

Does not the Bible ignore the vast changes that have taken place upon the surface of the earth—the changes in the bounds of the sea, the sinking of some islands and the rising of others?

Did not the Bible writers think the earth was permanent and unchangeable; that the bounds of the ocean were set, beyond which the waves could not pass?

Are there not large portions of our own country now covered with cities, villages, and productive farms, that were once below the surface of the sea?

Are not sea shells and other marine fossils now found in elevated grounds hundreds of feet above the level of the sea? Did the Bible writers know anything about the existence of the great American continent? and could they have had the necessary information to write an intelligent history of this globe while totally ignorant of the existence of more than half of it?

Were not the writers of the Bible ignorant of the character of many of the phenomena of nature? Did they understand the causes of eclipses? Did they know the causes of the changing of the seasons?

Did they have correct ideas of the nature and origin of the rainbow? Is it true that the first rainbow appeared about four thousand years ago? Is it not a perfectly natural phenomenon produced by the rays of the sun falling upon mist or descending rain? and has not the bow been produced for four hundred thousand years—as long as there has been a sun to shine and water to fall in rain?

Were not those writers ignorant of the existence of volcanoes, of burning mountains, and of the causes and nature of earthquakes?

Is it not a crude and incorrect idea that thou didst become weary with labor and wert under the necessity of abstaining from labor that thou mightest rest and be refreshed?

Who conducted the operations of the Universe whilst thou wert resting? Who caused the earth to revolve daily on its axis and to keep up its steady yearly course around the sun? Couldst thou do this and abstain from labor at the same time?

Is not the story of the Flood untruthful in many respects? Is it true that thou couldst get so angry at the thousands of persons thou hadst brought into existence that thou wouldst wish to drown them, together with great numbers of innocent and helpless animals?

Is it true that all the water that exists in connection with the earth is sufficient to rise to the tops of the highest mountains—thirty thousand feet, or more than five miles in depth?

Is it not correctly estimated by scientific men that all the moisture the atmosphere is capable of carrying would not amount to water enough to make more than one foot in depth over the entire earth?

Where, then, did all the water come from to reach an altitude of five miles? and where could it all go when dry land appeared?

Is it true that a vessel or ark five hundred and fifty feet long, ninety-one feet wide, and fifty-five feet high, could contain seven of every kind of bird and seven or two of every kind of animal and insect, together with the food to sustain them over a year?

As at the present time there are known to be 6,266 distinct varieties of birds, seven of each would be 43,852; of beasts over 5,000; reptiles nearly 1,000; of snails, etc., more than 9,000, and of insects 1,500,000—taking them in pairs as commanded, would it be possible for all this mass of animated life, with a year's supply of food, to be packed in such a vessel?

Could Noah and his family have gathered all these varieties from the various zones, continents, and islands of the earth, though they had worked centuries at it, and none of the animals or insects had died while being thus gathered together?

Or are we to understand that thou movedst upon the minds or organizations of the nearly three millions of animals, little and big, to induce them to march up to Noah from all parts of the globe for the purpose of taking a sea voyage to "be saved"?

Would it be possible for that great aggregate of diversified animal life stowed into that ark at the rate of 120 animals, insects, etc., to the square yard to live for three hours shut up in that vessel pitched without and within, and with but one door and window, and those closed?

Would it have been possible for old Noah, Mrs. Noah, their four sons and their wives to take care of that numerous family, each of the ten persons having over 200,000 birds, animals, and reptiles, and insects to look after?

Must not the stench of all those wild animals, reptiles, etc., thus so closely and compactly confined have been terrible in the extreme? Was not the accumulation of the dung a pretty big affair in the course of thirteen months? Was it not a pretty hard task for Noah and his family to put up with it all for so long a time?

Would it not have required two or three arks of the size occupied to hold the food alone for such a great number of animals? Was it not difficult to supply such animals as lived upon the flesh of other animals, that required fresh leaves altogether, that required ants, worms, bugs, insects of all kinds, and even honey? Where were the supplies obtained?

Did not the animals require their daily food in the ark as well as elsewhere?

Did not the food have to be provided in advance, or didst thou perform a miracle every day, and extemporize all the various kinds of food the animals needed?

Would it not have taken hundreds of men a long time to gather, cure and store in the ark all the different kinds of food those animals required?

Did not the soaking of the roots of the trees and of all kinds of vegetation, for a year or more, completely drown them out so that thou wert under the necessity of re-creating all kinds of trees, shrubs, and plants? Should not two of each kind of trees and plants have been taken into the ark as well as the animals? Would not a year under water be as fatal to vegetable as to animal life?

As the top of Mount Ararat, where the ark is said to have rested, is about 17,000 feet above the level of the sea and 5,000 feet above the line of perpetual snow and ice, was not the cold intense enough at that high altitude to have destroyed a large portion of the animals in the ark before they could possibly have descended where the temperature was mild? How could the animals of the torrid zone possibly have stood such an extreme degree of cold?

What, again, did that vast number of animals, birds, and insects, find to live upon when they emerged from the ark and when all animal and vegetable life had been destroyed upon the face of the earth? Would not great numbers inevitably have starved to death?

Are there not altogether too many utter impossibilities connected with the "Flood Story" for any such state of things ever to have happened or for thee to ever have engaged in writing such an untruthful narrative?

It is not probably an old legend that was handed down from early days of ignorance, and is it not far more likely that no such events ever occurred, or that thou ever employedst thyself in dictating to anybody such a tissue of impossibilities and falsehoods?

Is a book made up of such wild vagaries and untruthful stories worthy the consideration, veneration, and belief of intelligent people in this enlightened age of the world? and is it not far better for rational, reasoning beings to examine what they are called upon to believe, rather than to gulp down every kind of false and ridiculous story that may be handed down from past ages of the world?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

"The Wonders of Prayer."

A 12mo volume of 408 pages, bearing the above title—Henry T. Williams, author and publisher, of this city—has been sent us for examination and notice. It is a rich volume for this age of the world, giving over four hundred instances in which prayers of a great variety of kinds have received direct answers. If this book is to be believed, there is no necessity for a man or woman going hungry, having empty pocket-books, being in debt, wearing poor clothes, or poor boots and shoes. All that is necessary is to go to God or Jesus with these little wants, and they will be promptly supplied. Among the many requests granted in answer to prayer we notice, in running over the volume, are the following: Four dollars in cash, preservation from lightning, a horse, a wife, peace in a quarrelsome church, supplies for a minister's family, a servant, $18.75, a bag of flour, a good supper, $200, $50, $90, a good home, recovery from sickness, the paying of rent, healing a child, money to pay railroad fare, the life of a child, a lost thimble, $25, a new hat (old hat not mentioned), money to pay postage, a spring-mattress, healing Mary Theobald, a locomotive controlled, $25, a cow, exactly $80, conversion of a sinner, rescued from shipwreck, winning a lawsuit, a wagon-load of wood, a stolen sleigh returned, a new coat, calming the wind, insanity cured, suicide prevented, a sackful of potatoes and some corned-beef, another load of wood, compelling an unwilling debtor to pay up, a pair of boots, cure of spinal disease, under-garments, cure effected for heart and brain diseases, wood and flour, a pair of shoes, $5 in cash, interest on a mortgage, taste for tobacco removed, another $5, $3, another barrel of flour, a pound of tea, a lost pocket book, small-pox cured, sight to the blind—several cases,—baked meat and garden stuff, help to get a lesson, rain produced, relief in business, a skeptic overpowered, an infidel converted, lost religion regained, employment furnished, a drunkard of thirty years cured, food to a hungry person, etc., etc.

How strange it is that simple-minded, infatuated people in this enlightened age of the world should entertain the idea that the Ruling Power of the Universe is changed and influenced by the supplications that are constantly being offered up to him from millions of persons and in millions of different places, and thus be persuaded to do things which would never otherwise be accomplished! Can they think there is an intelligent, overruling Being who controls all things and yet is so ignorant or inattentive to the affairs of this world that he requires to be informed of what is necessary for him to do, and that he will feel disinclined to perform such easy acts and duties until begged and importuned to do so?

How partial and unjust they also make their God to be! While some by offering up perhaps a single petition obtain a new coat, a pair of boots, a bag of potatoes, a load of wood, a sewing-machine, or $18.75 in money, other poor starving wretches cry out day after day, and far more piteously and earnestly, and not the slightest attention is paid to their supplications. Take this city alone; there are hundreds, yes thousands of poor widows here who have no means of obtaining the food necessary to sustain the life of themselves and their little children, save by the mere pittance they receive for sewing and similar half-paid labor, which is often impossible for them to procure! How in their famishing want they cry to the God of mercies and loving kindness to send them food for themselves and their starving little ones, and though they cry never so piteously and fervently, not the least attention is paid to their cries. And so it is all over this great country and all over the world; millions upon millions of such grief-laden prayers are offered up to the throne of mercy, and without a response ever being received.

What vast numbers of shipwrecked mariners have floated upon the surface of the ocean in open boats and on improvised rafts, devoid of food and water, suffering the pangs of starvation, until in many instances they have resorted to the terrible expedient of drawing lots to see which of the unfortunate number should be put to death to serve as food for his companions, and this continued till but one of the original number was left. How have these poor, starving beings cried to heaven and prayed most fervently that food might be sent them, that some friendly sail might heave in sight and bring them succor and life; and O! how often have they prayed in vain. This fearful experience has been repeated hundreds and thousands of times.

How many millions of sick chambers, with fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, languishing with mortal disease, have resounded with the most fervent prayers that the suffering ones might be spared and be restored to good health again; but in what a vast proportion of these cases have no answers been received! No response given! Not the least indication that the prayers were heard!

Not very many years ago, over three thousand devout worshippers gathered in a church in a South American town to do pious honor to some distinguished occasion, when some of the combustible ornamentations of the church by accident caught fire, and in a few moments the whole edifice was wrapt in flames, and the frantic audience rushed for the doors, completely blocking them up, cutting off all possible means of escape. What moments of acutest agony! How the imprisoned sufferers cried to heaven for aid! How they implored God for mercy! But how were their prayers answered? Over two thousand men, women, and children were burned alive, and when within a few feet of life and safety! If prayers are answered, why were not these? Were they not earnest? Were not the sufferers engaged in a laudable occupation? Was it not a splendid opportunity for the Answerer of prayer to show his power and goodness had he had the slightest wish to do so? Could a being of kindness and mercy placidly hear those cries and shrieks, and not move a muscle to save one of the agonized wretches?

How often have similar catastrophes been enacted in other parts of the world—one in a church at Holyoke, Mass., and several times in this city, when the most earnest and piteous prayers were offered up, and not the least attention paid to them. When poor mortals most need the help of an invisible power, the gods appear to be least willing or able to come to their relief.

How many tornadoes, hurricanes and cyclones have devastated the earth, and how many thousands by these terrible forces have been remorselessly hurried into the unknown world, and how little prayers, cries, and supplications have done to prevent them! How many times have earthquakes shaken the surface of the earth and thrown down dwellings, towns, and cities, causing great numbers of deaths. An instance of this kind has just occurred in South America, by which nearly a thousand lives have been destroyed, and millions upon millions of dollars' worth of property lost. How little the most humble and earnest supplications did to prevent all this!

How frequently have famine and grim want and starvation stalked over this fair earth! How often have the failure of crops, wars, and destructive storms deprived the inhabitants of food necessary to sustain life? Millions upon millions have thus been made to experience the most bitter deaths known to mankind. India passed through this last year, and at the present time it is peaceful China that is the sufferer. The utmost want and destitution prevail. Thousands have already starved to death and thousands upon thousands more must meet the same inexorable fate. Think of the millions of most piteous prayers that have been offered up for succor, but O! with how little effect!

How often have pestilence and contagion prevailed among earth's inhabitants, sweeping thousands and millions to untimely graves. Imagine for a moment the helplessness, the suffering and destitution that disease has caused among men. Think of the prayers without number, the piteous moans and the heart-rending cries from billions of unhappy beings that have gone up to the imaginary great and good God of mercy for aid and relief, for even a temporary release from pain and suffering, that never were answered nor noticed in the slightest degree. The unchangeable laws of nature have had their rule, and causes in all cases have produced their inevitable results. If in all these numberless instances, and millions upon millions more, where the deepest and most earnest prayers have not in the faintest degree been noticed, how idle to talk about "a new hat," "a cow," "a pair of boots," "a sewing-machine," "a bag of potatoes," "a load of wood," or "$18.75" being directly sent for the simple asking. Can it be thought that the Father of Mercies can be equally kind and just to all when he so promptly answers now and then the most frivolous prayers that can be imagined and leaves quintillions of the most earnest appeals totally disregarded? Can it even be thought that the Merciful Father is all kindness and sympathy and love, who not only sees but causes the immense and incomputable amount of sorrow, suffering, misery, want, and unhappiness that exists, and has existed, will want to be importuned and entreated before he will deign to move a finger in mercy, and then in the merest fractional number of cases?

Think for a moment of the countless numbers of prayers that for eighteen centuries have been offered up by Christendom for the conversion of the Jews—the old chosen people of God—to Christianity, and how meagre has been the result.

Verily if a small volume can be made up of instances where it is imagined that prayers for trivial objects have been granted, millions upon millions of volumes could be filled with the most earnest, fervent, heartfelt prayers that have for thousands of years been sent up to the throne of loving mercy which have never received the slightest recognition.

If the author of the book alluded to, prayerful Mr. Williams, will give satisfactory security that he or any other individual can procure answers to such prayers as may be indicated, we will gladly pay him $10,000 or even $100,000 per year for his services. But probably if he prayed for big nuggets of gold to fall from the moon, that prayer would be as effective as any.

Men are learning that, in the language of Theodore Parker, "The only effective prayer is effort." Frederick Douglass has precisely the right estimate of prayer. Born and reared a slave, his soul earnestly yearned for freedom, and he prayed for it with all the earnestness of his nature, but in looking back to those times, he says the only prayer that availed anything was the prayer he made with his legs. If we wish certain results accomplished, let us go to work like men and remove the obstructing causes and impediments. Let us do, and bravely do, all that is possible to be done, and cease our inane cries to unseen and non-existent deities for impossibilities to be performed. The gods have done very little for man. He has had and still has his work to do for himself.

How weak and puerile it would be in the inhabitants of this great city to pray that contagion might be stayed and disease and death be removed from our midst, while we suffered the vilest stench and reeking filth—the very sources of malaria and miasma—to pervade our streets, areas and dwellings. Let us learn to be men and women of common sense. Let us discontinue idle gibberish and meaningless mumblings and be intelligent beings. Let us do our duty and cease asking imaginary gods up in the sky to do it for us. Let us give up superstition, and in its place let us cherish science, reason and well-directed effort.

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

This volume is now ready to send out to those who wish a copy. We have forwarded copies to those who have ordered them, but we must confess that the number is much less than we could wish. The work contains some five forms, constitutions, by-laws, etc., for organization, fourteen forms of invocation, eight forms for the marriage service, one for the naming of infants, twelve for funeral service, six for obituary notices, fifteen epitaphs, three forms for benedictions, three for wills, thirty-six sentiments and toasts, five hundred and twenty-five Liberal and Spiritual Hymns, nine doxologies, and twenty-seven choice poetical selections for Recitations.

There has long been a need of a work of this kind. It has been gotten up with much expense and labor, and we would be glad if our friends would appreciate it enough to avail themselves of it. It is furnished very low—at less than cost, in fact—seventy-five cents, post-paid, for nearly six hundred pages, and this to induce a general use and a large circulation. Those persons who are afraid to risk their little seventy-five cents for such a work, will of course be very cautious about ordering. Still we would be glad to send out a thousand or two more copies, and wish there were not so many of our friends disinclined to have it.

Christian Councils.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say a few words through your truth-loving and truth-proclaiming sheet upon Bible history. There is great and wide-spread ignorance in regard to the times and the councils pronouncing decisions upon sacred plenary or canonical characters of the Bible. I am not far from the truth when I say there is not more than one in a thousand of its worshippers who possesses a correct idea of its formation, and the numerous councils and synods' decrees by which its divine authenticity has been sought to bind the consciences of men. And as most persons have not the time, means, nor disposition to go into extensive research on this question, I wish to present a correct statement of dates of councils, their objects and decisions. There is a prevalent error as to the objects of the first Nicene Council under Constantine the Great, so-called. This occurred A. D. 325 to settle the Arian controversy. Arius and Alexander were bishops of Alexandria in Egypt. The former denied the eternity and Godhead of Jesus, and Alexander affirmed. The controversy was acrid and persistent, and after several years was liable to rend the Church to fragments. Constantine was appealed to to allay the excitement, and by his order a council of bishops was summoned to meet at Nicea, in the Roman Province of Bithynia, about sixty miles south-east of the sea of Marmora in Asia Minor. There were three hundred and eighteen bishops convened. Constantine presided over their discussions. And as he had but recently espoused the Christian cause and wished to triumph over pagan religion he used his best diplomacy to amicably adjust differences. There was heated controversy, and hard names and recrimination were freely used. Trinitarians triumphed and Arius was banished to Illicum with several bishops of his party. The council of Laodicea, 363 A. D., accepted Origen's list of sacred books presented for their acceptance, viz., all the Hebrew books and the Apocryphal Baruch (the old Testament compiled by Ezra, 547 years B. C.) of which books Athanasius rejected Esther. The council of Carthage, 375 A. D., adopted the list presented by Augustine, viz: all the Hebrew books, Tobit, Wisdom of Solomon, Ecclesiasticus, and first and second book of Maccabees. Jerome rejected the Apocryphal books as not inspired. Please note that there is no mention made of the New Testament authors yet.

The council of Constantinople, 381 A. D., met by order of Theodosius to confirm the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. The council of Hippo, 393 A. D., decreed that the books under the new or Christian régime should be as follows: New Testament, four gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Acts, 13 Epistles of Paul; 1 to the Hebrews; 2 of Peter; 3 of John; 1 of Jude, and the apocalypses of John. The council of Carthage, 397 A. D., adopted the same list as those of Hippo, preceding, except designating fourteen Epistles of Paul, that to the Hebrews included. About A. D. 400, Pope Innocent I confirmed this catalogue of sacred books by a decree, which finally decided the canon of the Latin or Roman Church. At some of the councils, pride, domination, ignorance, and high-handed ruffianism were conspicuous. The council of Ephesus, A. D. 431, met to condemn the Nestorian heresy; the council of Chalcedon, 451 A. D., by Emperor Marcian in Bithynia to assert the divinity of Christ against the growing doctrines of Arius, and the one under Justinian at Constantinople, 553 A. D., to protest against the doctrines of Origen, Arius, etc. Another was held under Constantine IV., 681 A. D.; another at Nicea, 787 A. D., under the Empress Irene to establish the worship of images; another at Frankfort, called the Synod of Charlemagne, to overthrow image-worship, 794 A. D.; another by Emperor Basilus at Constantinople, 870 A. D.

All these councils were called and presided over by the then reigning emperors. Besides the Eastern councils there were ten Western, under the rules of the Latin and Roman Catholic Church and continued at various periods until the last Ecumenical council at Rome in 1870. Arius was in exile eleven years, and on his restoration Alexander, the religious foe of Arius, was banished into exile twenty years. Notwithstanding the Trinitarian struggles against Arianism it continued to greatly augment and many able bishops were drawn to it, so that soon after the first Nicene council 250 Arian bishops held a council at Nicodemia. Thus early Unitarians sought to establish the one-God idea. As one result of their deliberations, they sent letters to all the bishops in the Christian Church entreating them not to exclude the friends of Arius from their communion and requesting them to intercede with Alexander, that he would not do so. They being as good as the Trinitarians, they believed they should enjoy the rites of the church, but were excluded. Alexander was a metropolitan bishop, and recognized as Pope, but Popery did not become established until A. D. 700, under the tyrant Phocas. Bishops were called Popes 350 years previously. Another council of Arian bishops met, A. D. 330, at Antioch, another at Constantinople, A. D. 356, but as Trinitarians held sway at different periods, with persecutions and carnage, and a disposition to wipe out all traces of historic records appertaining to the learning, struggles and triumphs of the party they had not the goodness to tolerate, their records have perished 'mid gibbet, smoke, and flame.

Thus has the prestige and influence of the Bible been stamped by ignorant and bigoted Latin councils, thence passed into Protestantism as the offshoot of that old mother of harlots and abominations, and rests to-day like a leaden weight upon the naturally elastic, hopeful and investigating mind of the nineteenth century, and makes possible such men as Moody and Sankey, Talmage, etc., with their old stupid and barbarous notions of the fall of man, vicarious atonement, total depravity, forgiveness of sins, etc., with an army of 63,000 priests to perform before the altar of superstition such pranks in sight of high heaven as make the angels blush and avert their faces at the ignorance and stupidity of man. Never can the race rise to its destined height of enlightened reason, common sense, refinement, love and lofty endeavor while this terrible weight like a hideous nightmare frightens and crushes the souls of men. Then pound away friend Bennett, at these hoary walls of ignorance and bigotry. The sun-God is climbing the eastern hills, the invincible squadron of truth and reason are rapidly sweeping into line, and old medicine, old theology, and old superstition will die. The stalwart sons of truth will give them decent burial, and drop a manly tear on their graves, and with souls aglow with light and love to reconstruct society will proffer to the race the Religion of Science. As authority for the above brief synopsis of dates consult Mosheim, Watson, Clark, Neander, and Dean Dudley, the latter a small work giving the history of the council of Nice. Price $1.00.

Mungerville, Mich., April 4, 1877.

D. HIGBIE, M. D.

Breaking the Sabbath.

The following sensible remarks on the Sabbath are from the Saturday Review, one of the best of the English periodicals:

If Friday fasting has always been regarded as a distinctive mark of Papists and Popish-minded persons, the strict observance of "the Sabbath" is considered no less characteristic of sound Protestants. Yet it seems strange at first sight that those who inveigh so fiercely against the superstitious observance of "days, and months, and times, and years"—in which catalogue St. Paul unquestionably included the superstitious observance of the Sabbath—should cling with such rigid pertinacity themselves to the keeping of a particular day, which, after all, is not the Sabbath. We will not undertake to say whether the usage in question is or is not "a fond thing vainly invented;" but an invention it certainly is, and an invention of very late date. If those who maintain the observance of fasts and festivals are fairly charged, as they often are charged, with "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men," they can at least plead in their defense a tradition of eighteen centuries. But the Sabbatarian tradition is little more than two centuries old. It derives as little countenance from the fathers of "the Blessed Reformation," English or foreign, as from the fathers of the primitive Church. The Confession of Augsburg expressly condemns it; Cranmer, in accordance with his general Erastianism, calls the observance "a mere appointment of the magistrate;" even the Puritanical Calvin used to play at bowls on Sunday at Geneva. And to this day the countrymen and co-religionists of Luther and Calvin have nothing in common in this respect with their English and Scotch followers.

The "Continental Sunday," which Protestants are so fond of denouncing, is really characteristic of Protestant more than of Catholic countries, so much so, indeed, that the measure of influence exercised by the Church may usually be gauged in a foreign city by noting what proportion of the shops are kept open. Thus, at Munich and Lucerne they are closed; in Paris only very partially so; at Berlin and Zurich they are open. The Sabbatarian view is an invention, not of the sixteenth century but the seventeenth, when the Puritans so fiercely railed at "the Impious Book of Sports" issued by authority of Charles I. and Laud, and contrived under Charles II. to secure the passing of what Lord Shaftesbury has designated "the most remarkable and one of the most valuable acts on the statute-book." Baxter displayed his wonted moderation in saying—what is perfectly true—that "from and in the Apostles' days the Churches everywhere agreed in the holy use of it [Sunday] as a separated day." But a very brief retrospect will suffice to show that their agreement was far from covering the modern Protestant estimate of the day. In the New Testament there is no injunction on the subject, and the Sabbath is never spoken of there, any more than by ecclesiastical writers, except as a purely Jewish ordinance. But it may be gathered from scattered intimations, especially with the light reflected on them from later tradition, that the first day of the week, which is called in one passage "the Lord's day," had already begun to be observed in memory of the resurrection by the celebration of the Eucharist. The Sabbath, or Saturday, was, indeed, also kept holy in many churches by fasting and religious services, not at all in connection with the defunct Jewish law, but in memory of the burial of our Lord, just as Wednesday and Friday are kept in honor of the betrayal and the passion. When, after the conversion of Constantine, Christian institutions first received the recognition of the State, an edict was issued enjoining the cessation of all judicial business, military exercises, and ordinary labor on "the venerable day of the sun," excepting only agricultural work on account of the uncertainties of the weather. This was confirmed in the year 386 by an enactment of Theodosius, which also prohibited public spectacles on Sunday. Similar regulations had been made by the Council of Laodicea some years earlier, enjoining Christians to abstain from worldly business on Sunday and to attend the mass.

But as regards theatrical entertainments, it must be remembered that these had all along been forbidden Christians, not on one day of the week, but on all days, on account of their idolatrous and licentious character. When, after the lapse of several centuries, sacred dramas began to be introduced into Christian practice, they were usually performed in churches and on Sundays or festivals. For medieval usage, while enforcing the abstinence from "servile work"—and that no doubt partly, and very rightly, in the interests of the serfs and laboring classes—always favored Sunday amusements. The day was treated as the weekly festival of the people, combining recreation with religious worship, which last was itself a kind of recreation and helped to add something of brightness to their dull and monotonous lives. Charlemagne renewed in his Capitularies the civil enactments of the Roman Emperors about the observance of Sunday, and many later Councils confirmed or supplemented the canons of Laodicea on the subject. The same end was promoted by the wide circulation and belief of stories of miraculous penalties, of disease or death, which had befallen those who profaned the day, many of which may be read in St. Gregory of Tours' work De Miraculis. Of course St. Gregory did not talk about "Sabbath breakers," but these legends remind one strongly of the popular tales of modern evangelical tract-writers about the awful judgments—miraculous in all but the name—which came upon Tom the poacher, or Jim the burglar, who began by playing truant from Sabbath-school, and rapidly advanced with the fatality of a judicial process from his boyish neglect of the Fourth Commandment to the gallows.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

SEATTLE, W. T., May 20, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Brother: It affords me pleasure to say—and will no doubt be of interest to the many readers of your paper on this coast—that, preparatory to my contemplated trip East, I will visit, for the third time within three years, the various points in British Columbia, Washington Territory, and Oregon.

I have finished my work in Victoria for this year. I lectured eight consecutive nights to large audiences. The people here are alive and generous in their support of Free-thought. They have organized, and have a hall of their own. I was the guest of James Fell, who is a great big man, body and soul—a fine specimen of English generosity and hospitality—and who made me feel perfectly at home in his family. My thanks are due also to Captain Walker, Mr. Duck, and others, for kind support. When I presented the claims of THE TRUTH SEEKER here one year ago I found only one subscriber. I now have eleven names with the coin ($22.00) to send for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The people of Victoria are much exercised over the attitude of the Catholic Bishop of British Columbia relating to the free school system of the country. This Bishop, in a recent sermon, denounced in unmeasured terms our school system as a hot-bed of corruption, and our educators as slaughterers of innocence, reserving his special curse for mixed schools where both sexes are educated together.

I could not help thinking what a pity that God should have made woman at all, since she has been the reputed cause of so much sorrow in this world. What a crown of shame Christianity, the mother of abominations, has placed upon the brow of woman, and yet to-day she finds her warmest support from the willing hearts and hands of woman; and will, until woman is redeemed from superstition and ceases to be the property of priests.

This opportunity to sow the seed of reformatory thought was too good to be lost, hence I devoted the opening lecture of my course here to Romanism as Free Schools and a review of the discourse by the learned Bishop; showing the attitude of the Mother Church against our free institutions, not only our schools but the government which gives them protection. What an enemy is this which permeates with its deadly virus the whole land, and has the unmitigated effrontery to charge our school system as the source of wide-spread immoralities! She, the head and front of physical and moral degradation in all the past, with the blood of millions on her hands, claiming to be the foster-parent of education and the conservator of good morals! A devil whitewashed into an angel of light! She, "Satan rebuking sin," with a priesthood living, or professing to live, in such an unnatural condition as celibacy, with an army of miserable recluse women trampling upon their own crown and the glory of their own sex, maternity; hiding themselves away in the darkness of convent life under the pretext of nearness to God! Could the veil of darkness resting over the cess-pools of the nunneries be lifted, as in the case of Maria Monk and others who have escaped from the toils of this damnable system, the light of day might reveal in reality the evidences of slaughtered innocents and debased womanhood. What a record has she upon which to claim the right to confess our wives and daughters and educate our children!

I am not only surprised but indignant that Protestants, knowing the character of this insidious foe to natural human freedom, should patronize Catholic schools, placing the dear children under the constant fire of superstition where they cannot turn the eye where it does not rest on a Catholic emblem or the black garb of this unnatural sisterhood, or the ear where it does not catch the sound of prayers and mummeries for Christ's sake. Let parents beware of this deadly upas of sin that is spreading its influence over the country.

Many Protestants claim justification on the ground that Catholic schools are more secure and give better protection to their daughters from contaminating influences incident to mixed schools.

To me it seems like straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. It is not a safeguard to virtue, nor the road to true character nor well-rounded womanhood or manhood, that the sexes should be separated at any period of education or discipline from the cradle to the grave. To have the girl away from the opposite sex is to lessen the chances of true virtue and build up a weak character all the more incapable of resisting evil when they do formally enter society, simply from ignorance of their true relation to the opposite sex. It seems to me that true character is to be built up in the presence of temptation, else there is a sad defect in the economy of nature. Self-respect cannot be taught best in schools where the sexes are separated.

Education must begin in the family, and the school should be but a continuation of development. If parents will instruct their children early in life about many things which are usually hidden from them until too late, and not leave so much for the school-teacher to do, social disorder would be greatly mitigated.

It is said, "Familiarity breeds contempt." But I believe a greater familiarity between the sexes in early life, with proper instructions of the true nature of all the functions of body and mind, infusing into the minds of the young the dignity and sacredness of incipient manhood and womanhood, would tend toward social order. Forbidden fruit carries with it the greatest temptation, and undue repression has also its evils lurking beneath the saintly garb of Mrs. Grundy, who will have it that social intercourse between the sexes must mean marriage or mischief. Hence, she says, watch them! How much better to properly instruct them and then trust them, as watching implies suspicion, and tends to make liars and thieves of our children. There must be a ground for kind and tender friendship between the sexes without a view to marriage, as there is a large number of young people who are not physically adapted for the marriage relation, who may be refined and blessed through proper social relations.

Our school system is the crown and glory of our country, and, although incomplete, is our only safeguard to liberty and progressive life.

After leaving Victoria I gave six lectures at Port Townsend, a beautiful spot, and port of entry for Puget Sound. My thanks are due to Bro. Hastings and family; also, to our friends Learned and Hunt for kindness and support in our work.

My work at Seattle has been attended with marked success—have given ten lectures to large audiences of the best thinkers in the city. This is highly gratifying, as the churches here have kept up one continuous blast ever since my last visit, one year ago.

I leave Seattle with kindly regards for all, and many thanks to our friends Booth, Crane, and Mrs. Yosler, for many expressions of kindness to me during my stay here.

Puget Sound is one of the most beautiful bodies of water in the world, interspersed with islands deeply wooded to the water's edge with living green grateful to the sight, and especially so to new-comers from portions of the East where wood and lumber are scarce. I thought I had seen large saw-mills in Michigan, but they are babies compared with these huge machines for cutting lumber, some of which is 120 feet in length, clear of seam or knot.

What a store-house Nature has prepared of wood and coal! Enough for many generations to come, if avaricious greed does not monopolize and waste the common heritage of man.

I go from here to Astoria and Portland, and from thence home, as I hope to start East about the first of July, speaking at various points on my way to Chicago, and will be glad to respond to any calls to lecture at any intermediate points between San Francisco and Detroit, on various topics embraced in the Gospel of Nature.

Dr. J. L. YORK.

Importuning Heaven.

OFFICE OF The World, PRINCETON, MASS., June 11, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: So your "Interrogatories to Jehovah" are to continue two months yet, which will make the prayer thirty-five weeks long! This is going, in Moody's phrase, into "grips with God," into a divine "wrestle," at a length which may seriously damage the object of your devotions. I do not like to interfere, but private advices from heaven indicate that the terrific pile of tough conundrums which you have thrown into that "prayer" have so taxed the wits of Jehovah that his health is giving way under the tremendous task of answering them. Besides, you have so monopolized Jehovah's attention that he has had no time or strength to answer other people's prayers, even to help Moody through with his revival job in Boston; hence its failure. I beg you to be merciful, for even "Infidels" desire to see enough left of God to recreate at some Long Branch in Andrew Jackson Davis' "SUMMER LAND!" and to go permanently into Winter quarters in Moody's "HELL!"

Beseechingly yours, E. H. HEYWOOD.

REPLY.—Well, Bro. Heywood, possibly we are a trifle too hard upon Jehovah, but his servants, the clergy, tell us he delights to be entreated of, and that he commands us to go to him with all our wants; so as there happens to be a good many things we want to know about, we just thought we would make a business of it, and finish up the job. We will, however, be done with him after a little, and will give you and all our other pious friends a chance to commune with him. We really hope our enquiries have not so disconcerted him that you cannot secure a respectable hearing.—ED. T. S.

Right and Wrong.

YREKA, CAL., May 26, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: I would own it in advance, it's hardly my "put in," in this case, yet it's so seldom I have a show to disagree with you, that when I have one I should not fail to let you know it. You say in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 12th inst., in reply to Mr. Thomas Robinson, that right is only "relatively so"; that what is right to-day may be wrong to-morrow, etc.; and by way of illustration, say it's not right to kill a neighbor's dog; but if the dog becomes rabid, and the danger of the community is apparent, it's right to kill him; also, if a raging fire is consuming a town, and the authorities decide it's impossible to arrest the fire without blowing up a house, it's right to blow it up. Now, sir, I differ with you in both these cases. It cannot be strictly right to either kill the dog or burn the house, though we admit it's highly expedient to do both. Things are often expedient that are not right within themselves, and conditions can do a great deal, but can't change wrong to right, or right to wrong.

I will suppose a case, if you please: A famine exists in a certain country. In a town of some hundred inhabitants in that country lives a certain miser, with his iron-bound, safely hoarded treasure. He refuses to give the smallest part thereof to relieve and save the hundreds of famishing men, women and children by whom he is surrounded. They implore, entreat, threaten and curse him by turns, and to no purpose. Finally they only succeed in getting possession of his treasure by taking his life. With this treasure they procure food and live. But consider a moment. Did they do right in killing that miser? Who can say yes? None! But all can readily say that they did that which was unquestionably expedient. Hence I maintain that "right is always right, and wrong is always wrong." Whatever agrees with Nature's laws is right, and whatever disagrees with them is wrong. This gives us a datum from which to reckon. T. M. KELLY.

REPLY.—Friend Kelly is both right and wrong. Right in maintaining that the great principle of right is always right. Wrong in insisting that what is wrong at one time may not be right at another. In one sense right is as unchangeable as a strictly perpendicular line, or a true level. In another sense it is to a certain degree conventional. Among the meanings of right, according to Webster, are, "suitable," "proper," "becoming," "most favorable," "convenient," "well placed," "orderly," "well regulated." According to our views it is right to pursue that course which confers the greatest good upon the greatest number, and wrong to do that which entails the greatest unhappiness upon the greatest number. If the miser by greed and oppression had accumulated a large amount of treasure, and that treasure alone could save the lives of thousands, it would be right to take it; and if a life, even, had to be sacrificed to save the lives of thousands, it would be right to take that life. "The greatest good to the greatest number," is a good rule to be governed by.—ED. T. S.

SALAMANCA, JUNE 5, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: The friends of human progress held their 29th yearly meeting near Waterloo, last Saturday and Sunday. It was a large, earnest, and interesting meeting, and was addressed by Stebbins of Detroit, Taylor of Buffalo, Harter of Auburn, Green of Salamanca, and others. Not less than six hundred people were present. It was a season long to be remembered by the lovers of Free-thought and progress. I am pleased to inform the readers of your paper that at this meeting arrangements were made to hold a three-day's grove-meeting near Cosad's Liberal Hall near Wolcott, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, the 17, 18, and 19th of August next. The speakers invited are Brown of Binghamton, Mills of Syracuse, Stebbins of Detroit, Harter of Auburn, and Green of Salamanca. Mr. Cosad and his friends are making arrangements for a large gathering. An effort will be made to organize the Free-thinkers of Central and Western New York. FREETHINKER.

GEORGE P. ROWELL & Co. deserve the best thanks of the advertising community for their efforts to prevent advertisers from being imposed on by unscrupulous publishers. Every honest publisher will also thank them for the aid they have afforded them in maintaining their competition for business by fair means, against the fraudulent practices of dishonest rivals. Messrs. Rowell & Co., alone of Newspaper Directory publishers, have had the courage to undertake the task of discriminating among the statements of newspapers, and to face the hostility which such a course was sure to excite among those who profited by misrepresentation. Notwithstanding the "crushing" articles that from time to time have been hurled at them, sometimes by parties who ought to have known better, they have persevered in their course, and they have had their reward. Their publication has taken the first place as the standard authority among American Newspaper Directories, and a reference book for every large advertiser and advertising agency in this country.—Jersey City Journal, May 22, 1877. It

Friendly Correspondence.

A. S. KINSEY, Gervais, Or., writes: I have been a subscriber from the first number of your paper, and kept every copy of it till I moved here from Iowa, when I scattered them all along the way. Since I came here I distributed the remainder of them. I kept about fifty copies of the paper, besides an assortment of your books, lying on the ear seat, and as our train had about seven hundred passengers and was ten days on the road, you see I had a good chance for missionary work. "Dirty," "blasphemous," "corrupt," and "rotten," were the common epithets applied by the pious to your little sheet. My adventures as an infidel colporteur on that train would fill several numbers of your paper. I am an old "soldier of the cross," and know how to stand Christian fire. I held my ground till the enemy's ammunition was completely exhausted. I met many who were highly pleased with your publications, and some who were regular readers of the paper. It was hardly hard of here till I commenced circulating it. I can assure you that it will not be long before it is better known.

M. S. AUSTIN, Rockland, Me., in requesting his address changed from Thomaston to Rockland, writes: Thomaston is three miles walk from where I live; but I had rather walk there every week than go without your paper. When I first subscribed for your paper, it was not a very welcome visitor to our house. Its Liberal and common-sense views have since caused it to be respected. It is now not only diligently perused by every member of the family, but is eagerly sought after and read by all the neighbors. The writings of Mrs. Stenker are splendid, and if they were written in the cause of the Church, the Christians would claim that she was inspired from on high. They are certainly very refreshing reading. The "Humphrey-Bennett discussion" alone is well worth the price of one year's subscription. The Rev. Humphrey appears to be a man of uncommon intelligence and candor for a clergyman, and he would make an effective advocate for any cause which would afford him any show of right and reason on his side. But in his present position there is no point of argument upon which he can lay his hand. I trust the discussion will continue until he is converted to the only true gospel of reason and common sense. Your paper deserves a prosperous future, and for such has my very best wishes.

Special Notices.

I WOULD like to correspond with some Liberal-minded lady of middle age, for matrimonial purposes. Address W. G. R. East Dayton, Tuscola Co., Mich. 2:24

A GENTLEMAN of Materialistic proclivities wishes to correspond with a lady of liberal ideas; object, marriage. Address L. V., Kansas City, Mo. 3:23

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill. 12:19

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12:19

INTELLIGENT lady, without incumbrance, would like to make herself useful in the home of Liberal party. Small salary. AMIABLE, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS, The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," his THEOLOGICAL Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL, AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

E. P. Cooley, Manufacturer of

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 817

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,

141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MRS. BEVIER,

ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed Life and Energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COUNTESS CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET. 485 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

Radical Constructive Literature.

DISCOURSES AND LECTURES

DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.

2. The Old vs. the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.

3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN,

Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway,) 22tf.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anesthetics.

To which are added:

1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
2. Best age for Bearing Children.
3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
4. Small Families.
5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
6. Celibacy.
7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain." Goden's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

Window Shades and Opaque Cloths.

64 READE STREET, NEW YORK.

Dealer in Fixtures, Cords, Tassels, Hollands, etc.

Combining the beauty of a Lace Curtain with the utility of a Window Shade. ORDERS BY MAIL PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO, and FORWARDED WITH CARE. Retail Orders delivered in any part of the country, C. O. D. In ordering special sizes give size of opening, also size of glass. State where you saw this adv. 817

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

Ald. 385.

D. M. BENNETT,

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses... 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 5th Ave., New York. 44 years practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 605 West 23d St., New York City.

YES! WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STIMMON & CO., Portland, Maine.

$66 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greeley, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune. Is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 18 Eliot street, Boston. Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, $2 per annum; three months, 50 cents. 6:24

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postage paid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2:24

E. H. HEYWOOD'S BOOKS;

LABOR REFORM, FREE-LOVE, ANTI-TAXATION.

YOURS OR MINE: Explaining the True Basis of Property and the Causes of its Inequitable Distribution, Fortieth Thousand. Price 1 cent.

CUPID'S YOKES: On the Moral and Physiological Aspects of Conjugal Life and Child Production, explaining the Principles and Purposes of the Free Love Movement. Twentieth thousand. Price 15 cents.

HARD CASH: Treats of the Greenback Delusion and demands the Abolition of Usury as the Right of Labor and the Duty of Capital. Twentieth Thousand. Price 15 cents.

UNCIVIL LIBERTY; or, the Social Heism, opposed to Woman Suffrage, the Political Usurpation of Men over Women. Eightieth Thousand. Price 15 cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by Co-operative Publishing Co., Princeton, Mass.

THE WORD.

A Monthly Journal of Reform.

E. H. HEYWOOD, Editor.

The Word, regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service, favors the abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of Speculative Income, and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth at a power at the expense of useful people. It seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends, and profit, except as they represent work done, and the repudiation of all so-called debts, the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

Terms, 75 cents annually, in advance. Address THE WORD, Princeton, Mass.

Mrs. E. H. Bennett,

GENUINE ASTROLOGIST,

Delineates character, points out the past events of life and indicates probable future incidents by knowing the date of birth and calculating the influence of the planets ruling at the time of birth and through life. Successfully consulted in matters pertaining to health, matrimony and fortune. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Terms reasonable. Personal interviews $1.00. Replies by mail on one or two points, $1.00. Full nativity for self and family, $2.00. Give your day and hour of birth as nearly as possible. Address MRS. E. H. BENNETT, 4124 66 West Tenth street, N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWK, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants, Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

A LIGHT heart lives long.—Shakspeare.

NOTHING, not God, is greater to one than one's self is.—Wall Whitman.

THE quality of Truth in man supports itself through all changes.—Wall Whitman.

IF what is said be not to the point, a single word is yet too much.—Chinese Proverbs.

I SEE not any road of perfect peace which a man can walk, but after the counsel of his own bosom.—Emerson.

IN marriage we begin by knowing little and believing much, and often end by inverting the quantities.—Geo. Eliot.

SWEET are the uses of adversity;
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.
—Shakspeare.

A HELPING word to one in trouble is often like a switch on a rail-road track, but one inch between wreck and smooth rolling prosperity.—Anon.

THE man who has nothing to boast of but his illustrious ancestry is like a potato-vine—the only good belonging to him is under ground.—Sir, Thos. Overbury.

SOCIETY never makes the preposterous demand that a man shall think as much about his own qualifications for making a charming girl happy as he thinks of hers for making himself happy.—Geo. Eliot.

THE web of life is of a mingled yarn, good and bad together; our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair if they were not cherished by our virtues.—Shakspeare.

WHO shall number the patient and earnest seekers after truth, from the days of Galileo until now, whose lives have been embittered and their good name blasted by the mistaken zeal of Bibliolaters? Who shall count the hosts of weaker men, whose sense of truth has been destroyed in the effort to harmonize impossibilities—whose life has been wasted in the attempt to force the generous new wine of science into the old bottles of Judaism, compelled by the outcry of the same strong party.—Huxley.

NATURAL phenomena sometimes occur by which whole countries become desolate, and the memory of things past is erased; accident may intervene to occasion the loss of the arts themselves, but the exigencies of men, in the process of time, cause the recovery or revival by the same uses of natural means, and by the necessity of man's having recourse to art for administering to his wants; and, notwithstanding these interruptions and revolutions, yet the machinery of the world subsists without infringement.—Aristotle.

LET us plant in our hearts the precious flowers of love, charity and forgiveness, and make the light of a beautiful spirit to shine out radiantly from our countenance; let us each day pluck some flower of thought from the great tree of knowledge, and twine it in the garland of our minds, that it may be an amaranth unfading in hue and undying in sweetness. Let us plant the seeds of beauty everywhere through the windings and avenues of our lives, and make beautiful by our souls' rejoicing the hours of our daily labor and our Sabbaths of rest. Strive always for the good, the true, and beautiful, and life shall be to us a song of joy and bliss, garlanded everywhere with the brightness of beauty.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

YOU touch me on a very tender point, when you say, that my friends on your side the water cannot be reconciled to the idea of my abandoning America even for my native England. They are right. I had rather see my horse, Button, eating the grass of Bordentown or Morrisania, than see all the pomp and show of Europe. When we contemplate the fall of empires, and the extinction of the nations of the ancient world, we see but little more to excite our regret than the mouldering ruins of pompous palaces, magnificent monuments, lofty pyramids, and walls and towers of the most costly workmanship; but when the empire of America shall fall, the subject for contemplative sorrow will be infinitely greater than crumbling brass or marble can inspire. It will not then be said, Here stood a temple of vast antiquity, here rose a Babel of invisible height, or there a palace of sumptuous extravagance; but here, ah painful thought! the noblest work of human wisdom, the greatest scene of human glory, the fair cause of freedom rose and fell. Read this, and then ask if I forget America.—Thomas Paine.

IF there is any heaven on this earth, it is where just the right man marries just the right woman, and there is no way to be happy except with perfect liberty. I hate a man who thinks a woman should obey him. I despise a man who wants to make everybody obey him. I had rather be a slave than a master. I had rather be robbed than be a robber. All that I ask for all womankind is simple liberty, and let the man love the woman as she should be loved. As one of the old sacred books of the Hindoos says: "Man is strength—woman is beauty; man is courage—woman is prudence; man is strength and woman is wisdom; and where there is one man loving one woman, and one woman loving one man, in that house the very angels love to come and sit and sing." I believe, then, in perfect freedom; I believe in perfect justice, and where a man loves a woman she never grows old to him. Through the wrinkles of age and through the mask of time he sees the sweet maiden face that he loved and won. And where a woman really loves a man he does not grow gray; he does not grow decrepit, he is not old, but to her he is the same gallant gentleman forever that won her heart and hand.—Ingersoll.

Odds and Ends.

A SIMPLE peasant from the wilds of New England was alighting from the cars at the Washington depot, in company with a friend, when the latter pointed out the first distinguished person he saw, and exclaimed: "Look, George! there goes one of the greatest statesmen in the country." "Dew tell!" ejaculated the simple peasant. "How much has he stolen?"

"Do you believe there are any people who never heard 'Old Hundred'?" asked a young lady at the family table. "Lots of them," interrupted her precocious young brother. "Where are they I should like to know?" "In the deaf and dumb asylum!"

BROWN sent Smith a present of a painting of a pair of ducks, nicely finished in oil, and accompanying the gift was this note: "Dear Smith—I send you a present of a pair of ducks—real canvas backs. Yours B."—Smith acknowledged the gift, and in return sent an engraving of "catching Green Turtle in the West Indies," with a note as follows: "Dear Brown—Thank you for your ducks, I send you a nice dish—a plate of turtle. Please accept. Yours S."

EXPLAINING A DIFFICULT PROBLEM.—A negro was convicted in our Superior Court the other day for hitting another negro with an axe. A party of colored savans were discussing the case in old Si's presence.

"What I want to know," said one of them, "is jiss diss: How ken a man hit anudder man wid de eye ob der ax?"

"Why kan't he—tell me dat!" said old Si.

"Kase hit stands ter reezen, don't yer see—for de eye ob der ax is whar de handle goes in, an' how is er man gwine ter 'sault anudder man wid er contempt to murder by hittin' him on de head wid der hole?"

This was a clincher the other darkies thought; but old Si remarked:

"Fore de wah me an' you used to work in de same cotton-yard, didn't we?"

"Yes, we did."

"Well, I 'spose you members when massa Threlkill, down dar at Griffin, used ter lamb yer 'bout forty wid dat paddle dat he had?"

"Oh, you go 'way!"

"Well, dis are de pint; when he used fer ter paddle yer, an' yer used fer ter grose 'round an complain of de blisters what he raised on yer, wuz it de paddle or de holes in de paddle whar raised deskin an' made de sore? Now whar's yer scientific argyment?"

The case was settled—nobody in the negative.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE ROMANCE OF THE CARPET.

Basking in peace in the warm spring sun,
South Hill smiled upon Burlington.

The breath of May! and the day was fair,
And the bright motes danced in the balmy air.

And the sunlight gleamed where the restless breeze
Kissed the fragrant blooms on the apple-trees.

His beardless cheek with a smile was spanned;
As he stood with a carriage whip in his hand.

And he laughed as he doffed his bob-tailed coat,
And the echoing folds of the carpet smote.

And she smiled as she leaned on her busy mop,
And said she would tell him when to stop.

So he pounded away till the dinner bell
Gave him a little breathing spell.

But he sighed when the kitchen clock struck one,
And she said the carpet wasn't done.

But he lovingly put in his biggest licks,
And pounded like mad till the clock struck six.

And she said in a dubious kind of way
That she guessed he could finish it up next day.

Then all that day, and the next day too,
The furze from the dirtless carpet flew.

And she'd give it a look at eventide,
And say, "Now beat on the other side."

And the new days came as the old days went,
And the landlord came for his regular rent.

And the neighbors laughed at the tireless broom,
And his face was shadowed with clouds of gloom.

Till at last, one cheerless winter day,
He kicked at the carpet and slid away;

Over the fence and down the street,
Speeding away, with footsteps fleet.

And never again the morning sun
Smiled at him beating his carpet dun.

And South Hill often said with a yawn,
"Where has the carpet martyr gone?"

Years twice twenty had come and passed,
And the carpet swayed in the autumn blast;

For never yet, since that spring day fine,
Had it ever been taken down from the line.

Over the fence a gray-haired man
Cautiously clim, clome, clem, clum, clamb.

He found him a stick in the old wood pile,
And he gathered it up with a sad grim smile.

A flush passed over his face forlorn,
As he gazed at the carpet tattered and torn.

And he hit a most resounding thwack,
Till the startled air gave its echoes back.

And out of the window a white face leaned,
And a palsied hand the dim eyes screened.

She knew his face, she gasped and sighed,
"A little more on the under side."

Right down on the ground his stick he threw;
And he shivered and said, "Well, I'm blowed."

And he turned away with a heart full sore,
And he never was seen, no, not no more.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

- No. (REVISED LIST.) Cts.
1. Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. 8
 2. Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll. 10
 3. Thomas Paine. 5
 4. Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll. 5
 5. Heretics and Heresies. 5
 6. Humboldt. 5
 7. The Story of Creation. Bennett. 5
 8. The Old Snake Story. 5
 9. The Story of the Flood. 5
 10. The Plagues of Egypt. 5
 11. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett. 2
 12. Balaam and his Ass. 2
 13. Arrangement of Priestcraft. 2
 14. Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. 2
 15. Come to Dinner. 2
 16. Fox Horn Documents. 2
 17. The Devil Still Ahead. 2
 18. Slipped Up Again. 2
 19. Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. 2
 20. Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. 2
 21. The Great Wrestling Match. 2
 22. Discussion with Elder Shelton. 10
 23. Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. 3
 24. Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. 5
 25. Discussion with Geo. Snod. Bennett. 5
 26. Underwood's Prayer. 1
 27. Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. 5
 28. Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sotheran. 10
 29. Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. 2
 30. Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. 2
 31. Gods and God-houses. 5
 32. The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. 8
 33. What has Christianity Done? Preston. 3
 34. Tribute to Thomas Paine. 2
 35. Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. 1
 36. Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. 1
 37. Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D. 1
 38. Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. 3
 39. The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. 3
 40. Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. 3
 41. Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. 3
 42. Elijah the Tishbite. 3
 43. Christianity a Borrowed System. 3
 44. Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. 2
 45. Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. 2
 46. Did Jesus Really Exist? 1
 47. Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. 3
 48. Free Thought in the West. G. L. Henderson. 5
 49. Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. 5
 50. Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. 3
 51. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. 5
 52. Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 3
 53. Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. 2
 54. An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. 5
 55. The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. 8
 56. Bible Contradictions. 1
 57. Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. 2
 58. Prophecies. 2
 59. Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. 2
 60. Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. 2
 61. History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. 9
 62. The Jews and their God. 10
 63. The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. 3
 64. The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. 2
 65. Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D. 2
 66. God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. 5
 67. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. 5
 68. Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. 2
 69. Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 3
 70. Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. 3
 71. Paine's Anniversaries. O. A. Codman. 3
 72. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. 2
 73. Foundations. John Syphers. 3
 74. Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. 2
 75. An Hour with the Devil. 10
 76. Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. 3
 77. The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. 5
 78. Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett. 5
 79. The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. 2
 80. Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. 5
 81. Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. 3
 82. Christian Courtesy. Bennett. 1
 83. Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
 84. Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopp, London. 2
 85. Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. 10
 86. An Enquiry about God's Sons. 2
 87. Free Thought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. 1
 88. David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 3
 89. Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. 3
 90. Biblio-Mania. Otter Cordates. 2
 91. Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. 1
 92. The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. 5
 93. Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. 1
 94. The New Raven. Will Cooper. 1
 95. Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. 10
 96. Ishabod Crane Papers. 10
 97. Special Prophecies. W. S. Bell. 2
 98. Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. 2
 99. Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. 5
 100. The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll. 5
 101. 110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al. 5
 102. The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. 1
 103. Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett. 2
 104. Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. 10
 105. Decadence of Christianity. Caphro. 2
 106. Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. 2
 107. The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. 5
 108. The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. 1
 109. Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp. 1
 110. Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp. 1
 111. Reply to Scientific American. Bennett. 1
 112. Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp. 2
 113. Come to Jesus. Bennett, 3 pp. 2
- SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg. M.D. 5
 2. Evolution: from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 5
 3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 5
 4. Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. 5
 5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. 5
 6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
 7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 2
 8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. 5
 9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 10
 10. The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures. 10
 11. Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. 10
- Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent. off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent. off; on ten dollars' worth 50 per cent. off.
- As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

- SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.
- By D. M. BENNETT.
- 141 Eighth street, New York.
- Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers. 25
Cloth 50
- " " with Examination of Prophecies 75
- A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright. 75
- Apocryphal New Testament. 1 25
- An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth. 75
- Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger. 25
- Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50
- Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon. 1 50
- Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor. 2 00
- Antiquity and Duration of the World. 25
- Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. 25
- A. J. Davis' Entire Works. 27.00
- Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. 15
- Bible in India. Jaccoliot. 2 00
- Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo. 4 00
- Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80
- Bible in the Balance. Fish. 1 00
- Bacon's Novum Organum. 2 00
- Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna. 1 75
- Buechner's Man, Present and Future. 4 00
- Christianity before Christ. Craven. 25
- Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages. 1 50
- Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity. 1 00
- Childhood of Religion. 1 25
- Childhood of the World. 40 and 60
- Christianity and Materialism. Underwood. 15
- Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle. 1 00
- Conway's Sacred Anthology. 4 00
- Colense on the Pentateuch, Abstract of. 25
- Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor. 2 00
- Digests. 2 00
- Denton's Irreconcilable Records. 50
- " Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future. 1 50
- " Radical Rhymes. Deluge. 1 25
- Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakspeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each. 1 00
- Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science. 1 75
- " Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols. 3 00
- Darwin's Origin of Species. 2 00
- Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.) 3 00
- Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt. 1 50
- Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas. 1 00
- Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell. 60 & 80
- Errors of the Bible. Wright. 35 & 60
- Evans' History of all Christian Sects. 1 00
- Essence of Religion. Fuerbach, 40 and 80
- Eight Scientific Tracts. 20
- Frothingham's Religion of Humanity. 1 50
- " Child's Book of Religion. 1 00
- " Stories of the Patriarchs. 1 00
- " Safest Creed. 1 50
- " Transcendentalism in New England. 2 50
- Faraday's Various Forces of Nature. 2 00
- Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers. 2 00
- God Idea in History. Tuttle. 1 25
- Good Sense. D'Holbach. 1 00
- Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 2 50
- Lost and Hostile Gospels. 3 25
- Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors. 2 00
- Biography of Saian. 60
- Gray's Enigmas of Life. 2 00
- " Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols. 7 50
- Heroines of Free Thought. Mrs. Underwood. 1 75
- Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell. 1 00 & 150
- Hume's Essays and Treatises. 1 50
- Huxley's Lay Sermons. 1 75
- " Man's Place in Nature. 1 25
- " Critiques and Addresses. 1 50
- History of all Religions Sects. Evans. 1 00
- Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols. 5 00
- Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous. 1 00
- Humboldt's Works. 50
101. Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50
- etc., Large Edition. 1 25
- Influence of Christianity on Civilization. 25
- Infidels' Text Book, Cooper. 1 00
- Jehovah Unveiled. 35
- Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger. 1 00
- Josephus' Complete Works. 2 50
- Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo. 6 00
- John's Way. 15
- Kneelands Review. 1 00
- Hymns. 35
- Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet. 2 75
- Lucky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols. 4 00
- " History of European Morals. 6 00
- Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. 1 00
- Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. 3 50
- Problems of Life and Mind. 3 00
- Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each 150
- Lubbock's Origin of Civilization. 2 00
- Pre-Historic Times Illustrated. 6 00
- Lyall's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts. 3 40
- Principles. 2 vols. and maps. 8 00
- Monks and Popes. Alberger. 1 00
- Morley's Life of Voltaire. 2 00
- Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade. 3 00
- Peeples' All Around the World. 2 50
- Seers of the Ages. 2 50
- Plato's Divine and Moral Works. 2 25
- Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 30 & 50
- Physical Man, Tuttle. 1 50
- Paine's Common Sense. 12
- " Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth 80
- " Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth 80
- " Theological Works, with portrait 1 50
- Parturition without Pain. 1 00
- Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D. 3 00
- Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy, Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen Syntagma, Taylor. 1 00
- Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait. 3 00
- " Political Works, steel portrait. 1 50
- " Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth 75
- System of Nature, D'Holbach. 2 00
- Self-Contradictions of the Bible. 25
- Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker. 75
- Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work, Strauss' Old Faith and New. 2 00
- New Life of Jesus. 2 vols. 12 00
- Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo. 8 00
- Sexual Physiology. Trail. 2 00
- Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii. Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works. 25
- The Christ of Paul. 2 00
- The Case against the Church. 75
- The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey. 2 00
- The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow. 1 25
- The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. $3.00, $4.00, and 4.50
- Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc. 75 & 1 00
- Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV. 60 cts. & 1 00
- The Outcast. Winwood Reade. 30
- Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason. M.D. 1 50
- Underwood-Marples Debate. 35 & 50
- Underwood's Twelve Tracts. 20
- Vestiges of Creation. 75
- Volney's Ruins. 1 00
- Volney's New Researches in Ancient History. 1 50
- Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary. 5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 25. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, June 23, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. J. P. Roberts, of the Methodist church of Utica, Wis., has been arrested and brought to trial for lying and slander.

THE Rev. Joseph Regis, of Fond du Lac, Wis., has brought suit against the Rev. Louis Dael for malicious prosecution. Dael had caused the arrest of Regis, as a vagrant and an impostor.

"There was once a clerical gent
Had the courage to say what he meant,
When they said "You're heretical"
He became energetical.
And they didn't feel good for a cent."

NEVER in his life did the Rev. Mr. McGhee have such a large congregation as that which assembled to see him tried for the murder of Mrs. McGhee. Most of those who came were ladies. Some of them climbed in the windows of the court-room.

THE Principia Club, an association of gentlemen in Cambridge, Mass., has just published an aggressive little volume, bearing the title "Vaticanism Unmasked; or, Romanism in the United States," by a Puritan of the Nineteenth century.

THE Russo-Turkish conflict is proclaimed to be the "Jihad," or Holy War. The greater the numbers that are killed, and the more wretchedness and suffering caused by it, the holier it will be! The "holy" wars of the world have all been of this character.

THERE is a merchant possessing decided ideas where the line of credit should be drawn, who announces by a placard in his show window on Broadway: "In God we trust. All others are expected to pay cash." Is it not possible that even this man trusts too much?

MR. BEECHER, in his Friday-night's talk, said that when young, in imitation of some celebrated Bible character, he prayed seven times a day, but finally came to the conclusion that this might be very good spiritual diet for some, but that it was not adapted to his taste.

THE Tribune insists that only the most valuable of our coins is legally a coin at all—that it is far better to keep the millions under the harrow, than to "disappoint the expectations" of the bond-holders. A large number of people are getting to think differently.

A BELIEF in the value of fresh blood as a medicine in cases of consumption is entertained by several St. Louis physicians, and every morning the chief slaughter house of that city is visited by patients. Very possibly it may be discovered that fresh blood is a better remedy for bodily ills than blood eighteen hundred years old is for ailments of the soul.

THE Rev. A. J. Carney, who is known up the river as the "fighting preacher," uttered the plain truth when at Newburgh, the other day, he said: "All, or nearly all, the ministers now-a-days were preaching for money, not to win people to Christ and save their souls. Take away their salaries, and they would all be lawyers, insurance agents, or merchants, trying to get a living by doing nothing." The danger of souls being lost would trouble them very little were their salaries withheld.

BISHOP FINK, of the Catholic church in Kansas, has ordered all of his clergy to say mass every Tuesday until the 8th of September for the destruction of the grasshoppers. It remains to be seen what effect this will have on the pestilent creatures. The Protestants of Minnesota tried fasting and prayer, and are divided as to their views of success or failure. Anything which will exterminate the 'hoppers will be pronounced satisfactory by people, regardless of sectarian persuasion.

THE flock recently gathered by that irrepressible brother, the Rev. Jeremiah Beulah Murray, in Brooklyn, has begun the festive part of its existence by a huge strawberry entertainment and cake walk. So inspiring were the exercises of this occasion, that the perspiring company remained together till after one o'clock in the morning. A good deal of money was raised, and brother Jeremiah is not in the lamentation line. The enterprise which he now leads is called the "Metropolitan Mission."

THE clerical wife-murderer, Rev. Samuel H. McGhee, was found guilty of murder in the first degree, in the district court, Dixon, Ill., for poisoning his wife that he might marry Miss Lorilla Paddock, and the jury gave him the lightest penalty—fourteen years' imprisonment at hard labor. Efforts were made for a new trial, but Judge Heaton decided that the prisoner had had a fair trial, and had been ably defended. Sentence has been passed upon the wretched man—fourteen years at hard labor, with one week of solitary confinement each year. It is not expected that the brilliant and fascinating Miss Paddock will wait for him till his time is out.

THE following cable dispatch has been received here: LONDON, June 18.—The case of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant, who were arrested some time ago on a charge of printing and publishing a pamphlet alleged to be of an immoral character, which was adjourned to allow the defendants time to prepare their defense, was begun to-day before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and a special jury. The Solicitor-General spoke condemning the book as indecent. Mrs. Besant replied defending the book and denying that it was obscene. The trial was unfinished at the adjournment of the court. Since the beginning of the prosecution the circulation of the book has increased from 700 copies yearly to 100,000 copies.

TRIALS for heresy are becoming of more frequent occurrence than almost anything else, except trials for clerical crimes and delinquencies. Doctors Miller and Blauvelt have but just got through with their trials, before intelligence is received from Halifax of the trial of the Rev. Mr. McDonnell also for heresy. If all the clergymen who dare to differ from the old creeds were brought to trial, a great many new courts would need to be organized. Some disbelieve in the divine origin of the Bible; some in the divinity of Christ; some in the existence of hell and the devil, and some even in the existence of God himself. When the clergy and the laity have purged themselves entirely of the old and darkening and stupid creeds, "the world will be the better for it."

MORE clergymen left this port for Europe last Saturday than ever left the county before in a single day. Some forty of them who took passage on the Bolivia were delegates to the great Pan-Presbyterian Council, which is to convene in Edinburgh, July 2d, and at which 20,000,000 Presbyterians, in a dozen different countries, will be represented. In other steamers numerous other clergymen took passage. Among the number are the Rev. Doctors Chancellor Howard Crosby, Hepworth, Wm. C. Roberts, Manning, Taylor, Geo. Norcross and family, Nicholl and family, Edward Hayes, the Reverends Arthur Lawrence, T. M. Lester, J. N. Galliger, and numerous others. Some will make the tour of Europe; some will go to the "Holy Land"; some will spend the summer in the Alps, etc., etc. It may be a wonder to many how the people can spare so many clergymen all at once without serious detriment to the poor sinners who remain at home; but there is no trouble in the matter, the number could be multiplied by ten or twenty without the slightest injury or danger. The people are learning by degrees that clergymen are not a "vital necessity," and when they become sufficiently convinced of this fact to let the 65,000 clergymen, who are supported at an annual expense of $200,000,000 to this country, go permanently to Europe, or any where else they see fit, America will be no loser by it. We shall always need teachers of science, of Nature's laws, and everything that is true, but it is to be hoped that the masses will not always be compelled to support an army of pious, well-dressed gentry to cram down the throats of the people old myths, dogmas, and superstitions. Let them go to—Europe.

Geo. FRANCIS TRAIN takes a gloomy view of things. A letter of his in the Sun contains the following: "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed! Enjoy yourselves; amuse yourselves. The dark days are coming. A short life and a merry one. Eat, drink, and be happy, for to-morrow ye die! I am neither Jeremiah nor Cassandra nor Daniel come to judgment, yet never before did I so plainly read the mystic signs on Balshazzar's banquet-hall. Great physical convulsions always foreshadow great social revolutions. When the houses crack in San Francisco, the Mikado trembles in Tokio, the Nabob quakes in the Himalayas, and Vesuvius belches its lava over the village of Naples. The quarter of a million holocaust in the Ganges tidal wave, the dozen shipwrecked cities in the Chilean earthquake, are only forerunners of the coming political upheavals. The perennial grasshopper, cutworm, potato-bug, black grub, and seventeen-year locust, are but the shadows of the Coming Famine. The dead fish floating in the Passaic, the scabbed sheep rotting in the pasture, the mad dog epidemic on every street corner, the epizootic horse choking in the stable, the murrained cattle dying on the plains, the four million trichina hogs killed by the Washington Bureau (explain why the instinct of self-preservation made me stop eating meat) all point toward the Coming Pestilence. A deadlier poison than spitz, moccasin, cobra, or rattlesnake gnaws greedily at the vitals of Church, State, and Society. The Hyacinthe, Dollinger-Cumming, Bismarck, Gladstone, Russo-Turkish imbroglio indicates the dissolution of the Anno Domini era. The bankruptcy of old style journalism in brain, in finance, and manhood suggests that the new educational method will be telephone and psychology. That man who conserves the most of the Sun element will furnish light for all the rest. Babcockism, Belknapism, Beecherism, Tweedism, Grantism, Robesonism, and the murders, suicides, and abductions of the hour are only balled down demonology! The German Schonbergs, French Mires, English Petos, Colliers and Baron Grants, Philadelphia Cookes, California Ralstons, New York Flisks, Clewesses, Duncans, the scenes of shipwrecked banks, hundreds of defaulting railroads, and 100,000 bankrupt merchants, only point to the coming universal Repudiation.

HOW SHALL INFIDELITY BE TREATED?—We clip the following from the N. Y. Sun: Not long since the subject of religious faith and its present hold on society was introduced in a party of gentlemen who had all been bred in orthodox Protestant churches, nearly all of whom were pretty regular church-goers, nominal professors of the evangelical belief, and not negligent in observing the conventional religious customs. Yet of the whole number, including men of different ages, there was not one who hesitated to avow that he was skeptical about the doctrines which he had been brought up to reverse. Of this party some even went so far as to question the immortality of the soul, holding that the soul was no more immortal than any other manifestation of force. They suffered themselves to be ranked with the faithful while all the time they are really rank infidels. It is undeniable that very many of our young men now being graduated from the colleges are afflicted with religious unbelief. This skepticism is also noticeable in the universities of England, spite of their ecclesiastical surroundings; it is well-nigh universal among the German students; it is very extensive among those of France; it is pervasive in Russia; and even in Italy and Spain it is too common to excite remark. We see, too, that skepticism has entered the ranks of the orthodox ministry here. The Rev. Dr. Blauvelt, having boldly announced that the old orthodoxy is a dead force, and that it is in opposition to the principles of religious truth, has been rightly driven from the pulpit of the Reformed Dutch Church, the most conservative of Protestant sects. In leaving the communion in which he was reared, he declares that he is not the only heretic who requires to be cut off, and prophesies other convictions on similar grounds, though how many even of those ministers who substantially agree with him will dare to announce their heresy is doubtful. Yet if they are honest men they cannot help doing as Dr. Blauvelt did. Whatever may be the opposition to his religious opinions, there can only be respect for a man who upholds what he believes to be true, even at the expense of his denominational standing. So far as orthodoxy is concerned, it is really in less danger from avowed opponents than from lukewarm advocates—preachers who pretend to believe in it, in order to retain their places. How shall infidelity be conquered? Is it an enemy to be treated with, or shall the campaign against it begin with renewed intensity all along the line? These are questions which may well engage the serious attention of the Presbyterians at Edinburgh next month, for religious skepticism seems to be gathering force.

Events of the Week.

JOHN G. SAXE, the poet, is lying dangerously ill at his home in Brooklyn.

An entire class of college boys were suspended from Princeton for "hazing" new comers.

THE weather for the past week has been warm and showery. Grass and vegetation of all kinds are growing rapidly.

THE Indians in Canada have been making a disturbance. They fired a Catholic church and other buildings. Bloodshed is feared.

THE partisans of ex-President Lerdo of Mexico have captured the city of El Paso. Another civil war threatens that unfortunate country.

A TERRIFIC hail-storm passed over Milford, Pa. Hailstones the size of hens' eggs fell in abundance. Crops were badly injured in the vicinity.

TWO attempts have been made by some unprincipled villain to burn out the Shaker Community at Mt. Lebanon, N. Y. The attempt was fortunately thwarted.

ALBA W. DENNETT, a law student at Milwaukee, Wis., smothered his own infant child to death, and wrapped it in a shawl with a brick and threw it into the river. It was afterwards found and he confessed his crime.

GEN. B. F. BUTLER lectured before a full house at the Academy of Music, on the evening of the 19th. Subject, "The Irish Soldier in America." Should Ben ever run for President, possibly he might need all the Irish votes he can get.

MRS. A. T. STEWART has given $1,500,000 to the Catholics at Garden City, L. I., for building a Cathedral. Could she have had the good taste to give one-tenth that amount to THE TRUTH SEEKER for publishing Liberal books and pamphlets, how much more good it would have done!

FREDERICK HENDRICKS, a wealthy farmer near Old Town, McLean county, Ill., fifty years of age, in a drunken rage shot his wife with whom he had lived twenty-five years. He returned from Bloomington, bringing a girl with him, who he told his wife was to supply her place. He commenced firing at her, and in a short time shot himself.

THREE tramps called at the house of D. B. Dennison, Great Falls, N. H., in the absence of the owner and ordered the servant, twenty years of age, to deliver to them all the money and valuables in the house or be murdered. She pleaded for her life, and upon pretense of going up stairs for the money, obtained Mr. Dennison's revolver and shot the leading tramp and frightened the others away.

TWO brick tenement houses in Twenty-third street between First and Second avenues, this city, in which some forty families were living, fell in last Saturday night, but fortunately the warning given by the creaking of walls and timbers was sufficient to enable all the residents to get out of the buildings before they fell in with a crash. Two women were paralyzed with fear, and taken to the hospital, from the effects of which it is feared they will not recover.

THE Russo-Turkish war has not made remarkable progress since our last issue. The Russians are still preparing to cross the Danube. It looks very bad for the Turks. Their armies are badly handled and indifferently supplied. A serious outbreak or rebellion is threatening among the Softas, or fanatics, at Constantinople. If they should be compelled to withdraw a corps from the front to suppress the rebels at home, they might as well yield to the Russians all that is required of them. Three thousand brave Montenegrins are reported as having routed ten thousand Turks at Plana, in Montenegro. Four separate attacks were made upon them by the Turks, who were repulsed every time. The Turks fled and the Montenegrins pursued. The route was complete. The Turks were driven out of Montenegro. A reign of terror prevails in the suburbs of Constantinople in consequence of the excesses committed by the Bash-Bazouks, a tribe of lawless, half-savage Turkish soldiery. A strong peace-party is growing in Constantinople, which is directly opposed to a continuance of what must be a hopeless war. It now looks as though this war might end in a few weeks, with the Turks' side of the ledger in a decidedly bad condition.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

Polytheism is accused of worshipping images for gods, but no one acquainted with its genius can for a moment entertain the idea that the humble worshiper regarded the image as anything more than a bond between himself and the deity it represented. He had outgrown this early belief, yet his mind, unable to grasp the conception of the gods, employed images as assistants. Some nations discarded artificial images, and with keen intellectual perception paid direct homage to the life-giving sun and the starry hosts. The Jews discarded images, but, by concealing their deity behind the veil of the Temple and creating an awful mystery, before the veil of which they knelt, were as real idolaters as the surrounding peoples.

Polytheism taught a narrow patriotism founded on the partial and exclusive character of its national gods, comprised in the love of country and hatred of foreigners. This exclusiveness was subdued by the conquests of Alexander and policy of Rome, whereby nations were brought into direct contact and amalgamated. The comparison of the gods assembled in the Pantheon prepared the way for the reception of Monotheism. The multitudes of gods were amenable to the control of the One God. This was not a new theory, but rather the sweeping away of old poetic garniture of subsidiary deities. When the apostle spoke of the Unknown God, he was readily understood by the Athenians. Monotheism was a direct growth of Polytheism, but various deflections were made on the way as various obstacles to growth were interposed. Of these, Dualism and Pantheism are the most important. The belief in a supremely good and a supremely evil being antedates the birth of Zoroaster. Involving a contradiction, it has been one of the most annoying and perplexing problems, over which to this day the Christian world wrangles. Two infinite and supreme beings cannot exist; hence it was taught that the evil god, once good, had fallen from his high estate. But an infinite being cannot change. The evil god must be less in power than the good god, and if the latter is all-powerful and good he could not allow the evil one to exist. The Persians solved this problem by referring both as emanations from one source, which Supreme Fountain became identical with the One, and Dualism ran its course. This belief, through the Eastern disciples, entered early Christian theology, and has ever since made it a system of Dualism instead of Monotheism. The Persian god of evil, Siva, became Satan, and has acted a most conspicuous part in the religion of the Christian world. Even at present his name is pronounced in the pulpit quite as frequently and with as much unction as that of God.

Pantheism regards Creation as God. It was a favorite theory of the ancient philosophers, who advocated both its material and spiritual form. Creation is the result of the laws inherent in matter itself. Nothing is fortuitous; all change is by the fixed fiat of law. God is the sun of Nature. Spiritual Pantheism is based on a metaphysical dream. God is the sun of the Spirit, from whom every thing is evolved. He is ever the same, yet constantly unfolding into new forms. God only possesses substantiality. He becomes self-conscious only through man. This mystical doctrine is capable of many changes, and bewilders and deludes by seeming to present tangible ideas when it presents only dreams.

CHAPTER V.

HISTORICAL REVIEW—MONOTHEISM.

In all departments, progress for the Indo-European people will consist in departing farther and farther from the Semetic spirit. . . . Our religion will become less and less Jewish, BENAN.

CONFINED to narrow limits, and numerically insignificant compared with the other leading races, the Semite has made a deep influence both for good and for evil on the destinies of the world. It was first to engage in commerce, and invent a phonetic alphabet, which, more than any one cause, by the facilities it affords for the preservation of ideas, has tended to elevate mankind. From it sprang those great religions, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. The character of this people is a reflection of the geography of the country they inhabit. Roaming the arid deserts, or concentrating around narrow fertile belts and centres of commerce, they were most deeply impressed with the stern and implacable aspect of Nature. Their belief in their own one god excluded all others, and reacting on their arrogance and self-conceit, made them intolerant and overbearing, and declare all religions but their own unmitigatedly false. The Semetic race has never comprehended civilization, never founded an organic empire, made any discovery in science or mechanical invention, or even produced a work of plastic art. Deficient in power of organization and discipline necessary for military undertakings, its battles have been fought by mercenaries. The Israelitish branch shows less aptitude for political life than the others. It seems to have placed no value on liberty except so far as its religion was concerned, accepting vassalage without a struggle if this was not interfered with. Their wisdom never surpassed parables and proverbs. Even the higher branch, the Arabians, were only able to seize for a brief time the products of Greek thought. Their science was only a miserable translation of the Greek sages; and it has been shown that even these translations were the work of Spaniards and Persians. Pure as are the moral precepts of Jesus, son of Sirach, or Hillel, or the Bible, they are not purer or more exalted than those of Grecian writers. The aphorisms by which the chief relations of morality are expressed are common to all peoples. Of all nations, the Jews should be the last to become the moral standard-bearers. They were hard, narrow, egotistical, arrogant, presuming, superstitious, ignorant, and a type of bigotry. Their dull minds received from their forced contact with Persia all the spiritualism which enlivens the dreary realism of their theology. At Babylon they imbibed the idea of angels and demons, the terrestrial manifestation of Deity, faith in immortality, resurrection of the body, Messianic longings, and belief in the near approach of the end of the world. Dwarfed in everything else, they were characteristically religious, but their religion had no relation to their morality. David, with all his abominable vices, was a man pleasing to the Lord, and no one found fault with him. The Semitic standard was by no means such as Europeans would adopt. In religion, in its strictest interpretation, distinct from morality—the observance of rites and ceremonies, and the bigoted and superstitious opposition to innovation—the Jews are preëminent. They cannot be accused of being excessively moral, but their religion has bound them together and preserved them through the vicissitudes of two thousand years of oppression. Utterly selfish from the beginning, they expressed no sentiment suggestive of the fatherhood of God or brotherhood of man. Jehovah was only a God of the Jews, and gave all other peoples to them to slaughter or enslave if they pleased. They did not wish to extend the sway of their religion. They sought not converts; they rather objected to Gentile dogs professing their faith. Such was the Jewish spirit. It was concreted in a series of books called the Old Testament, pronounced an inspired writing, and really the means whereby its possessors achieved their lofty standing. The claim has been most unfortunate for mankind. The book cannot pretend to teach science, for whenever it attempts to explain natural phenomena it is false. It is not to teach rules of government, for the precepts it presents are in favor of theocracy, slavery, and despotism. If its mission is to teach morals, the national character was none the better for it, the Jews being among the most immoral and turbulent nations of antiquity. A compilation might be made from classic authors which would have a higher moral tone and fewer degrading examples. It is only useful as part of a religious system exclusive and arrogant. Its critical study reveals the fact that the Hebrews were subject to the same law of development as other races. If they received a divine revelation, it did not change the course of evolution. Indelible traces of Fetishism are visible in their latest theology, and Polytheism was for ages entertained. Frequent reference is made to strange gods, whose existence is not denied. Jehovah is not the only god—he is only the most powerful. The claim that he is the One God is of comparatively recent date. The character given him by the Old Testament is contradictory and changeable. He is the Creator and Divine Father, and again only the God of the Jews; almighty and omnipotent, omniscient, eternal and unchanging, and again environed with all the limits of human nature. He walks on the earth, carries on conversation, sleeps, rises early in the morning, is angry, jealous, revengeful, vindictive and avaricious. The advance is easily traced. The family god became that of the nation, and at length the only God. Monotheism was attained in Palestine at nearly the same time it was in Greece. Human sacrifice to this god—most dreadful superstition!—lingered long in the Jewish mind. It is met with in the histories of all nations, and its ultimate form is the foundation of Christianity—the sacrifice of Christ. The offering of Isaac, and of his daughter by Jephthah in fulfillment of a vow—not rashly given, but on a momentous occasion—are not condemned, but rather considered worthy examples of piety, showing beneath a black and fathomless abyss of superstition.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. VI.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: As I cannot see that in your last you refuted any of the positions I had taken, it will be necessary to give but little space to that portion of your letter. You bring no new argument to relieve John Wesley of the charge that England had no greater foe to the cause of the American colonists than himself, and that he espoused the arguments of Dr. Johnson, who denounced the colonists as a race of "convicts," and insinuated that they ought to be hung. Johnson thanked Wesley for joining him and espousing his cause; the friends of the American colonists in England were much incensed against Wesley for the course he pursued, and he was most bitterly denounced in numerous pamphlets and publications. Wesley wielded a great influence at that time, and England had no greater and no more ardent foe to American independence. I think you cannot disprove this.

In regard to Lincoln's infidelity, I am quite content to rest it upon the testimony of a score of life-long friends and acquaintances who knew him intimately, and had many times heard him express himself pointedly upon theological questions, and in opposition to the belief of Christians. I place their evidence far above that of interested parties writing in the interest of the Church, or with a purpose to show him to be what he was not. The discrepancies you enumerate are more apparent than real. There is no material disagreement. They merely illustrate how different men may express themselves upon a given subject. Nothing is better proved than that Lincoln was an infidel for more than a quarter of a century, and there is no reliable testimony that he changed his belief after going to Washington. His private secretary and intimate friend, John G. Nicolay, testified that he did not change. That he occasionally made use of ambiguous remarks which might give the impression that he had confidence in prayer, etc., is quite possible, but there is no probability that he believed that "Christ is God," and I do not believe that he ever said so.

If Mr. William H. Herndon is an unbeliever or a "Free-thinker," it by no means invalidates his testimony or his labors. That class of men have proved themselves as capable of telling the truth as any men in the world.

As to Colfax, you misrepresent me. I have not found "his testimony against me." He did say in his speech that Lincoln was an unbeliever in Christianity, and he admitted the same when a friend called upon him at his home. When you reported that you had written to him and he appeared to "hedge," and that he meant "Lincoln did not belong to a church," I remembered that on other more important subjects he had been accused and convicted of falsehood, and I said I would not insist upon his evidence.

As to the Constitution of the United States, the simple fact that God, Christ and the Bible are entirely ignored in it, or never mentioned, goes much farther with me in deciding its character than all that Christian pettifoggers can say upon the subject. If the framers were Christians, and they did not think enough of their God, their Savior and their "Book from heaven" to even allude to them, their Christianity did not amount to much. They were no better than Infidels.

Now for the second proposition. I must confess myself amused at your efforts to make the Bible appear to be a book of science or especially friendly to it. A person who can perceive much science in that volume has either a very acute or a very accommodating perception. Is the Bible account of the creation a scientific one? Does science teach that light and darkness were originally blended together and had to be separated? Does science teach that the countless burning suns or stars that stud the vault of heaven were not brought into existence until after the earth was formed, and were then "set" in a firmament which held a vast body of water above the earth from falling to it? Does science teach that the earth existed, had days and nights, brought forth plants, herbs, shrubs, and trees, perfecting seeds and fruits before the sun existed or before a drop of rain had fallen upon the earth? Is it a scientific idea of the way in which rain was produced—by opening the windows of heaven (probably placed in the floor, or firmament,) letting the body of water stored up there descend to the earth, without any provision being made for its getting back again?

Would science teach that it required Omnipotence to work five days to make this little globe, while the sun, a million times larger, Jupiter and Saturn, thousands of times larger, the countless millions of celestial orbs and suns, larger than the entire solar system, could all be made in one day?

Are the two accounts in Genesis of the formation of woman equally scientific—the one that she was formed of clay at the time Adam was, the other that she was not formed until after the animals were made and named, when a surgical operation was performed upon Adam and a rib abstracted, from which she was made? Would science teach that a female weighing one hundred and twenty-five pounds, principally composed of hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, and carbon, could be produced from a rib of phosphate of lime, weighing less than a pound?

The Bible states that the earth was created in five days, in which time all forms of vegetable and animal life were produced. Science teaches that the earth for vast ages was a ball of highly-heated or fused matter, and that immense periods necessarily had to pass before there could have been soils, vegetation, and animal life. The Bible teaches that the earth, the sun, and all the vast number of shining orbs, were made less than six thousand years ago. Science has brought to light stars that are so distant that thousands and millions of years are required for their light to reach our earth, though it travels at the rate of 200,000 miles per second! The Bible teaches that the earth was made and finished in the five days that Jehovah devoted to it. Science teaches that for incomputable ages the earth has been growing by the aggregation of falling bodies of matter accumulated in contiguous space, and called meteors, aerolites, etc. Stratum after stratum has in this way been added to the earth's surface, but it has taken ages upon ages to effect it. The growth has been slow and gradual.

The Bible teaches that the first formations of organized life were grasses, herbs, and fruit-trees. Science teaches that the lower orders of animals which exist in water, as the hydrozoa, jelly-fish, star-fish, etc., classed as radiata, and clams, oysters, etc., termed mollusca, and the polyparia, existed ages before grass and trees could possibly have had an existence. The Bible teaches that vegetation of all kinds was produced on the same day. Science teaches that seaweed and water-plants of various kinds existed long, long before grass and fruit-trees came into being. What is called the coal-plant, of which the strata of coal over various parts of the earth were composed, grew luxuriantly thousands of years before grass, shrubbery, flowering plants and fruit-trees had an existence.

The Bible teaches that birds and quadrupeds were brought into existence on the same day with reptiles or creeping things. Science teaches that birds, quadrupeds, and mammals could not have existed until long, long after reptiles and cold-blooded animals had been upon the earth. The Bible teaches that man has existed less than six thousand years. Science shows by incontrovertible proofs that man has existed on this earth not less than one hundred thousand years. The Bible teaches that man was created intelligent, highly developed, and perfect, and that he fell into ignorance, degradation, and barbarity. Science teaches that man in prehistoric times lived in caves, roved about like wild animals, was little above the brutes, and has gradually risen in the scale of intelligence and civilization.

All these truths which science teaches can be demonstrated by the history that for ages has been recorded in the rocks that make up the crust of the earth, but want of space will not allow me to refer to it now. What, then, becomes of your harmony and friendship of the Bible for science? They utterly fail. There is nothing clearer than that the writers of the Bible knew nothing of geology, little or nothing of astronomy, very little of cosmogony, nothing of chemistry, nothing of anthropology and ethnology, very little of biology, very little of botany, very little of zoology, very little of meteorology, very little of mathematics, very little of hydrostatics, and very little of psychology. Their knowledge of geography was extremely crude and limited or they would not have talked so much about the ends, the corners, the pillars, and the foundations of the earth. What did they know about the earth's being a round ball; about its revolving daily on its axis and coursing around the sun every three hundred and sixty-five days? Simply nothing at all. What did they know about the real causes of day and night, spring and autumn, summer and winter? Nothing whatever. An ordinary school-boy ten years of age knows more upon this subject than did all the Bible writers combined, adding your God and Jesus Christ to the number. Revelation has never brought these simple truths to light. Jehovah seemed to know nothing about them. It has been left to science to bring them to the knowledge of mankind.

Had you undertaken to show that the stories of Robinson Crusoe and Old Mother Hubbard and her Wonderful Dog harmonize with science and are friendly to it, I think you would have been more successful. The first was written by a man of far more intelligence than the Bible writers. It contains nothing like the number of improbabilities and impossibilities that the Bible does. It has amused and instructed millions of young people without filling their minds with false representations of angry gods, malicious devils, and vindictive torture. Even in Old Mother Hubbard, though the tale of a dog's dressing in man's clothes and talking is perfectly absurd, it is no more so than an ass talking and holding an argument with his master. Old Mother Hubbard and her dog, equally with the Bible, recognized many of the arts and trades, and said nothing derogatory to them.

You speak of Noah's skill in building the ark, and of his science in classifying the animals. The ark appears to have been a mere box, or "flat-boat," and did not require a vast amount of skill; besides, it is not just to give much credit of it to Noah, for God told him how to make it in every particular. Nor can I see why Noah should be credited with having classified the animals, when there is no account of his doing anything of the kind. According to the pictorial representations I have seen, the animals marched into the ark two by two, like trained soldiers, and of their own accord, while Noah seemed to pay very little attention to them. But really, my friend, do you attach much importance to that silly "Flood Story"? Do you regard it as a scientific statement? Does it seem scientific to you to pretend that the atmosphere could support moisture enough to rain over the entire earth to the depth of five miles, to the tops of the highest mountains? If it did not come from the atmosphere, where did it come from?

Does it seem scientific to say that two or three millions of animals, birds and insects would voluntarily and simultaneously congregate from every zone and continent of the earth unto Noah, to be placed in the ark? If they did not come voluntarily, what brought them together? Noah was busy building the ark for them, and he could not attend to it. Is it scientific to believe that animals from the tropics, and animals from the frigid zone, and from all parts of the earth, all of different natures, could be shut up in a tight box—the only door and window closed—and remain alive for any length of time? Is it scientific to believe that the food of such animals as require fresh meat, fresh fish, fresh grass, fresh leaves, quantities of worms and insects of all kinds, and even honey, could be provided and kept in the ark with all that aggregate of animal life—some 120 animals and insects to every square yard the ark contained—sufficient to last them more than a year? Is it a scientific supposition that when the animals from the warm countries disembarked on the top of Mt. Ararat, said to be 17,000 feet above the level of the sea, and 5,000 feet above the line of perpetual snow and frost, they could live till they descended 15,000 feet or more, where the weather was mild? Is it scientific to think they could find anything to eat after all the animals had been killed and every plant and tree inevitably destroyed by being a year under water? Is it scientific to hold that a rainbow never appeared until Noah left the ark some four thousand years ago? Does not science teach that rainbows have been produced for as many hundred thousand years as there has been a sun to shine upon descending drops of rain? Can you scientifically account for the disappearance of the water, which reached to the tops of the highest mountains? Where could it possibly have gone to?

You mention the tower of Babel as being a great work of science and architectural skill and compare it with the pyramids of Egypt. There are pretty good proofs that the pyramids were built, for they still exist nearly as good as ever, but is there a stick or a stone or a brick to show where the tower of Babel stood? Is there a person living who has any definite idea where it stood? Did anybody ever live who knew anything about it?

Do you think it a scientific statement where Moses is described as having turned rods into snakes, all the water of Egypt—including the river Nile—into blood, changing dust into lice, producing spontaneously immense quantities of frogs, locusts, etc. Is it a scientific thought that the waters of the Red Sea separated and stood up perpendicularly like walls while two millions of people, and at least as many cattle passed over dry shod, and several hundred thousand Egyptians followed in and were drowned? Did a scientist ever see water behave in that way? Is it scientific to think that Joshua, Elijah and Elisha were able to divide the rapid Jordan in a similar manner? Is it scientific to think that a man could stop the sun and moon or any other of the heavenly bodies? Is it scientific to pretend that Elijah could manufacture meal and oil from nothing, that he could prevent the fall of rain and dew upon the earth for three years, and that men and animals and vegetation could live after such a protracted dry spell? Is it scientific to claim that he could call down fire from heaven and burn up stones and twelve barrels of water and over one hundred men? Is it scientific to think he could travel up into the upper atmosphere in a chariot of fire, and that he could live for a minute where there is no air or oxygen? Would a real scientist believe that Elisha could make an axe float on the surface of the river; that Samson could with his naked hands tear the jaws of a lion, kill one thousand men at one time with the jaw-bone of an ass, and finally that he could, by laying hold of the pillars of a temple, throw it to the ground and kill many thousand people? Could a scientist believe that muscular strength could be produced by long hair instead of well-developed muscles? Could he believe that a fish could swallow a man whole, retain him in his stomach three days, and under water, without the man's suffering for want of air, and at the end of the time throw him up on dry ground as good as ever?

Does a real scientist believe that a ghost could hold intercourse with a young virgin and beget a child? Does he believe that there is any mountain in Syria from the top of which a person could see all the kingdoms of the earth? Does he believe that a dead man was ever brought back to life? Does he believe that water can be changed into wine? Does he believe that the light of the sun could be extinguished for three hours? that the graves could be opened and the dead walk forth and hold intercourse with their former companions? Does he believe that a person could make a trip of four thousand miles, through the internal fires of the earth to the centre and return in thirty-six hours? (Would it not have been pretty warm traveling?) Could a man who is a real scientist, and who believes in the immutability of nature's laws, intelligently believe that any of these things could take place? To believe them, does not all scientific knowledge and observation, all human experiences have to be set aside, and a blind superstitious faith and credulity substituted in their place? Is not, in fact, a belief in impossibilities utterly at variance with science? and can they, in any true sense, be said to harmonize and to maintain friendly relations towards each other?

You speak of Abraham's showing his wonderful surgical skill in performing circumcision upon his son Isaac. Was that a feat to brag about? Could not any Hottentot have done as much? Does it not require far more skill to put a ring in the nose of a hog or to emasculate him? If Abraham had performed the surgical operation of cutting his boy's head off, as he intended to do, would it not have shown more skill than cutting off a little loose skin? You claim that the Hebrew women were excellent cooks and bread-makers. Do you allude to the peculiar cake or bread which God commanded them to make, mixed with human excrement and cow-dung, as described in Ezekiel iv? Was that scientific bread-making? Is there the slightest proof that the Hebrews cooked any better or baked any better than the neighboring nations? You speak about the Hebrew women being excellent milliners and dressmakers, and that they knew how to use cosmetics. Have you any certificate of this fact? I call for proofs. You speak of their jewelry and rich apparel; do you mean that which they stole from the Egyptians? I think there is no special account of their making any jewelry, but they were adepts at stealing, robbing, and murdering, invariably taking the jewelry and other valuables from their victims. About the greatest feat in the jewelry line mentioned in the Bible is where the priest Aaron, while Moses was up on the mountain helping God to get up the Ten Commandments, took the jewelry that had been stolen from other people and melted it together and made a golden calf for the Israelites to worship as a god. Did that require much science?

You quote Job to show how much the Israelites knew about astronomy; but are you not aware that the best Hebrew scholars have long since decided that that book was not written by a Hebrew but was probably borrowed from the Chaldeans or the Edomites? The fact that not a person or place is mentioned in it that is spoken of in any other part of the Bible goes far to confirm this opinion. It is not Hebrew in style or character, and neither mentions any other part of the Bible nor does any other part mention it. As that is the only instance where the least astronomical knowledge is indicated in the book it hardly proves the Jews to have been astronomers. All they knew of the stars was from observation; they had no knowledge of calculation in that direction—they knew nothing about calculating eclipses, transits, etc.

You claim the Israelites as "superior musicians." I cannot admit it. They doubtless had several crude instruments, and were able to play them promiscuously, and "make a joyful noise," as David called it, but they knew nothing of harmony, without which there can be no real music. Oriental nations have never known anything about harmony, nor do they to this day. It is only within the last two or three centuries that the world has known anything about harmony, the knowledge of which was perfected in Europe. The Orientals had nothing to do with it.

Are you sure the Israelites played on "a harp of a thousand strings"? Will you please point out the part of the Bible that mentions such an instrument? Have you not got your Bible a trifle confounded with the Hard-Shell Baptist who preached in the Southwest, taking for a text, "And they shall gnaw a file, and flee unto the mountains of Hepsidam, where the lion roareth and the whang-doodle mourneth for her first-born; and he played on a harp of a thousand strings—spirits of just men made perfect"? Is that not the only instance on record where anything is said about the thousand-stringed harp?

You boast of the architectural skill of the Israelites. You have little grounds for it. They lived in tents, and knew very little about houses. Their tabernacle was only a tent. It is thought by many that Solomon's wonderful Temple was a myth, that it never had an existence; but if the Bible story is credited, it is evident that the Hebrews had not skill enough to erect it, for they were obliged to send for thousands of skilled workmen from Tyre and Sidon. Palestine presents no relics of ancient architectural grandeur. I have it from a friend who has made four different journeys to Palestine, and who has been over every square mile of that country, that there is not in the entire length and breadth of the "Holy Land" a stone, a monument, a Hebrew inscription, or anything of the kind, to prove that a numerous and civilized people lived there three thousand years ago; while in other parts of Syria, in Chaldea, Asia Minor, Phoenicia, Egypt, Greece, Cypress, and Rome, the remains of ancient grandeur are often met with. In the Metropolitan Museum on Fourteenth street, in this city, there are some twenty thousand specimens of ancient workmanship in earthen-ware, pottery, etc., principally brought from Cypress, but among them all, not one specimen of Hebrew manufacture. Probably there is nothing in existence to-day, in the whole world, to show there was such a nation, save less than half a dozen coins, and the genuineness of these is disputed.

You say every Jew was required to learn some substantial trade. But what kind of trades were they? Tent-making, pasturing cattle, sandal-making, etc. Nothing showing a high order of civilization. In chronology they were deficient. Their calendar was inferior to Caesar's and Gregory's. Their months depended upon the moon and were ever changing. It cannot be traced with precision like the calendars of Caesar and Gregory. They never had a commerce that amounted to anything, and the ships of Palestine never made much show upon the oceans of the world. They were a pastoral people, whose country contained scarcely twelve thousand square miles—about the size of New Hampshire—and half of it consisted of mountains, ravines, lakes, etc., which could hardly be cultivated, and they never were a powerful nation, nor were they ever far advanced in arts, science and civilization. It is a noticeable fact that though the Greek historian, Herodotus—probably the most correct of ancient historians—who twice made a journey through Syria, Phoenicia, etc., never mentioned the Hebrew nation, and this nearly five hundred years before the Christian era. They were a nation or a race of shepherds, too obscure to attract his attention or to be worthy of mention in his writings.

There is little doubt that Jewish history is very much exaggerated, that there never was as large a population in that country as represented. It would be wholly unable to support such a population. The impossibility of this can be very readily seen by a little calculation. To turn out an army of one million fighting men—and this number it must have had at least, to lose 500,000 in a single day—it must have had a population of five or six millions—many times denser than Belgium, the most populous country of Europe, and chiefly a level and fertile country, with but little waste land. It would be utterly impossible for such a diminutive, broken country as Palestine to sustain any such number of people.

There is but little ground for making a great man of Solomon. He was probably a myth; but, according to the Bible, he was more remarkable for sensuality than for any scientific qualities. He knew very little about the sciences. The Proverbs accredited to him were the collections of ages and from various nations. There is no proof that he wrote one of them, and if the "Song" in the Bible that is called by his name is a fair specimen of his "thousand and five" songs you allude to, it is very well that they have not come down to our time. They would do him no credit, and nobody any good. He assuredly was an inferior Tupper, a very poor Linnæus, a weak Audubon, a puerile Cuvier, and a mean apology for an Agassiz.

Does the fact that "Jesus wept" prove him to have been a scientist? Weeping was in his line. Even if he had a pretense that Jerusalem would be destroyed, did that make him a scientist? Is there proof that he attended any institution of learning; that he studied the sciences, or knew anything of them? The mention of his talking with the doctors in the temple when twelve years of age is but a trifling incident in a career of thirty years, of which nothing whatever is known. Did it show him to be a man of science to look for fruit upon a fig-tree in the part of the year when those trees do not bear fruit, and to get angry and curse the tree because he was disappointed? Your effort to make a scientist of Jesus I regard an utter failure.

What if Paul did visit Athens and look upon the temple of Diana and found it far more splendid than anything he ever saw in Palestine; did that make him a scientist? Could not an Esquimaux equally as well look upon the Capitol at Washington, the Croton aqueduct at High Bridge or upon our East River Suspension Bridge without being a scientist? It is very doubtful whether he ever visited Rome. In the last chapter of Acts it says he did, but afterwards, in the first chapter of Romans, he talks as though he was very anxious to visit Rome, but says nothing about his having done so, nor does it afterwards state that he ever visited the "City of Seven Hills;" but be that as it may, he was a very small part of a scientist, and taught very few scientific truths. The only time he used the word science, he called it false. He was great in extolling the virtues of faith and blind credulity, and had literally nothing to say upon scientific subjects. Like his master, he was dogmatic, dealt in parables, enigmas and absurdities, and knew little or nothing of science. His positive assertion that he "was determined not to know anything save Jesus Christ and him crucified," decides forever just how much of a scientist he was. A man favorable to scientific investigation would never thus declare himself. Peter and the rest of the apostles were equally scientific! Faith with all of them was the sine qua non; science was tabooed. Perhaps the nearest that Peter ever came to being scientific and dexterous was when he so neatly took off the ear of Malchus, the servant of the high priest, with his sword. It seems, however, you did not deem it of sufficient consequence to mention it, though it was certainly equal to Abraham's surgery. Perhaps Jesus performed the scientific part of the operation when he touched the place where the ear had been and healed it, but whether by bringing out a new ear is not stated. What business Peter, a disciple of Jesus and key-holder of the gate of heaven, had with a sword is not scientifically explained.

I am sorry, my friend, that I cannot find as much science in the Bible and among its authors as you do, but perhaps I am unfortunate to that extent. It is probable that we look through different lenses.

Yours very truly, D. M. BENNETT.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1877.

"The Day of Rest."

This is the title of an ably written pamphlet by Wm. McDonnell, of Lindsay, Ontario, which was first published in The Canadian Monthly, and was subsequently very acceptably delivered by the author before the Liberal Convention at Toronto.

He enters elaborately into the merits of the Sabbath or Sunday question, and quotes many authors, early and modern, who touch upon the subject. He shows in the pamphlet that the divisions of the days into months of twenty-eight days, from one new moon to another, and its subdivision into quarters or weeks of seven days each was an older institution than the Jewish nation, and originated in ancient India, Chaldea, and Egypt. In the latter country the Hebrews learned its use and adopted it.

He shows that Jesus paid little attention to the Jewish Sabbath and was arrested for violating it by straying into the fields and plucking corn. In the new religion which he inaugurated he practically abrogated the Jewish Sabbath. Neither he nor his disciples, at any time, by precept or example enjoined its observance.

He shows conclusively that Sunday or day of the sun was not substituted for Saturn's day or Saturday as a holy day by any authority of Jesus nor any of his apostles; that centuries passed away after his death before any formal movement was made towards effecting the change. The first Christian Emperor, Constantine, called the "Great," whose sudden change from Paganism to Christianity—and in the same year, too, in which he put to death, in cold blood not less than seven members of his own family—made him somewhat notorious, issued the first edict in the year 321, commanding the observance of Sunday. It read as follows: "Let all judges and people of the towns (or cities) rest, and all the various trades be suspended on the venerable day of the sun (venerabile die Solis). Those who live in the country, however, may freely and without fault attend to the cultivation of the fields (since it often happens that no other day may be suitable for sowing grain and planting the vine), lest, with the loss of favorable opportunity, the commodities offered by Divine Providence should be destroyed."

It was not, however, until long after the promulgation of this edict that tendencies towards Sabbatarianism, or a confusion of the Christian Sunday with the Jewish Sabbath, began to manifest themselves, and it was not until the year 538 that ecclesiastical authority (the third Council of Orleans) recommended, rather than enjoined, abstinence from agricultural labor on Sunday, in order, it is said, "that the people might have more leisure to go to church and say their prayers."

"The theory of the holiness of the Sabbath and of its binding force, had its advocates and opponents down to the period of the Reformation. Luther and many of the Reformers, followed by numbers of the most eminent prelates and preachers, even at the present time, have strongly objected to a Mosaic, or an austere, or what might be called a puritanic observance of the Christian Sabbath."

Luther, the great Reformer, said upon this subject:—"As regards the Sabbath or Sunday, there is no necessity for keeping it; but if we do, it ought not on account of man's commandment, but because Nature teaches us from time to time to take a day of rest." And again: "If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake; if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to ride on it, to dance on it, and to do anything that will reprove this encroachment on the Christian spirit and liberty."

Melancthon, another Reformer, said: "They who think that, by the authority of the Church, the observance of the Lord's day was appointed instead of the Sabbath, as if necessary, are greatly deceived."

Mr. McDonnell says: "Erasmus, Tyndale, Calvin, Grotius, Neander, Milton, Baxter, and Bunyan, also expressed themselves against the enforcement of any Sabbath obligation. And a writer on the views of the celebrated John Knox regarding the Sabbath, says: 'It is a mistake to suppose that either Sabbatarianism or asceticism was recommended by Knox. Agreeing with the other Reformers, Knox, in setting forth his Confession of Faith, 1560, The words of the first table says not a word about the Sabbath.'"

Erasmus said: "He that ordained the Sabbath ordained it for man's sake, and not contrariwise—man because of the Sabbath day. It is meet, therefore, that the keeping of the Sabbath day give place to the commodity and profit of man."

Tyndale said: "As for the Sabbath, we be lordes over the Sabbath, find yet may change it into the Monday, or any other day, as we see neede; or we may make two every weeke, if it were expediente, and one not enough to teach the people. Neither needed we any holy day at all, if the people myght be taught without it."

John Calvin thus expressed himself on the same subject: "The day was used only as a remedy necessary to the preservation of order in the Church, neither do I regard the septenary number that I would bind the Church to its observance." In speaking of those who hold a Judaic opinion he further observed: "And truly we see what such a doctrine has profited, for those who adopt it far exceed the Jews in gross, carnal and superstitious observance of the Sabbath; so that the reproofs which we read in Isaiah are no less applicable to them at the present day than to those to whom the prophet rebuked in his time."

Grotius, in his comment on the fourth commandment, after alluding to the sentiments of the fathers and the enactments of Constantine, concludes: "These things refute those who suppose that the first day of the week (that is, the Lord's day) was substituted, in place of the Sabbath, for no mention is ever made of such a thing by Christ or the apostles. . . . The day of the Lord's resurrection was not observed by any Christians from any precept of God, or of the apostles, but by voluntary agreement of the liberty which had been given them."

Neander said: "The festival of Sunday was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intention of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect."

John Milton said: "The law of the Sabbath being thus repealed, that no particular day of worship has been appointed in its place is evident."

Baxter said: "The Decalogue was but a part of the Jewish law, and the Jewish law was given to no other people but to them. So that in Moses' day it bound no other nation in the world. Therefore it needed not any abrogation of the Gentiles, but a declaration that it did not bind them."

John Bunyan said: "This caution, in conclusion, I would give to put a stop to the Jewish ceremony, to wit, that a seventh-day Sabbath, pursued according to its imposition by law (and I know not that it is imposed by the Apostles), leads to blood and stoning to death those who do but gather sticks thereon, a thing which no way becomes the gospel." . . . "The old seventh-day Sabbath is abolished and done away with, it has nothing to do with the Churches of the Gentiles. As for the seventh-day that is gone to its grave with the signs and shadows of the Old Testament."

In later times the modern shining lights of the Church have spoken in a way not to be misunderstood.

Bishop Taylor says: "That we are free from the observance of the Sabbath St. Paul expressly affirms in Colossians."

Bishop Washburton says: "The observance of the Sabbath is no more a natural duty than circumcision."

Dr. McNight says: "The whole law of Moses being abrogated by Christ, Christians are under no obligation to observe any of the Jewish holy days—not even the Sabbath."

Dr. Paley says: "St. Paul evidently appears to have considered the Sabbath as part of the Jewish ritual and not obligatory upon Christians." . . . "The celebration of divine service never occupied the whole day. What remains, therefore, of Sunday, must be considered as a mere rest from the ordinary occupation of civil life. If the command by which the Sabbath was instituted be binding on Christians, it must be binding as to the day, the duties, and the penalty; in none of which it is received. The observance of the Sabbath was not one of the articles enjoined by the Apostles. The practice of holding religious assemblages on one day of the week may have originated from some precept of Christ or his Apostles, though none such now be extant." . . . "A cessation upon that day from labor, beyond the time of attendance upon public worship, is not intimated in any passage in the New Testament. Neither did Christ nor his Apostles deliver, that we know of, any command to their disciples for a discontinuance upon that day of the common affairs of their progression. The resting on that day from our employments longer than we are detained from them by attendance upon these assemblies, is, to Christians, an ordinance of human institution."

Archbishop Whately, in his essay on Paul, says: "It cannot be denied that he [Paul] does speak frequently and strongly of the termination of the Mosaic law, and of the exemption of Christians from its obligations, without ever limiting or qualifying the assertion." . . . "The fourth commandment is evidently not a 'moral' but a 'positive' precept. It will be plainly seen, on a careful examination of the accounts given by the evangelists, that Jesus did decidedly and avowedly violate the Sabbath! on purpose, it would seem, to assert in this way his divine authority." . . . "The dogma of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, that the observance of the Sabbath is a part of the moral law, is to me utterly unintelligible."

Sir William Domville, in his "Six Texts," page 241, says: "Centuries of the Christian era passed away before the Sunday was observed by the Christian Church as a Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the Sabbatical edict of Constantine, A. D. 321."

Similar declarations were made by Bishop Jeremy Taylor, Dr. Barrow, Bishop Horsely, Rev. Norman Macleod, D.D., of Glasgow, Scotland, and numerous other distinguished men in the Church. The last-named gentleman brought great opprobrium upon himself from his brother clergymen because he took so firm a stand against a rigid, puritanic observance of Sunday as the Sabbath. His brother, Donald Macleod, thus wrote of him: "He believed that the authority of the Jewish Sabbath was an insufficient, unscriptural, and therefore perilous basis on which to rest the observance of the Lord's day." . . . "In proportion to the strict enforcement of Sabbatarianism, there would, in his opinion, be multiplied those practical inconsistencies, dishonesties, and Pharisaic sophistries, which prove, in all ages, supremely detrimental to morality and religion. It was, therefore, with the desire of vindicating the divine sanction of the Lord's day, as distinct from the Sabbath, that he addressed the Presbytery, and in doing so he anticipated with a deep sense of responsibility, the peril he must incur and the pain his views were certain to inflict on many of his countrymen."

For uttering his honest convictions Dr. Macleod suffered as much unkind treatment from the clergy and the Church as though he had denounced every dogma in the Christian creed. Thus wrote his brother: "His table was loaded with letters remonstrating with him, abusing him, denouncing him, cursing him. Ministers of the gospel passed him without recognition; one of these more zealous than the rest hissed him in the street. During the first phase of this agitation he felt acutely the loneliness of his position."

Dr. Macleod's own own words were these: "I felt at first so utterly cut off from every Christian brother, that had a chimney-sweep given me his sooty hand, and smiled on me with his black face, I would have welcomed his salute and blessed him. Men apologized for having been seen in my company. An eminent minister of the Free Church refused to preach in a united Presbyterian pulpit in which I was to preach the same day. Orators harangued against me in the City Hall and Merchant's Hall. The empty drums rattled, and the brazen trumpets blew 'certain sounds' in every village. 'Leave the Church!' 'Libel him!' were the brotherly advices given. Money was subscribed to build a Free Barony Church; and a Free Church Mission house was opened beside mine (though having no reference to mine, as it was said). Caricatures were displayed in every shop window." . . . "But the conviction is deeply impressing itself upon me that the gospel is not preached generally in Scotland, that so-called 'Evangelicalism' is Judaism."

In his journal he thus wrote touching the Sabbath question: "One would have to read the newspapers I have collected to comprehend the fury of the attack. Men from every pulpit and through the daily press seem to gnash their teeth on me. . . . I am persuaded that the Sabbath controversy will more and more reveal the intense Judaism of Scotland. . . . The more intelligent of the laity were more and more becoming moderate in their views and sympathizing with me. I had but dared to express in a coherent, bold form what they had long practically felt. They had long felt uneasy about the universal declamations from platform and pulpit about 'Sabbath desecration' as it is called by those who themselves employ cabs or milk-carts, etc., on Sabbath. No voice was lifted up in defense of fair Christian liberty, except by so-called secular papers, i. e. non-sectarian or non-Church papers. What could any layman do? The clergymen had it all their own way, and woe be to the man who among themselves would dare to 'peep.' If he had no influence he would soon be crushed by the evangelical battering rams. . . . There is a set of ecclesiastics who will not read a book, a newspaper, or argue with any one who does not reflect their own sentiments. They look into the glass and say, 'I see every time I look there one who always agrees with me.' That is their whole world, and of the rest they are proudly ignorant."

Thus from all these first-class authorities it is plainly seen,

1. That the Jewish seventh day or Sabbath was not original with the Jews, but was an idea borrowed from Pagan nations which had existed long before themselves.

2. That the Jewish Sabbath was disregarded, abrogated, and set aside by Jesus, and that his followers were not required to pay any more attention to it than to circumcision, keeping the "Passover," or to the burning of bulls and rams on the altar.

3. That neither Jesus or any of his apostles or disciples nor any of the early Fathers at any time enjoined the observance of the Jewish Sabbath; nor did they say a word in reference to the substitution of Sunday for it.

4. That it was the cruel murderer, Constantine the Great, who issued the first edict that Sunday should be kept in towns as the Sabbath.

5. That notwithstanding this edict more than two hundred years passed before Sunday received general recognition as the Sabbath. At that time agricultural labor on Sunday was prohibited that the people might have more time to go to church and say their prayers.

6. That the great Reformers, Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, Knox, Erasmus, Tyndale, Grotius, Neander, as well as the distinguished writers, Milton, Baxter, and Bunyan, discarded the idea of Sunday being the Jewish Sabbath.

7. That as great lights as the Church ever possessed allowed games, amusements, and recreations to be indulged in on Sunday.

8. That it was not till within the last three centuries that the rigid and strict observance of Sunday was enjoined by the Puritans and that it was thus turned into a dull, irksome, unnatural, and gloomy day.

9. That the Christian Sabbath is altogether a Judaistic, Pharasaical, Puritanical institution, wholly unauthorized by Christ, the apostles, the disciples, the early Christian Fathers, and the great Reformers.

10. That as a day of rest and recreation Sunday is just as good a day as any other of the seven, and that it is perfectly proper for all persons to give just such observance to it as their consciences dictate so long as they do not infringe upon the rights of others. Whatever is right to do on any other day in the week is right to do on Sunday. Morality in no sense is subserved or promoted by keeping the Pharasaical, Puritanical, long-faced, unnatural, sectarian Sabbath.

To those who would like to read what the author of "Exeter Hall" and "The Heathens of the Heath" has to say upon the subject we will be happy to mail a copy of his "Day of Rest." Price, including postage, only ten cents.

In this connection we wish to call the attention of our readers to the fact that Mr. William McDonnell has been writing No. 3 of his Heterodox Novels, of which series EXETER HALL and THE HEATHENS OF THE HEATH are Nos. 1 and 2. In a few months it will be ready to present to the public, and we doubt not the thousands who have read the two excellent works of his will be more than anxious to see No. 3.

The Great Works Of Thomas Paine.

For three weeks past the works of Paine have been in press. They are now nearly completed, and before the issue of another copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER will be ready to mail to those who want them. We have received a goodly number of orders for the "Complete Works," but have made such preparations that we are able to supply many more. Every Liberal in America who has not a copy of the great works of the great Paine ought to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a copy, in a large volume of nearly 1000 pages, at the very low price of $3.00 in good cloth, $4.00 in leather, red burnished edges, and $4.50 in morocco, gilt edges; sent by mail without additional cost. This volume contains a Life of Paine by Calvin Blanchard, Common Sense, The Crisis, Rights of Man, Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Erskine, An Essay on Dreams, Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Letter to Samuel Adams, etc., with a steel engraving of Paine. The whole is printed on Small Pica type, and is undoubtedly the finest edition of Paine's works yet brought out besides being much cheaper than other editions.

Those who do not wish to purchase the entire works can obtain them in parts as follows:

"Paine's Political Works," in one vol., cloth, with steel engraving, containing Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man. Price, including postage, $1.50.

"Paine's Theological Works," including a Life of Paine, Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, and the other parts named above, with a steel plate portrait, in cloth, $1.50; in heavy paper covers, $1.00.

Parts still more subdivided.

"Common Sense," 15 cents. "The Crisis," 16 numbers, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents. "The Rights of Man," parts I and II, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents. "The Age of Reason," paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. "The Age of Reason and Examination of Prophecies," paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. "The Life of Paine," by Calvin Blanchard, with steel portrait, paper, 40 cents; cloth 75 cents.

It has cost us a good deal of money to bring out all these works, and we hope our numerous friends will appreciate the efforts we are making, and encourage us all they can. Every person who orders a copy of the complete works or of the parts helps us to that extent to meet our obligations. Now, friends, how many of you want a fine copy of "Paine's Complete Works?" All speak together if you wish to.

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

It is with pleasure that we report a large accession to the number of orders received for this volume since our last. We are gladly sending them to the four quarters of the compass, and are willing to "keep doing so" until every friend and patron has a copy. A considerable number of friends in ordering enclose one dollar, saying, "For the extra 25 cents send some tracts." This treatment has given no offense, and in view of the fact that, including postage, we are selling the first edition at less than cost, we do not at all object to the dollar remittance, and to sending a few tracts in addition.

It is with pride that we are able to lay the following kind and appreciative letters before our readers:

A CARD FROM PROF. WM. DENTON.

WELLESLEY, MASS., June 15, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am much obliged to you for the very handsome and exceedingly interesting and useful Collection of Poems, etc. Many years ago I commenced forming such a collection, but lost my MS., and gave it up. Such a collection as the one you have made was much needed, and to lecturers will be of great service. We need all the help we can obtain from poetry and music, which have proved in the past great auxiliaries in the cause of error.

Sincerely your friend, WM. DENTON.

FROM MRS. UNDERWOOD.

THORNDIKE, MASS., June 16, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Esq., Dear Sir: I have to thank you for a handsomely bound and nicely-printed copy of the "Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns and Recitations," with whose appearance and contents I am greatly pleased. I am surprised that you are able to put the price of so large a volume at so low a figure. I had anticipated a much smaller volume, and much less varied assortment of hymns, etc. I think the selections evince much discrimination and good taste.

Such a volume has long been needed and demanded, and the Liberals of America ought to be grateful to the enterprising publisher who has supplied that need. All tastes can surely be gratified among so wide and varied a collection. I have looked over my copy with much pleasure and interest, not the least item of that interest being attributable to the surprise I felt in discovering so much poetic talent developed by many whom I had hitherto known mainly through their prose contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think your efforts are bound to be a success as most of the hymns are adapted to be sung to popular and well-known airs.

Your forms for marriages, funerals, etc., will be of great service to many who object conscientiously to using religious ceremonies on such occasions. I hope the sale of the book will be sufficiently rapid to remunerate you at least for the outlay you must have incurred by this publication, and I am quite sure no one will regret the money invested in its purchase.

With appreciation of your enterprise in publishing, and with best wishes for your success in all your publications, I remain, Respectfully yours, SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

ANOTHER.

FRIEND BENNETT: I wish to assure you of the great pleasure which your Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations affords me, for in it I find something adapted to all my mental moods. I think its sentiments are the very quintessence of Liberalism, and will please alike the Materialist and the Spiritualist. Then the beauty of its dress, its fine paper, type, and beautiful binding speak largely for your good taste and judgment. I hope there will be a great demand for the book, for I fear none of us without one can be so pious as we ought to be. Blessings upon thee, friend Bennett, for issuing such a useful work.

Very truly yours, MRS. S. W. KENT.

New York, June 18, 1877.

ANOTHER.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 17, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: I was never more delightfully disappointed in all the days of my life than I was upon the reception and perusal of your last addition to THE TRUTH SEEKER Library. It was a much larger work than I expected. It is better bound, better printed, better arranged and in every particular better gotten up than I anticipated. I read it right through by course from title-page to index as I would a novel. The matter, in variety and quality, far exceeds my most extravagant expectation. I cannot see how it can possibly fail to please every class of readers.

First are Forms for Agreement and Association. Now if it falls into the possession of people who do not wish to agree or associate, they can pass on to Principles of Liberalism. If they are not Liberally inclined, nor given to principles, they can pass those and proceed to the Invocations. Now phrenology teaches that there is a development of veneration in every head. Every human head with brains must have a reverence for something, and must manifest it in some way. From the infant invoking its mother for the nourishment of life to an Alexander weeping for other worlds to conquer, or the philosopher longing for a fuller unfoldment of the flower of wisdom in his soul, there is a spirit of prayer breathing all through humanity, from the humblest to the highest. And here are prayers suited to the needs of all. Here are prayers with God in them for those who would address one—prayers for those who would supplicate spirits—good pious prayers that might pass in an orthodox pulpit—prayers for those who neither believe in gods or spirits or superstition of any sort—just the natural outpourings of a heart inspired by the poetry and grandeur of the wondrous Universe. And even the casual reader, in whose heart there isn't an outpour, be he an admirer of sublimity of style, will duly appreciate them as literary productions. So, all who pray, and all who do not, will find this part of the work particularly pleasing. Some of the succeeding chapters are designed for special occasions, as marriages, naming of infants, etc., but to the parties engaged in such business, they will be of the most vital importance.

Then follow the Funeral Services. As all flesh is grass and dies, there is surely coming a time when these discourses will be specially serviceable to all flesh. And here I pause to figure. A funeral sermon (cheap sort) usually costs the bereaved about five dollars. The cheapest lithograph sermons are wholesaled to the "cloth" per barrel at ten cents each. Now twelve of the most eloquent orations ever put in print, and adapted for all the circumstances of death, at ten cents each, one dollar twenty cents. Price of the whole book, including everything but the multiplication table and receipt for stove polish, seventy-five cents. And the Hymns, and the music. A man without music in his soul fit for treason, etc. Beware of the man who don't sing Bennett's hymns. Point him out to the police. Five hundred and twenty-five of them, not one of which but would cause celestial choirs to chant themselves hoarse.

The Recitations include all that is good in "Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song," and the choicest gems in our language. Take the book altogether, its matter, make-up, and cheapness, 'tis truly a marvelous work. And it is needed by everybody. If everybody don't sing nor pray nor name infants, they either get married or die. And they can't do either up handsomely now and in the latest style without "The Truth Seeker Collection." And any one who can't raise seventy-five cents for it is not fit to do either. I will now pause for some one else to rise.

Faithfully yours, RICHARD COOK.

Card from J. P. Mendum.

BOSTON, June 16, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Esq., Dear Sir: After the repeated misrepresentation to you that Mr. Seaver and myself would never make a deed of transfer of Paine Hall property to a Board of Trustees, perhaps it may surprise you to be told that yesterday the transfer was actually made, and that the deed is now in the office of the Recorder.

The Board of Trustees consists of Horace Seaver, Osmer Jenkins, B. F. Underwood, Thomas Robinson, J. P. Mendum.

When the deed is published we hope you will copy the same into your paper, with such comments as you see proper to make. Truly yours, J. P. MENDUM.

[Without shedding unavailing tears that this transfer to a legal Board of Trustees was not made thirty months ago, let every Liberal in the land be glad that it is done even now. May the sun of prosperity shine upon Paine Hall, many, many years to come!—Ed. T. S.]

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAINE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

It is a very common mistake to regard civilization as an entity, a thing, rather than a process. It can no more be called an entity than life or growth, but like these it is a process.

In general terms we may define it as a progressive movement of the individual and of society. In a word, it is Evolution. Its results are the highest attainments, the acquisition of the best things, as wealth, culture, morality, and the elevation of the lower classes of society. Civilization is not an end, but a means to higher ends; the results of which we have spoken are not fixed and final, but though results of previous forces, they in turn cease to be results and become causes of other results. If we speak of civilization as culture and refinement, we shall find that it is more the activity of mind or spirit which leads to higher culture—the spirit of investigation, invention, discovery, and creation, which leads ever onward and upward.

This fermentation of humanity is the product of many factors, and has been effected by all sorts of human activities. War, commerce, agriculture, inventions, crusades, discoveries, literature, art, religion, skepticism, government, languages, science, manufactures, climate, soil, food, and many other things have assisted in developing the capacities of the human intellect. In the present century science is working the greatest wonders for man's welfare this earth has ever seen. Different writers have emphasized some one of these elements. One thinks that Government possesses the secret power of progress; another claims all advancement for Religion, and others that Morality is the cause itself, while yet others attribute the magic power to the forces of Nature. Mr. Buckle claims that man's progress is due to his physical environment. Mr. Huxley explains it as a system of reflex action—mind acting on matter, and matter on brain. Spencer explains it under the law of Evolution. Guizot defines it as "the progress of society;" "the progress of the individuals; the melioration of the social system, and the expansion of the mind and faculties of man" (Bancroft). Mr. Fiske offers this definition: "Civilization, for example, is a process, but Dr. Whately speaks of it as if it were a thing which could be handed about from one nation to another, or hidden away for a time in some dark corner."

Buckle maintains that the favorable environment produces progress in the race, and that as man progresses he gains more and more control over Nature, and utilizes her forces. He makes the desert to blossom. He overcomes diseases—as the plague, leprosy—also prevents famine, and because of man's increased knowledge, wars are less frequent and less barbarous. From these facts he claims that the advance of civilization is characterized by a diminishing influence of physical laws, and an increasing influence of mental laws.

Lecky urges similar views: "The increased intellectual activities have widened the knowledge of men and increased the sum of human happiness. Enterprise, improvements, inventions, discoveries, have been outlets for the increased mental power, and efforts made in these ways have brought back rich reward to man."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

In points of faith let graceless zealots fight—
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right.—Pope

WHILE the gastric juice has a mild, bland, sweetish taste, it possesses the power of dissolving the hardest food that can be swallowed; it has no influence whatever on the soft and delicate fibres of the living stomach, nor upon the living hand, but, at the moment of death, it begins to eat them away with the power of the strongest acids.

B. F. Underwood's Appointments.

MR. EDITOR: July 15th I speak at Kansas City, Mo. From July 16th to 22d, I will be in debate with the Rev. M. D. Todd at Pleasant Hill, Mo. July 23rd and 24th I lecture at Lincoln, Neb. Friends in other places that wish lectures by me on my way West, or when I return, should write me immediately. Respectfully,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Thorndike, Mass., June 12, 1877.

A Card.

I wish to inform the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Freethinkers of Western New York, Ontario, Canada, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois that I am expecting to go Westward soon after the Fourth of July, and am now ready to make arrangements for lectures on my way thither and back.

W. S. BELL.

New Bedford, Mass.

Jamieson Coming East.

W. F. Jamieson is to commence a debate with a representative of Christianity in Lanesville Station, Pa., on the 10th of July.

Organization.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 14, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: May I request all the Freethinkers residing in Central and Western New York, including towns as far east as Syracuse and Binghamton, who are in favor of a Freethought organization for that territory, to send me their names as soon as they read this notice?

As there is to be a three days' grove-meeting of the Liberals of Central and Western New York, near Wolcott on the 17th, 18th and 19th of August next, it is proposed, if thought advisable, to form a permanent organization at that time, to be known as the "Central and Western New York Association of Freethinkers."

H. L. GREEN.

A Liberal Book for Children.

MR. EDITOR: Prof. H. M. Kottlinger, of San Jose, Cal., is author of a work in German, entitled "Our Youths' Liberal Guide." It was published five years ago, and has since been used as a text-book in Sunday-schools of the German Free Congregations of the United States. Although designed for the education and enlightenment of children, like most works of this kind, when written by competent persons, it is well adapted to interest and instruct readers of more mature minds. It shows the foundations, and presents with admirable clearness the principles of human rights and duties, with appropriate illustrations and examples, drawn from standard English and American authors. It gives a clear and concise history of the principal religions. It contains calm and judicious criticisms on the absurd narratives of the Bible. It gives the most advanced views of the best English, German and French scientists and philosophers in regard to the origin and development of worlds, species, etc. It is just such a work as every Liberal should have in his family.

"Our Youths' Liberal Guide" has recently been translated into English and revised by competent English scholars. The author is disposed to publish an English edition of the work, provided he can obtain a sufficient number of subscriptions, pledged in advance, at one dollar per copy, to warrant him in the undertaking. Having read the work, I can from a knowledge of its merit, confidently recommend it to the Liberal public. Let all who wish one or more copies of the book, address the author, Prof. H. M. Kottlinger, San Jose, Cal.

Respectfully,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Robinson, God & Co.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: As a dweller in the State of New York, and as a man who takes no stock in any man-made deity, I respectfully object to all celestial interference in mundane concerns, and therefore call public attention to a part of a late message of Governor Lucius Robinson, vetoing an act which proposed to open here the higher public school offices to woman.

In proof that this great State is run by the firm whose title heads this letter, I quote a part of the veto message referred to, in which Gov. Robinson declares with all the pomposity of a modern bishop that "the God of Nature has appointed different fields of duty and usefulness for the sexes. His decrees cannot be changed by human legislation." It is, however, evident that the Governor feared they might have been, otherwise he would not have felt it requisite to assist "the God of Nature" by vetoing the act above mentioned.

I am glad to be able to state that even orthodox papers are a little disgusted with the affair. Harper's Weekly discusses the subject in an editorial, and gravely suggests that in future it would be wise in Gov. Robinson "never to give any reasons for his opinions." It also pertinently asks, "Why should he (Gov. Robinson) not suppose that the God of Nature has provided for woman as he has for man?" Of course, Harper's Weekly cannot expect an answer to this question from the senior partner of the firm of Robinson, God & Co., and ought to feel content if it escapes special damnation (for the crime of asking it) in the Governor's next message.

Really, in wielding such terrific and powerful arguments, Gov. Robinson ought to be careful how he launches his thunderbolts. The curt brevity with which he lugs his junior partner, "the God of Nature," into the melee must be offensive, even to the orthodox, for the head of a firm ought to be respectful, even when speaking of his inferiors. Far better would it be for him had he commenced the veto message under discussion with "Thus saith the Lord," after the manner of the ancient prophets, even though he might deem it necessary to add after, in order to give force to the document: "by Lucius Robinson, Esq."

Surely, the time must be nearly past in which potentates can venture to indulge in such kind of language! Surely, the age of priestly domination must be almost over! Five centuries ago, when Innocent III. laid England under an interdict, the whole people of that country screamed with anguish. Pío Nono now proclaims himself to be a prisoner in his own capital; why does he not lay Italy under an interdict? He knows better! The last anathema he issued raised a guffaw among the nations that almost shook the roof of St. Peter's Church. The last time ascetic Protestantism interviewed that old boy, Lord Palmerston, requesting him to appoint a day of fast and humiliation, in order to keep off the cholera, every one knows that Scotch Presbyterianism came off second-best in the encounter. Gov. Robinson, in resorting to a priestly artifice in order to justify his tyrannical veto, has done worse than to commit a crime, he has made a blunder, and ought to thank any one for pointing out to him his error.

But there are Governors who think very differently from the Governor of New York, and his idol on the question of the proper "field of duty" for women. I take the following from the Sun of June 8th:

Before the New York Woman's Suffrage Society, in Mrs. Dr. Lozier's house at 238 West Fourteenth street, last evening, ex-Gov. Lee, of Wyoming Territory said that he had seen women acting in the capacity of Sheriffs, Justices of the Peace, Constables, and Coroners, and that they were a great success. As jurors, they are unequalled. It seemed strange, at first, to address the jury as "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury." Mrs. Julia Weller, a Justice of the Peace, has had her husband brought before her for being drunk. She sentenced him for the full penalty—six months' imprisonment.

Gov. Lee described a scene at a local election. There was great excitement, pistols and bowie knives were in every hand, and words that could not be found in any current religious work were being used freely. Suddenly there was a shout: "The ladies are coming to cast their votes!" and all was still. "If the ladies had not appeared," Gov. Leesaid, "I think that a number of politicians would have been offered up on their country's altar."

Now let Gov. Robinson tell us what his little God thinks of that statement; surely, to him such kind of talk must seem to be, to use Dogberry's language, "flat burglary."

Yours respectfully, ROBERT W. HUME.

The Accusation of Atheism.

[We are pleased to find this outspoken, well-timed article in the July number of The Popular Science Monthly; in which we also find a candid notice of Viscount Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief."]

It has been suggested that if Dr. Draper had entitled his book "A History of the Conflict between Ecclesiasticism and Science," instead of "between Religion and Science," he would have disarmed criticism and saved himself from a great deal of theological abuse; but he preferred to credit people who profess religion with having it and being influenced by it, in their treatment of science. There is, indeed, no ground for impeaching the general sincerity of religious people who are alarmed at the advancement of science, and denounce it as subversive of faith. Their difficulty is simply that of narrowness and ignorance, inspired by a fanatical earnestness. Atheism has now come to be a familiar and stereotyped charge against men of science, both on the part of the pulpit and the religious press. Not that they accuse all scientific men of Atheism, but they allege this to be the tendency of scientific thought, and the outcome of scientific philosophy. It matters nothing that this imputation is denied; it matters nothing that scientific men claim that their studies lead them to higher and more worthy conceptions of the Divine power, manifested through the order of Nature, than the conceptions offered by theology. It is enough that they disagree with current notions upon this subject, and any difference of view is held as Atheism.

In this, as we have said, the theologians may be honest, but they are narrow and bigoted; and it is surprising that they cannot see that, in arraigning scientific thinkers for Atheism, they are simply doing what stupid fanatics the world over are always doing when ideas of the Deity different from their own are maintained. And it is the more surprising that Christian teachers should indulge in this intolerant practice, when it is remembered that their own faith was blackened with this opprobrium at its first promulgation. In a very able article by Prof. Zeller, of Berlin, on "The Contest of Heathenism with Christianity," reprinted in The Popular Science Monthly Supplement, No. II, this interesting subject is taken up, and the writer remarks upon it as follows:

"To the heathen nations, the Christians were in the first place Atheists; for in every age this name has been given to those who did not agree with the prevailing conceptions of the Deity; not only when they denied his existence, but when they sought to instil a more just and worthy idea of God. 'Down with the Atheists!' this was the war-cry of the heathen mob against the Christians. It was with this cry, for example, that in A.D. 156 the venerable Bishop Polycarp was received on the race-course at Smyrna. The only gods the people knew anything about, whose temples they frequented, whose statues they worshiped, to whom they offered sacrifices, and prayers, were denied by the Christians; they were declared to be the inventions of man's superstition, and sometimes to be evil spirits, devils. Can we wonder that the people who were still devoted to these gods felt the attack upon them to be an attack upon themselves, their most sacred and cherished possessions; that they were the more deeply incensed at it the more seriously they feared by toleration of it to lose the favor of the gods on whom their welfare depended? The reproach of Atheism was therefore the most dangerous that could be brought against the Christians. In that 'Down with the Atheists!' with which the yells of the mob greeted Polycarp at Smyrna, was included the sentence of death, which they at once proceeded to execute by preparing the stake. And the cry was followed in numberless cases by the same results. If any public misfortune, any alarming event occurred, which seemed to indicate the displeasure of the gods—a pestilence, a dearth, a flood, an eclipse, an earthquake—superstition was always ready to make the Christians responsible for it, as enemies of the gods; the exclamation was sure to be heard, 'The Christians to the lions!' Both the educated and uneducated have always attributed every other wickedness to the enemies of the gods, and so it was with the Christians. Being Atheists, they were also criminals, and all manner of horrible stories were told of them. It was not enough that they were said to worship a god with the head of an ass, which we see represented to this day in a caricature of that period, the well-known mock crucifix in the Kircher Museum at Rome; it was said, also, that in their secret assemblies they practiced all sorts of horrors, killed and devoured children, and gave themselves up to frightful excesses. Scarcely any evils were attributed to the Jews in the middle ages by Christian fanatics which had not been before attributed to the Christians by heathen superstition."

It would be well if our theologians would remember these things when tempted to deal out their maledictions upon scientific men as propagators of Atheism. For the history of their own faith attests that religious ideas are a growth, and that they pass from lower states to higher unfoldings through processes of inevitable suffering. It was undoubtedly a great step of progress from polytheism to monotheism; as it was certainly a most painful transition to lose the idea of a social hierarchy of human or superhuman immortals constantly mixed up with human affairs and the working of Nature, and to substitute the idea of a solitary divine personality, related to mankind chiefly through a special theological scheme. But this was neither the final step in the advancement of the human mind toward the highest conception of the Deity, nor the last experience of disquiet and grief at sundering the ties of old religious associations. But if this be a great normal process in the development of the religious feeling and aspiration of humanity, why should the Christians of to-day adopt the bigoted tactics of heathenism, first applied to themselves, to use against those who would still further ennoble and purify the ideal of the Divinity? It cannot be rationally questioned that the world has come to another important stage in this line of its progression. The knowledge of the Universe, its action, its harmony, its unity, its boundlessness and grandeur, is comparatively a recent thing; and it is to be for a moment supposed that so vast a revolution as this is to be without effect upon our conceptions of its Divine control? Is it rational to expect that the man of developed intellect, whose life is spent in the all-absorbing study of that mighty and ever-expanding system of truth that is embodied in the method of Nature, will form the same idea of God as the ignorant blockhead who knows and cares nothing for these things, who is incapable of reflection or insight, and who passively accepts the narrow notions upon this subject that other people put into his head? As regards the Divine government of the world, two such contrasted minds can hardly have anything in common. "As a man thinketh, so is he," and as a man is, so will he think. If he is ignorant and stupid, his contemplation of divine things will reflect his own low limitations. He will cling to a groveling anthropomorphism and conceive of the Deity as a man like himself, only greater and more powerful, and as chiefly interested in the things that he is interested in. If he delights in the pious excitement of "revivals," he will think of the Almighty as the patron of camp-meetings, and as watching from on high with special solicitude the doings of Moody and Sankey in Boston. It is superfluous to say that men who look upon the Universe as science has disclosed it cannot much sympathize with this view of the Deity and all that it implies. The profound student of science will rise to a more spiritualized and abstract ideal of the Divine nature, or will be so oppressed with a consciousness of the Infinity as to reverently refrain from all attempts to grasp and formulate, and limit the nature of that which is "past finding out," which is unspeakable and unthinkable. Religious feeling may be awakened in both those minds; but its inspirations and its accompaniments will be as wide asunder as the poles. Our religious teachers ought in these days to have liberality enough to recognize this serious fact, and remembering that human nature is religiously progressive, as well as progressive in its other capacities, should abstain from copying the bad example of narrow-minded heathen thousands of years ago, who treated the Christians very much as many Christians now treat those who are devoted to the gospel of science.

The Hudson Affair Once More.

HUDSON, LENAWEE CO.,
MICH., June 10, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the 9th inst., I notice a correction of my statement, or report, which was printed in your paper of May 26th, 1877. There is no one who loves truth better than I do, and if I then made any misstatements I will now most cheerfully correct them. Squire George Browne of this village has very kindly undertaken to do so, and starts off by saying that he is a Liberal, and because he is one loves the truth. Well, this is my motto, and I think it is with all true Liberals. He says the truth is best under all circumstances, which I cheerfully concede. The report I first gave you was mostly reported to me, and I sincerely thought I was giving you the facts, as I took some pains to make inquiry. I wish to injure no one, and whenever I do so it is unintentionally and I shall always consider it a pleasure to rectify it. But I think in this case there has been considerable pains taken to shield one of the parties, or, as they call him, a witness.

First. Squire Brown says the boy is not a small boy but a young man. This boy before the law is considered an infant. Besides, he is called a boy, and looks like a small boy to me, and is so considered.

Second. They do not deny that Mr. Shanafelt did not complain of this boy to the deputy-sheriff or have any talk with him about this matter. It looks strange indeed that this sheriff should arrest this particular boy on his own act. He says he was present when the act was committed and heard the disturbance, but could not identify the person who caused it. In my judgment he must have received some advice or counsel from some one to do it. The answer is implied. Shanafelt testified that he had met the boy on the streets a few times, and spoke to him, and at this time the boy was about eight rods away, up in a tree with other boys when they were baptizing, and he recognized this particular boy's voice. He (Shanafelt) was then asked if the boy had any peculiarity about his voice. He answered, No. One boy who was next to this boy under him in the tree testified that he did not hear any such language as referred to. This is what appears so strange and caused so many remarks in the court-room by the counsel for defense. How could it be possible, with a large concourse of people about him, with considerable talking going on near him (Shanafelt), and baptizing going on at the same time, that he should or could possibly discern this particular boy by his voice? I leave it for you to decide whether there was any animus shown against this boy.

Third. It was reported to me that Shanafelt was baptizing a small boy, but if it was, some one did correct the report and I stand corrected.

Fourth. As to the words uttered, they were so reported to me in the court-room. If they were not the exact words used my report was wrong again, but I think there is not much choice between the words, "O, Jesus, didn't he give him a good ducking?" and the words, "Jesus Christ, didn't Bungy get it that time?" This is a small thing to stand on or quarrel over, and so I stand corrected again. I think, however, that one expression is about as bad as the other. I see the Esq. wants to crowd me down on technicalities.

Fifth. As to Esq. Brown's statement, as to Mr. Shanafelt's not trying to blacken and ruin this boy's character, his (Shanafelt's) testimony would convince any candid mind, I think, that he (Shanafelt) tried to do just that thing, and it was so argued by the counsel for the defense.

Sixth. As to our community being shocked by such treatment to so small a boy, I will say I did not canvass the whole town, neither do I think Esq. Brown has, but I did hear a good many remarks of this kind made, and from some as good citizens as we have in Hudson, or at least I consider them so. As to Esq. Brown's being a true Liberal, I am not just certain about that. He is so when we talk with him, but does not identify himself with our League, neither does he take the glorious TRUTH SEEKER, not that I know of, all of which are witnesses against him. I have no doubt he has his reason for not doing so; but as he is a fine man and a good citizen, we trust he will do so at no far distant day.

As to the verdict of the jury, I think it is begging the question largely after the jury had rendered their verdict and had been discharged, to say this boy was guilty of the offense charged, and this on the strength of what one jurymen said outside of the court. Trusting this explanation will prove satisfactory to all concerned, I subscribe myself truly yours,

JAMES S. BEDEL.

Friendly Correspondence.

DR. GEO. W. LUSK, Sebawa, Mich., writes: I consider THE TRUTH SEEKER the very best paper of its kind extant. You are doing great good to poor, priest-ridden humanity.

W. H. LITTLE, Grant Park, Ill., writes: Please forward me your Prayer-Book. I want to learn how to live, how to marry, and how to die. I suppose the way is all marked out in the "Collection." It is certainly a work that has long been needed by Freethinkers.

W. H. OZIER, Greenup, Ill., writes: I have a higher esteem for THE TRUTH SEEKER than for any other paper I read. It is like a green spot in my life each week. The manner in which you treat old theology is doing wonders in enlightening the minds of the masses. It is rapidly paving the way for the establishment of truth among the people. Its mission is becoming more and more manifest, and the future is not far when mankind shall be imbued with Liberal thought and mental independence.

MANNING F. HUNT, Douglas, Ills., writes: I wish you to send me a copy of the "Forms, Hymns, and Recitations," and I herewith enclose the money. I think it is time to quit employing priests to officiate at marriages and funerals. Let them stay at home and attend to their own vocation. As a general thing, whenever they are called upon to attend a funeral, unless the deceased happens to belong to their faith and order, they denounce him in unmeasured terms of bitterness, and send him head foremost into hell; and they embrace this opportunity to do it. It is bad enough for people to part with their friends aside from having them kicked into hell by the cursed priests. I am going to visit Bob Ingersoll when he arrives home. May success crown your efforts in the cause of Freethought and liberal principles.

Special Notices.

I would like to correspond with some Liberal-minded lady of middle age, for matrimonial purposes. Address W. G. R. East Dayton, Tuscola Co., Mich. 2124

A GENTLEMAN of Materialistic proclivities wishes to correspond with a lady of liberal ideas; object, marriage. Address L. V., Kansas City, Mo. 3123

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill. 1219

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 1219

INTELLIGENT lady, without incumbrance, would like to make herself useful in the home of Liberal party. Small salary. AMIABLE, Care TRUTH SEEKER.

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL, AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address D. M. BENNETT, SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address, D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MRS. BEVIER, ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed Life and Energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COUNT CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET. 465 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

Radical Constructive Literature.

DISCOURSES AND LECTURES DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.
2. The Old vs. the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.
3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN,
Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway.)
22d. New York.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.
Editor of the Herald of Health.

- CONTENTS:
1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
 2. Dangers of Preventions.
 3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
 4. Preparation for Maternity.
 5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
 6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
 7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
 8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
 9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
 10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.
- To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
 2. Best age for Bearing Children.
 3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
 4. Small Families.
 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
 6. Celibacy.
 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain."

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable."

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

CRITICISM ON THE Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. GRAVEN. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS.

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCOCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT,

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses.....50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 3 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 80 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $6 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greely, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune, is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 13 Eliot street, Boston Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, $2 per annum; three months, 50 cents. 6124

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postpaid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $6.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

E. H. HEYWOOD'S BOOKS.

LABOR REFORM, FREE-LOVE, ANTI-TAXATION.

YOURS OR MINE: Explaining the True Basis of Property and the Causes of its Inequitable Distribution. Fortieth Thousand. Price 1 cent.

CUPID'S YOKES: On the Moral and Physiological Aspects of Conjugal Life and Child Production, explaining the Principles and Purposes of the Free Love Movement. Twentieth thousand. Price 15 cents.

HARD CASH: Treats of the Greenback Delusion and demands the Abolition of Usury as the Right of Labor and the Duty of Capital. Twentieth Thousand. Price 15 cents.

UNCIVIL LIBERTY: or, the Social Heism opposed to Woman Suffrage, the Political Usurpation of Men over Women. Eightieth Thousand. Price 15 cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by Co-operative Publishing Co., Princeton, Mass.

THE WORD.

A Monthly Journal of Reform.

E. H. HEYWOOD, EDITOR.

The Word, regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service, favors the abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of Speculative Income, and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth a power at the expense of useful people. It seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends, and profit, except as they represent work done, and the repudiation of all so-called debts, the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

Terms, 75 cents annually, in advance. Address THE WORD, Princeton, Mass.

Mrs. E. H. Bennett,

GENUINE ASTROLOGIST,

Delineates character, points out the past events of life and indicates probable future incidents by knowing the date of birth and calculating the influence of the planets ruling at the time of birth and through life. Successfully consulted in matters pertaining to health, matrimony and fortune. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Terms reasonable. Personal interviews $1.00 Replies by mail on one or two points. $1.00; Full nativity for self and family, $2.00. Give your day and hour of birth as nearly as possible. Address

MRS. E. H. BENNETT,
424 66 West Tenth street, N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would like to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods.

Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin, Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

Gems of Thought.

I do not call one greater and one smaller.
That which fills its period and its place is as good as any. —Walt Whitman.

THE web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and evil together. Our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not; and our vices would despair were they not cherished by our virtues. —Shakespeare.

TRUE religion is universal justice—which begins at the center of the individual and widens outwardly, wave-like and as the ocean swells, till all are clasped in one embrace of love, pred-icating, thus, the happiness of all upon the harmony of each. —A. J. Davis.

No man ever lived who was of the slightest worth to the world—who lacked the heroic manhood to hold up his head and say his say, in spite of all the priests and popes and potentates of this earth. One small man with a staunch backbone can shake the mightiest error, though panoplied with the power of the ages. —Sawyer.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial;
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best. —Festus.

LIFE is short. Man has two minutes and a half to live, one to smile, one to sigh, and a half to love—for in the middle of this he dies;
but the grave is not deep—it is the shining tread of an angel that seeks us. When the unknown hand throws the fatal dart at the end of man, then boweth he his head, and the dart only lifts the crown of thorns from his wounds.
—Jean Paul Richter.

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of truth.
So before us gleam her camp-fires; we ourselves must pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflow'r and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key. —J. R. Lowell.

LIFE, to the man of wisdom, is the harbinger of those benefits which Time's sickle cannot mow down, nor the chemistry of death impair;
of lessons which, whether heeded and treasured up or not in our early years, are the primal causes and necessary rudiments of an eternal education. The wise man thinketh that the life of this world, like a golden harp of infinite magnitude, yieldeth to the use made of it; music floats out from its vibrating wires, or discord goes rolling and winding through the tissues of being, just as we play upon it. —A. J.
Davis.

WHAT are we, save as we strive to make ourselves wise, good and great? Why care we to live at all if we but lazily drift through the long years of a useless existence? We should not content ourselves with sitting and eating the few knotty and nutty apples that fall into our laps, nor in drinking of the sluggish and muddy stream that chances to flow at our feet. But rather let us industriously labor to gather in a full harvest of the fat of the land, and drink from the fresh fountain-head. Let us be ever working with willing hands and cheerful hearts at something good, or great or useful. —Mrs. E.
D. Slenker.

THERE are priests in the pulpit and also on the platform on whom have been conferred,
Nature's priesthood; men and women whose lips drop manna in the wilderness; to whom we listen and find ourselves resolving to lead better higher, and more consistent lives. This priesthood laughs at creeds, and bids defiance to every authority. It lies deeper than all for-mulae of faith, and rises above all Church authority. It exercises its functions as well in him who is fettered by the chains of Rome as in him who boasts of mental and spiritual freedom. It carries consolation to the mourner, and comfort and hope to the despondent, whether it speaks in the language of Romanism or Rationalism. —J. W. Mackie.

BUT of all nonsense religious is the most nonsensical. Why does a sectarian turn of mind always have a tendency to narrow and illiber-alize the heart? They are orderly; they may be just; nay, I have known them merciful; but still your children of sanctity move among their fellow creatures with a nostril-snuffing putrescence, and a foot spurning filth—in short, with a conceited dignity that your titled—or any other of your Scottish lordlings of seven centuries' standing display when they accidentally mix among the many apron'd sons of mechanical life. I remember in my plow-boy days
I could not conceive it possible that a noble lord could be a fool, or a godly man a knave. How ignorant are plow-boys! —Burns.

THERE are two grounds of hope of a future life to man suggested by science. The persistence and indestructibility of force suggests a ground of hope for a continued existence beyond the grave. If we suppose man to be the highest form of matter in his physical body, and mind to be the perfection of motion, the reason will appear why the latter continues to exist while the former dies. The body dies from the imperfection of its composition, as all bodies follow this necessity; but perfected motion, in the mind, must remain as the cognate of persistent force, unless the mind may come in contact with still higher elements by which its constitution can be destroyed. Another ground is in the function of hope itself, which is perfectly legitimate, even when it may be the very last act performed in the living body.
And, if legitimate in death, there must be life beyond. —La Roy Sunderland.

Odds and Ends.

"Ah, Jemmy," said a sympathizing friend to a man who was just too late for the train, "you did not run fast enough." "Yes I did," said
Jemmy; "but I didn't start soon enough."

ANX excuse better than none. A toper says he would be a temperance man in a minute if it wasn't for his wife. He knows she'd be lonesome if she hadn't something to jaw about and find fault with.

"Good morning Donnelly! I hear your daughter has a baby; is it a girl or a boy?"
"Sure, Miss, and it's meself as doesn't yet know for the life of me if I'm a grandfather or a grandmother, bedad."

POLLIWOGS.

The cat-tails all along the brook
Are growing tall and green,
And in the meadow pool once more
The polliwogs are seen;
Among the dockweed, in and out,
As quick as thought they dart about.
Their constant hurry to and fro
It tires me so to see;
I wish they knew it did no good
To so uneasy be!
I mean to ask them if they will
Be just for one half minute still?
Be patient, little polliwogs,
And by and by you'll turn to frogs."

But what's the use to consult them?
My words are thrown away,
And not a second in one place
A polliwog will stay.
They still keep darting all about
The floating dockweed in and out.
Well, if they will so restless be
I will not let it trouble me,
But leave these little polliwogs
To wriggle till they turn to frogs!

—Marian Douglass.

THE MAN WHO WEEPS.—BY THE DETROIT FREE PRESS FIEND.

He entered a bakery on Grand River avenue, at eleven o'clock yesterday forenoon. He didn't look like a neat and tidy old man about ready to join the angels, but he resembled an old man who had slept in a barn, and was about ready to join a big dinner.

"I think," he said, as he looked around. "I think I'll take a huckleberry pie."
The woman behind the counter replied that she hadn't seen a pie of the sort for six months.
"Did she have pumpkin?" He thought he would take pumpkin pie. She handed one down, and as he took out his knife and cut it,
she said:

"Twenty cents, if you please."
"Change a bill, I s'pose?" he queried, as he took in the twelfth part of the pie at one bite.

"Yes, sir."
"Have you any objection to feeling down my boot-leg and pulling up a ten-dollar bill?" he asked, as he cut the second.

She said she had, and she furthermore hinted that he hadn't seen a ten-dollar bill in the last ten years.

"Oh, yes I have," he pleasantly responded as he cleared his mouth. "I was looking into a broker's window yesterday, and I saw over forty such bills."

There was one more mouthful of pie, and as he swallowed it the woman called out:

"Now I want twenty cents."

"So do I," was his quiet answer; "but I haven't got it."

"I'll call my husband and have you kicked?"
she exclaimed.

"You will call in a young and vigorous man and have him beat and bruise an old man like me, weak in the legs, near gone with consumption, and only barely able to stand up! That crushes what little spirit I had left when I began on that pie!"

He sat down by the stove and began to weep and sob, and after a moment she said:

"You should have told me that you had no money."

"More abuse—more recrimination—hoo-hoo!"
he sobbed, shedding tears as large as beans.

"Don't make so much noise," she chided.

"There you go again, heaping more anathe-mas on these gray hairs! Oh what a cold, cold world this is!"

"Never mind the pie—go 'long out doors!"

"I'll never leave this bakery with a stain on my character—never! I have no money, but you shall have my coat! Here—take it!"

He was peeling it off, when she said she didn't want it—that she wanted him to get right out doors.

"I'll never go out till I requite this claim!"
he sobbed, and he pulled off his jacket and threw it after the coat.

"Get out, I say—you can have the pie—get out!" she screamed.

"My character must be cleared, and if these are not enough I'll leave my boots! Here, take my poor old boots, and I'll go forth in my bare feet."

"Stop—stop! I was only in fun with you. I didn't want no twenty cents of you any of the time. Here are some fried cakes and another pie, take 'em and go out."

"Have I cleared my character?" he asked.

"Yes—yes—you are an honest man."

"Shall I leave you all my clothes?" he inquired as he dropped a suspender off his shoulder.

"No—no—no!"

"Well, I will go out. I will take along the fried-cakes and the pie as mementos of the occasion, and I will go out feeling that you appreciate me."

"Yes—I do—I do."

He put on his garments, took up his provisions, and as his tears flowed afresh, he went out, saying:

"Whenever any one wants to break my heart, let 'em call me a dishonest ingrate. Good-bye."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	6
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	3
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snoder. Bennett.	3
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheman.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	8
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	1
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	1
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	9
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	10
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	5
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	3
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revelation Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	3
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	10
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	5
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	10
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	1
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	1
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarrroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10
12.	Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 60 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
Cloth.	50
"with Examination of Prophecies	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount	25
Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols. 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion.	1 25
Childhood of the World. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
Radical Rhymes.	1 25
Who are Christians, Deluge, Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism: True, Orthodoxy: False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 80
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Evans' History of all Christian Sects.	1 00
Essence of Religion. Furbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
Safest Creed.	1 50
Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Gray's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	60
etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneelands Review.	1 00
Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard.	1 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
People's All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 30 & 60
Physical Man. Tuttle.

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 26. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, June 30, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St.,
NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year

Notes and Clippings.

It is said that Sitting Bull has invaded the dominions of John Bull, and that some extensive bulldozing may be expected.

In one important respect the Stewart Memorial Cathedral will differ from many other churches. It will have no mortgage upon it.

SEVENTEEN more clergymen sailed for Europe last Saturday. Seventeen thousand more can be spared. Will the people pay their expenses?

THE trial of the Rev. E. D. Hopkins for forgery has been concluded at St. Johnsbury, Vt., and the verdict of guilty rendered against the clerical criminal.

Two hundred and twenty-five million dollars in specie is reported as being in the country at the present time. This is in excess of the amount we hold—75 cents!

A St. Louis woman says it is no worse to encircle a lady's waist with your arm in a ball-room than to hug your friend's sister on the back stairs. No worse! Why, it is not as good!

TWO CHURCH members in Atlanta, Ga., quarreled over the question of the control of money raised to convert the heathen, and came to blows in front of the church while the congregation was dispersing.

Puck says the Sultan can't get over Beecher's unnatural conduct in going back on him and in favor of the Czar of Russia. He thinks there is more in common between himself and Beecher than between Beecher and the Czar.

THE Illustrated Christian Weekly says that if the churches were as well organized for work as the political parties are, New York Island would be "rocked to its very centre with the tread of a militant host moving on to triumph."

A PITTSBURGH divine, against whom forty charges were preferred, thirty-two of which he admitted, was recently investigated and exonerated by his congregation, which refused to hear any evidence against him.—Chicago Times.

LAST week we said that Mrs. A. T. Stewart had donated $1,500,000 for the erection of a Catholic cathedral at Garden City, L. I. We were mistaken. It is an Episcopal cathedral. The difference is not immense, but we prefer to be correct.

THERE are two hundred and forty Protestant churches in this city. They cost, on an average, $10,000 each per annum to run them, or the nice little sum of $2,400,000. But what matters it how much money is expended, if the Devil is only cheated out of a few souls?

THE Christian Advocate of June 14th calls the English Ritualists "bastard Romanists," and says that they claim the privilegium immunitatis of the Catholic clergy, or the freedom of their person from the reach of human law, while engaged in ministerial functions.

It is said that a pious hen crawled into a Methodist church in Jefferson City, Mo., a few weeks ago, and laid an egg in the contribution-box. The Commercial Bulletin of Boston remarks that the event clearly indicates that lay members should be urged to shell out.

THE fact that the churches of this country are mortgaged for nearly three million dollars inspires the Chicago Times to say: "My house is a house of prayer, but ye have made it subject to a trust deed payable in ten years, with interest at ten per cent., payable semi-annually."

OUT of thirty-seven executions which took place during the past year, twenty-seven of the culprits declared that they had found forgiveness and were going direct to the city of Paradise to wear a crown of glory. May it not be hoped that they are now all safe in Abraham's bosom?

It is reported that Mrs. Alexander Corbet, of Vermont, eighty-two years of age, has read the Bible through eighty times. The Turner's Falls Reporter wickedly insinuates that she has in that particular business acted as proxy for the whole state. Eighty times is certainly sufficient for a single State.

MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, of this city, whose numerous charities are well known, has offered three premiums of $50, $75, and $100 for the best essays on the labor question, the decision to be made by a committee selected by the Social Science Association at its meeting in July. The articles are to be presented in printed form.

THE Rev. Father Preston, in an address to the Roman Catholic Young Men's Convention, not long since, said that at no time since Christ was on earth has spiritual darkness been so deep as now; and a still, small voice from the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle says: "We have been insisting these three years that there should be a new set of clergymen."

SEVEN clergymen ate so much fruit while attending a Baptist convention at Rockingham, N. C., that they became sick and required the services of a physician. Possibly the good brothers, after taking a good dose of calomel and jalap all round, wished they had exercised more self-denial and not indulged so much in the pleasures of the table.

THE population of Great Britain has, since 1801, increased from 10,000,000 to 23,000,000, and the London Times estimates that it will be doubled in fifty-four years. How to feed it will be the great difficulty, for a leading British agriculturist said in a recent speech: "It appears to me, and it has been observed by many of our leading men, that a steady deterioration is going on in the producing powers of this island."

"THE hymns which are to be sung on this mournful occasion," said a parson who was about to conduct a funeral sermon, "are some which were selected by the corpse himself for the purpose." A grave-like smile played around the lips of some of the auditors, and they seemed to think, as the hymns were given out, that "the corpse" had, for a corpse, shown exceedingly wise discrimination in the selection.

THE clergyman in Quincy, Ill., who changed a twenty-dollar greenback for a young man whom he married to a bogus young woman, will hereafter be more discriminating as to the people whom he unites in matrimony. The young woman turned out to be a boy in feminine apparel, and the pair ran in different directions as soon as it was discovered that they were as counterfeit as the twenty-dollar note.

A YANKEE traveler in England, occupying the same room with an English clergyman, astonished his fellow lodger, on getting out of bed in the morning, by a violent explosion of profane language. The reverend gentleman remonstrated at first, but was pacified with this explanation: "Well, I calculate if you had lighted, as I did, on the business end of a carpet tack, you wouldn't have begun the day with the Lord's prayer either."

THE Prayer-Book of the Irish Episcopal Church has been so revised and altered as to rid it of the statements of doctrine which were so objectionable to the Low Church party. Priestly absolution and baptismal regeneration are omitted; the minister's proper position during the communion service is settled, and the Athanasian creed is omitted from public use. The laws which make this revision binding will go into effect in June, 1878. There is much dissatisfaction about the change, even on the part of those who were supposed to have gained all they asked for.

THE Calcutta organ of one of the Hindoo religions thus puts up its prayer in reference to the war in Turkey: "The battle-cry has been heard, O God, and hostile nations have already confronted each other and begun the fierce work of destruction and bloodshed. Who will arrest the evil? Who can? Almighty God, thou alone canst humble nations to the dust and dissuade them from bloody deeds. We humbly look up to thee and pray that hostilities may cease and peace may prevail once more in Europe." This will compare very favorably with the sentiments recently expressed in blood-thirsty rhyme by Coxe, bishop of Western New York.

THE Christian Advocate seems to have been studying the development theory. Concerning the development of the oyster it says: "Give an oyster locomotion and the five senses, and he might be the rhinoceros of the sea. Add reason, and he would become a philosopher. Add conscience, and he would become a candidate for an eternal throne. He rises on each new set of pinions." The sight of a conscientious oyster rising on several sets of pinions, and philosophically becoming a candidate for an eternal throne is fit subject for meditation almost any Sunday when oysters are in season. We deplore any such change in oysters as Dr. Fowler suggests.

A BRIGHT little four-year-old whose childish fancy manifested itself in a passion for colored picture-books of animals, and for natural history generally, was repeating, after her sister, the hymn in which occurs the verse

"The consecrated cross I'd bear,
Till death shall set me free," etc.

When she came to the first line she seemed puzzled, and looking up into her sister's face, said: "Sister, what kind of a bear is a consecrated cross-eyed bear?"

THE Methodists have had a long and weary time with their new Hymn-Book, and the work is now said to be ready for the printer. About 450 of the hymns contained in the old book have been omitted from the new one. This is well; for although many of these hymns contained pious sentiment, it was so clumsily expressed as to make the hymns almost unfit for use. Here is one, for instance, so seldom sung that few people know of its existence:

"Ah! Lord, with trembling I confess
A gracious soul may fall from grace.
The salt may lose its seasoning power,
And never, never find it more."

It is difficult to see how a congregation could get up much enthusiasm over such a hymn as this. The power of Methodist singing consists largely in the fact that hymns of this class are but little used. The book now in use was prepared in 1849, since which great advances have been made in hymnology.

THE following is clipped from a letter in the Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Daily Republican, in reference to the trial of a clergyman for the seduction of a young girl, a pupil of his: "I had just time to reach the court-house at Booneville when that stately edifice was struck by a storm that shook it to its very foundation, and so nearly shut out the light of day that the court there in session was obliged to light up. The dark and gloomy surroundings seemed to be appropriate to the trial then progressing. In the prisoner's box sat the late principal of their public school, who had for years been engaged in teaching the youth and proclaiming the Gospel to the adults of that most unfortunate city, noted for its grass-grown streets and unoccupied business houses. This reverend teacher was on trial for the seduction of a beautiful young girl—his late pupil—who was present, the object of pity with some and curiosity to others that crowded the court-room. We listened to a few witnesses, whose testimony was damaging to the case of the accused."

THE order issued by Judge Hilton, that no Jews should be accommodated at the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga, has created great excitement in this city and throughout the country. Mr. Joseph Seligman, the Jewish banker, who was the party refused, has received numerous letters from all parts of the country sympathizing with him for the insult so inexcusably imposed upon him. Many in the community condemn Hilton and say that, in this advanced portion of the nineteenth century, when in Europe the prejudice against the Jewish race is fast giving way, when a Jew is Premier of England, when in French politics the Jew Gambetta is one of the most distinguished characters, when in our own country they occupy such conspicuous positions in mercantile and financial business, his snubbing them because of nationality is absurd; while others approve of his course on the ground that Jews are ill-bred, ill-mannered, and disagreeable in hotel life. Many of the Jewish portion of our population are eminently well-behaved and courteous towards others, and are very companionable in their deportment, exhibiting all the qualities of a refined education. They usually mind their own business as closely as any part of our population. They are a law-abiding and inoffensive people, being seldom in our criminal courts or prisons. They are liberal patrons of the opera and the drama, and spend their money as freely as any people. Judge Hilton doubtless committed a mistake in making such an invidious distinction against them.

Events of the Week.

OAKLEY HALL is said to have disappeared from London. As a disappearer he appears to have no peer.

VERY agreeable summer weather interspersed with showers at proper intervals. Everything is growing nicely.

ROBERT DALE OWEN, died at his Summer residence at Peerless Point, on Lake George, aged seventy-six years.

TEN thousand persons visited Rockaway last Sunday. Coney Island ditto. Ten steamers engaged. Ice cream and lager beer disappeared in enormous quantities. Thus it will be every Sunday while hot weather lasts.

ONE hundred young Mormons of both sexes arrived here from England under charge of a Mormon bishop, and have gone on to Utah. The young ladies were said to be youthful, healthy and pretty. They will doubtless find an active market.

GIENDT, a defaulting German banker, defrauded a number of poor people who placed confidence in him out of their hard earnings. He was found secreted in his own ice-box. On account of lawyers and witnesses not duly appearing against him, he was set at liberty.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., has met with a very serious loss by fire. Two thirds of the town is in ashes. Fifteen acres burnt over. Shoe factories and dwellings alike doomed. Seventy-two buildings destroyed. Loss, $600,000. Hundreds of people rendered homeless and penniless.

ELEVEN Mollie Maguires were hung at Mauch Chunk and Pottsville, Pa., for murder, on the 21st inst. They mostly felt confident of going directly to heaven. Other murders have been committed by their survivors since the execution, some of the witnesses at the late trials being victims.

Six disorderly houses were raided in this city last Sunday morning, and 204 persons captured, comprising men, women, proprietors, and thieves. Several station-houses were filled with the haul thus made. No distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. "What shall the harvest be?"

A TREMENDOUS storm of wind, rain, and hail passed over the States of Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan. In many of the towns visited great damage was done—churches and dwellings thrown down, telegraph poles prostrated, railroad trains blown from the tracks. As we prepare this paper for the press but meagre reports have been received, but it is feared that immense damage has been done to crops and other property.

THE city of St. John, New Brunswick, a city of 50,000 inhabitants, was visited with a terrible conflagration on the 20th inst. The principal business portion of the city was completely destroyed. Churches, banks, business houses, printing-offices, stores and dwellings were remorselessly reduced to ashes. The inhabitants were forced to flee to the cemeteries and to the woods for safety. Fifteen lives were lost, and nearly $18,000,000 worth of property destroyed. Nearly all the provisions in the town were consumed, the homeless people being left in a starving condition. Generous donations have been made from various cities in the country, and provisions have been liberally sent in. The English and American insurance companies are heavy losers.

THE Russians have finally effected a crossing of the Danube, and preliminary operations seem to be prosecuted with considerable vigor. Heavy engagements may be expected soon. In Asia Minor warm fighting of two or three days continuance, and consisting of a series of battles, has taken place. The Turks lost two thousand men, and the Russians about twice that number. In Montenegro the Turks have been successful. The Montenegrins were badly defeated, and the Turks took possession of Cetinje, the capital. In the vicinity of Batoum the Russians were repulsed in several attacks they made, and were finally compelled to withdraw their batteries and retreat with a loss of 1,500 men. Although the Turks are weaker than the Russians, they are showing quite as good fighting qualities.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

The Aztecs furnish a striking example of this stage of religious thought carried to its fullness. Their vast pyramids were sacrificial mounds. The long line of priests winding up their steep sides, their summits crowned with gory altars where hecatombs of human victims were immolated with all the pageantry imagination could invent; the shrine before which the palpitating hearts were placed by the red hands of the priest who rent them from the bosoms of the struggling victims, all were witnessed by the trembling thousands below, impressed with reverence by the dreadful spectacle.

The progress from Fetishism, with its bloody sacrifices and horrid customs, to Monotheism is over an exceedingly long and bloody road, but one which has been traversed by all civilized nations. Religion by this progressive growth becomes a unit differing only in degree in its lowest and highest phases. The Hebrew prophets seem to have first received Monotheism, and to have attempted to raise the people out of Fetishism. The struggle was severe and bloody, the people often relapsing into grossest idolatry. They set up stone pillars, worshiped Ramphan and Chiun, made a golden calf after the bull Apis of the Egyptians, worshiped the serpent, and Baal, Astarte, Thammuz, and Moloch in the pure Fetish spirit, which was deeply impressed on their laws, sacrifices, rites, prohibition of certain food, prescription of garments, and ornaments of the priests.

The struggle between Monotheism and the old Polytheistic faith was remorseless. Extermination of unbelievers is the divine charge. The Infinite Father God rides on the chariots of war and directs the conflict. Even in modern times, when the Moslem extended the sway of Monotheism with the sword, the most horrible cruelty was practiced; and Christianity, forgetting its suffering founder and the lesson of love he inculcated, has unsheathed its sword and been equally remorseless. This is the dire result of religion. Always claiming infallibility and absolute truth, it knows no mercy, pauses at no inhumanity, stays its hand at no crime.

Fetishism, Polytheism, and Monotheism, are but expressions of one religion, differing only in degree. Standing on the high lands of science, looking down the interminable vista of the past, progress from animal worship and cannibalism to please God, the toil and struggle by which it has been achieved can be comprehended. Although its phenomena shall all vanish, its rites and ceremonies—from the repast on human flesh, the quivering heart torn from the breast by the red-handed priest and thrown palpitating before his god, to the sacramental supper of the blood and body of the crucified Jesus—sink like waves in the smooth expanse of ocean; but the effects these have wrought on human progress shall not perish, for through them we breathe the pure air of certain knowledge of the present.

Monotheism is not the goal of this advance. It is only a temporary and incomplete expression of a great theory. It is the last term in a long series of expressions—the last, for beyond, theory yields to fact, empiricism to knowledge. The night of object-worship has vanished before the dawn of the day of thought.

The age of Fetishism is the age of superstition; both are products of ignorance and fear, and indivisible. In that brutal epoch when God is everything and man nothing, where the real requirements and objects of life are unknown, the mind prostrate with fear, the wildest fancies of man's relations to God prevail. He is the great chief, the great warrior of the universe. He requires all the petty servility of a tribal tyrant, and is enraged or pleased in a similar manner. Man he created for his own pleasure, and man must bow and be his slave. But he is thrown into darkness; he cannot see the light nor understand what is wanted; he can only be guided by his experience with his petty rules. In regard to the Infinite, he is in a cave, traveling a morass, mistaking the fantastic will-o'-wisp for the beacon-light of God's laws. He is fearful of enjoying himself, for he may thereby incur the wrath of an offended Deity. He stands on some problem for which he fancies a solution, bases his conclusions on such false premises, and wanders world-wide from the truth. Matter and God are in antagonism. Man is a fallen being; he has unpardonably offended the gods; certain sacrifices are demanded as atonement. What a series of dogmas having no foundation in Nature, yet reacting with blasting effect!

God is arbitrary in his demands. The choicest furs of the savage chase, the best part of the slain animal, the finest portion of the scant harvest, the best of the spoils of war are demanded of the devotee, who, so far as God is concerned, or in the recognition of his wishes, might as well be blind. Advancing, God demands greater sacrifices—the best of the flocks and herds, a certain portion of the captives made in war, unusually fine instruments of war, the immolation of members of the tribe or family. The despotic tyrant who rules the universe loves the smoke of reeking altars; his nostrils dilate with the smell of blood; the odor of rare and costly spices is grateful to him. Isaac, the beloved son, is an accepted offering to the bloody Jehovah. Diana, in anger, demands the daughter of Agamemnon. The watchful care of Terminus must be repaid by a victim.

God will be aroused to sympathy and pity by cruelty inflicted upon ourselves. Lacerating the flesh with thongs—wearing haircloth until the bones are exposed by its constant chafing; standing on high pillars exposed to the pitiless elements; a living death in a cloister, cell, or dungeon, plunged in the wilderness; denial of the healthy appetites; endurance of hunger, thirst, cold and heat—rejoices the heart of the relentless Deity.

This is the nightmare of religion; nor has the age awakened out of the horrid dream. Ignorance is yet the master, and fear narcotizes mankind. Terrible dream! Hell yawning beneath our feet, devils innumerable with infinite power, and a heartless despot—absolute in his egotism—overriding all!

Mankind have not awoken, except to gaze, as in twilight, between sleeping and waking. Fetishism maintains its hold, and superstition—like ragweeds, rank and foul—occupies the garden of the soul.

The old Satan of Oriental theogony has a supreme place. Hell is still heated with burning sulphur. The Infinite Father is yet a God of battles. Man is a worm created for his iron feet to crush, or to hand over by the million to eternal torment. A priesthood despotically organized keeps the saddle and guides humanity with gag and spur. They demand observance of sacred days, have their sacred books, and prayers which are not to be omitted. God is not pleased that we place our children on altars and thrust the knife into their bosoms. He does not desire our enemy's blood, or the flesh of our flocks, or the first of our harvest, but he demands the sacrifice of our pleasures; he wants us to weep and wail and crucify our spirits. He loves to have us sacrifice the appetites he has given us—the emotions of love and affection. He is pleased to have us cast reason aside for blind and unthinking faith, and receive the words of his priests as the ultimate of knowledge without questioning.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER. NO VII.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As far as I am concerned, you are welcome to call such men as Judge Story "pettifoggers," and, in the face of three standard biographers, to deny that Lincoln said "Christ is God." My cause can afford better than yours to let you ignore authorities in that summary way.

You assume that a belief in the supernatural is unscientific. That is begging the question. For the present, suffice it to say that the men who have done the most for science have been believers in the possibility, reasonableness, and historical reality of miracles. This we shall show farther on.

I wrote my last letter with precipitate haste, just before going to the country. That will account for my inadvertence when I said the Jewish musicians played on "harps of a thousand strings." Of course, I am liable to make mistakes. But that I should even commit to writing this mistake is rather strange. A few evenings before, I had been ridiculing that very "harp." Well, I shall have to come down nine hundred and ninety strings. I should have said, "Instruments of ten strings" (Pss. 33:2; 93:3; 144:9). I stand corrected. Thank you.

It is my turn now. Your letter is rich in materials for retaliation. You fall into quite a number of rather serious errors:

Error first: "Nor does any other part mention it" (the book of Job). Job is mentioned four times in the Bible (Ez. xiv:14, 16, 20; James v, ii), and once in the Apocrypha (Tob. ii:12). Neither is it true that "the best Hebrew scholars have long since decided that that book was not written by a Hebrew." Such critics as Kennicott, Eichhorn, Michaelis, Dathe, Luther, Grotius, Doederlin, Umbreit, Rosenmüller, Reimar, Spanheim, Warburton, Hitzig, Hirzel, Delitzsch, Evans, Lange, etc., etc., are of the opinion that its author was a Jew. The name Job is Jewish (Gen. xvi:13). But granting that it is the work of a Gentile, the reception of the book into the Scriptures proves that the Israelites could appreciate its contents.

Error second: "The only time he used the word science, he called it false." On the contrary, Paul used the word gnōsis, translated "science," in 1 Tim. vi:20, about twenty times in his Epistles (Englishman's Greek Concordance). It was not Paul's fault that this word was not uniformly rendered "science" in the English version, as it was generally in the Vulgate and in Leusden's Latin Testament. Neither did Paul call science false. There is a vast difference between declaring that science is false and saying that there is a false "science." It was only the latter that the Apostle denounced.

Error third: "They lived in tents, and knew very little about houses." How opposite to the facts! "Houses" and "palaces," "winter houses and summer houses," built of "hewn stone," and "cedar," and "ivory," containing "parlours," "painted with vermilion," were no rare things among the ancient Hebrews (See Jud. iii:20; Jer. xxii:14; Amos iii:15).

Error fourth: "They stole from the Egyptians." "Stole" is not the word employed by Moses, but "borrowed" (Ex. iii:22, xii:31-36). Among their first definitions of shaal, the original word for "borrowed," Fürst and Gesenius give "to ask pressingly; to ask for; to demand urgently; to beg very urgently; to ask for one's self." Stealing is an idea entirely foreign to the word.

Error fifth: "He was great in extolling the virtues of faith and blind credulity." As regards faith, that is true; but as regards "blind credulity," it is utterly false. Scriptural faith and "blind credulity" are as different as light and darkness. Paul disclaimed and disdained the latter. He rebuked even the scientific Athenians for being "too superstitious" (Acts xvii:22). He prayed for deliverance "from unreasonable men" (2 Thes. iii:2). He regarded Religion as a "reasonable," or, strictly speaking, a "logical service" (Gr. logikēn latreian, Rom. xii:1). He reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, until the Infidel Felix trembled before him (Acts xxiv:25).

You say Solomon was "remarkable for his sensuality." It is true that he fell into that grievous sin; and the Bible condemns him for it (1 Kings chap. xi). But the modern Freethinkers, who regard themselves as preëminently "progressive" and "advanced," are the very ones who justify and defend "remarkable sensuality." I refer to the doctrine of "Free-Love," which is by interpretation, Free-Lust. I am glad, Mr. Bennett, to see you uniting with the Bible to denounce an abomination which "advanced" Infidelity is doing its utmost to propagate.

You assert that the ancient Jews were "crude" musicians. Of course, they were inferior to the modern masters; but they were unexcelled in their time. They could "sing praises with the understanding" (Ps. 47:7; 1 Cor. xiv:15); and they knew how to "make sweet melody" (Is. xxiii:16; Amos v:23; Eph. v:19). "Crude" music does not have the soothing effect that David's harp did on the agitated Saul (1 Sam. xvi:23).

You say there was nothing among the ancient Jews "showing a high order of civilization." Even Rationalists, like DeWette, in his Lehrbuch der Archäologie, and Jahn, in his Biblical Archaeology, express a very different opinion.

But I cannot stop to expose all your misrepresentations. What I have given is enough to show how false, inaccurate, and reliable you are as an expounder of the Scriptures! Let me, however, furnish you with the proofs you call for, that the Hebrew women were excellent dressmakers and milliners, and that they knew how to use cosmetics. Read Is. iii:16-24; Jer. iv:30; Ez. xxiii:40, and you will doubtless be convinced.

The Bible does not pretend to be a text-book of science. And this is no discredit to it. You do not condemn a work on moral philosophy, because it is not a treatise on mathematics. It is the mission of the Bible to teach moral and spiritual truth. Its references to physical science are therefore only incidental. I showed in my last letter that those references are always respectful and approving.

Let us now proceed to prove that believers in the Bible have done more than unbelievers to promote learning and science.

This is shown, in the first place, by the fact that the best Educational Institutions of the world have been almost uniformly founded, endowed, and cherished by Christian people. There are over thirty Universities in Germany. Every one of them is under either Catholic, Lutheran, Evangelical, or their united control. "The motives which prompted these great establishments were without exception, pure and elevated, and generally pious and Christian" (Schaff's Germany and its Universities, pp. 29-32). The same is true of another country famous for its higher education. There is not one University in all France that its Infidels have brought into existence. Should you feel like contradicting this statement, please name the University, with your authority. The University of Paris was founded by the approbation of Pope Innocent III. (Barnard's Systems, Institutions, and Statistics of Public Instruction in Different Countries. N. Y., 1872, p. 198). This institution was suppressed by the Infidels in the riot of 1793 (Am. Cyclopaedia, 1876, Art. "University"). The higher schools of France were at first religious (Ibid.). So of England. The American Cyclopaedia will tell you that Cambridge University was originally a religious center; that the Colleges constituting it were founded by Christian gentlemen whose names they bear; that it was befriended by Henry III., Henry IV., Henry V., Henry VII., by Edward I., Edward II., Edward III., Edward IV., and by Queen Elizabeth. And these sovereigns were all, according to Hume, believers in the Christian Religion. I cannot find the name of an Infidel in connection with its foundation, endowment, or with the furnishing of its Cabinets and Libraries. Did space permit, I could show you similar accounts of every University in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. You may find the records in Cyclopedias, Histories, and Reports that are always accessible.

Cross over to the United States, and the same is true here. Josiah Quincy, in his admirable History of Harvard University, shows that the originators of that institution were all church people, and mostly ministers; that its first and best friend, John Harvard, was a preacher; that its Presidents were an unbroken succession of clergymen for nearly two hundred years; and that its professors and benefactors were Christians in about the same proportion. Our other universities and colleges, such as Yale, Brown, New York, Cornell, Bowdoin, Amherst, Dartmouth, Columbia, Rutgers, Union, Lafayette, Oberlin, Princeton, Washington and Jefferson, etc., etc., owe their very being to religious men. Only think of it! Where would the world be to-day without the universities, colleges, academies, seminaries, and schools, that Christianity has created and supported? It would be in worse than Egyptian darkness.

The Public Schools of Europe and America are the product of Christianity. In Europe religion is everywhere blended with secular instruction (See Barnard's Systems, Institutions, Statistics, etc.). The prime movers of the "National Society for promoting the Education of the Poor in England" were Christian benefactors, chiefly clergymen (O'Malley's Sketch of the State of Popular Education, 1840). The American Public School sprang up first in New England. Its religious character is shown by the fact that the Testament was a reader in it for many years. Webster's Speller and Grammar were among the first of American school books. But Noah Webster was a devout church member (See his Memoir in his Unabridged Dictionary). The majority of school books ever since have been prepared by religious scholars and educators. We may safely say that more than eighty per cent. of the teachers in our common schools are church members. I read not long ago, in an educational journal, that there are seventeen thousand schools in Pennsylvania, and that the Bible is read in fourteen thousand of them. Thus, the feeling still predominates that the State should not utterly ignore moral instruction. In earlier days this feeling was more pronounced than it is now. Gov. George Clinton of New York wrote to the Legislature in the beginning of the present century: "The advantage to morals, religion, liberty, and good government, arising from the general diffusion of knowledge, being universally admitted, permit me to recommend this subject (common schools) to your deliberate attention." Gov. Lewis and Gov. Tompkins gave utterance still later to similar sentiments (Cheever's Bible in our Common Schools, N. Y. 1859, pp. 201-4). Our facilities, then, for popular education are to be accredited to men who were not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ. Why, Sir, if we had to depend on Infidelity for it, we would be without a respectable dictionary of the English language. Johnson, Webster, and Worcester (see Memoir in his Dictionary), were firm believers in the Word of God. And what would we be without a dictionary? In other words, what would we know if we had nothing but Infidelity to teach us?

A like account may be given of the world's greatest Museums and Libraries. The first circulating library was established in Cesarea, about 309 A. D., by Saint Pamphilus (Curwen's History of Book-sellers, p. 422). Sir Hans Sloane may be called the founder of the British Museum. But Sir Hans Sloane was no Infidel (Encyclopedia Britannica). Those who bequeathed their private libraries to the libraries of Oxford, Cambridge, Yale, Harvard, etc., etc., will invariably be found to have been Christians, and very often clergymen. Let us look at the matter nearer home. The founders of the "New York Historical Society" were godly men. We find the names of Bishop Moore, Rev. Samuel Miller, D.D., Dr. John W. Francis, etc., among its first and highest officers. There was not one skeptic among the organizers of the Boston Athenæum (see Josiah Quincy's History of). John Jacob Astor, the founder of the magnificent library that bears his name, was a life-long church member (Parton's Famous Americans, p. 435). Peter Cooper is a Unitarian, accepting the Bible as the inspired word of God. I have not been able to find anything very positive about the religious opinions of James Smithson, the originator of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. But the current sketches of his life contain many circumstantial evidences of his subscription to the Christian system. Where are the public museums of art and science, the libraries and institutes, that Infidels have established? Ah, my friend, they are almost as few and far between as you would say that angel visits are.

Did you ever observe, in reading the lives of our Revolutionary heroes and statesmen, how that nearly all of them received their education from Christian clergymen? Where would they have been without an education? But what of their education, if they had been obliged to seek it from Infidel teachers and professors?

The greatest discoverers, inventors, and literati have been believers in the Bible as a Divine revelation. I can name but a very few of them. Among them I will mention Copernicus, the reviver of the heliocentric theory; Galileo, the inventor of the telescope; Isaac Newton, the greatest of philosophical discoverers; Bacon, who introduced the inductive method; Descartes, the prince of metaphysicians; Leibnitz, the rival of Newton; Columbus, the discoverer of America; Kepler, the formulator of "Kepler's laws;" Pascal, that prodigy of profoundness; Jenner, the discoverer of vaccination; Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood; Sir William Jones, the Sanscrit scholar; Adam Smith, the unrivaled political economist; Dr. Priestley, the discoverer of oxygen gas; George Stephenson, the perfecter of the steam-engine; Smeaton, the builder of the Eddystone Lighthouse; the Duke of Bridgewater, the first English canal constructor; Christopher Wren, the architect of St. Paul's; William Edwards, the "rainbow" bridge-builder; Sir Humphrey Davy, the chemist, and inventor of the Safety Lamp (Works, London, 1839, vol. i. pp. 114, 431; vol. ix. pp. 214-388); Robert Fulton, the first steamboat builder (Colden's Life of Fulton pp. 254, 281, 369, 371); Prof. S. F. B. Morse, the inventor of the electric telegraph (Prime's Life of Morse, N. Y., 1875, pp. 730-7); Cuvier, the comparative anatomist (Lee's Memoirs, London, 1830, pp. 10, 35, 318, 327); Audubon, the ornithologist; Faraday, Tyndall's teacher (Gladstone's Life of Faraday pp. 118-122); Sir David Brewster, the versatile scientist; the Herschels, a family of astronomers; Chatham, Brougham, Burke, Henry, Webster, Clay, the orators; Blackstone, Kent, Hale, Coke, Story, the jurists; the poets Chaucer, Spenser, Dante, Dryden, Gray, Wordsworth, Young, Thomson, Pollock, Milton and Shakspeare (see Halliwell's Life of Shakspeare, pp. 33, 270-289, and Wilkes' Shakspeare from an American Point of View, N. Y. 1877, chap. vi.); Mozart, Haydn, Handel, Mendelssohn, Bach, Beethoven, Liszt, the musicians; Da Vinci, Correggio, Carracci, Raphael, Angelo, West, the artists; Rawlinson, Lepsius, Layard, the antiquarians; Wilberforce and Howard, the philanthropists. But I might as well stop, as it will be impossible to finish the list. The names of Cullen, Hugh Miller, Count Rumford, Sir Roderick Marchison, Ferguson, Liebig, Leyden, Prof. Dana, Prof. Silliman, Prof. Henry, Dr. McCosh, Principal Dawson, Dr. Livingstone, Agassiz, Gen. Newton, Winchell, Mitchell, Guyot, Guizot, Noah Porter, Duke of Argyll, Gladstone, etc., etc., are already in the reader's mind.

Now, I ask, where would art and science be without the discoveries and inventions of those whom I have mentioned? Had we nothing to-day but such original contributions to scientific knowledge as Infidels have made, we would have scarcely anything but barbarism. We would be without our best music, our best poetry, and our best art. We would have no astronomy, no steam power, no telegraph, no America. Even now, with every advantage and incentive, Infidels are in the rear as scientists. I have looked quite carefully over the "Annual Record of Science and Industry," for the last six years, and I fail to find that the men who talk the most about science, have made any contributions to it. There is the Banner of Light, editor and contributors; The Religio-Philosophical Journal, editor and contributors; The Boston Investigator, editor and contributors; The Crucible, editor and contributors; Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, editress (?) and contributors; The Index, editor and contributors; and, let me add, THE TRUTH SEEKER, editor and contributors—one might imagine from their loud talk that they were scientists par excellence, and that they contributed immensely to its progress! But, alas! when we come to examine the records of what has been actually done, and who has done it, it does not appear that they have done anything whatever!

The leading Publishers of the world have been generally believers in the Christian Religion. The earliest and foremost booksellers and publishers of England have been friends and members of the Church (see Curwen's History of Booksellers, London, 1873). Quite significantly, Pater-noster—i. e. the Lord's Prayer—Row, in London, was the first to become famous for its book trade. The pioneers of the publishing business in America—Usher, Ranger, Avery, Phillips, Ratcliffe, Sewall, etc.—were men of faith (Thomas' History of Printing, vol. ii. pp. 409-412). I presume that what is true of New York is true of any large city in this respect. The religious character of the New York booksellers and publishers is reflected in their resolutions on the death of Mr. Fletcher Harper, where you will find the following sentence: "For all that he was as a man and a Christian, for all that he was permitted to accomplish in the interest of literature and education, we would render thanks to Almighty God" (New York Herald, May 31, 1877).

O, yes; I must mention the art of printing. That, too, was the offspring of Christian genius. Gutenberg, the inventor of printing, was a Roman Catholic (Thomas' History of Printing, Vol. I. p. 112). The first important book ever printed was the Latin Bible. William Caxton, the first English printer, lived and died in the Church (Ibid. p. 135). America is indebted for its first press to the Rev. Jesse Glover, a Nonconformist minister (Thomas' History of Printing, Vol. I. p. 205). What would the world be without the printing-press? When you give a correct answer to that question, I will tell you what it would be for aught that Infidelity has done for it in that direction.

I anticipate in reply an elaborate treatise on Paine and his iron bridge; Girard College in Philadelphia; James Lick, and the California observatory; Tyndall and his experiments; Huxley and his speculations; Darwin and his theories, and ever so much more in that line. I give skeptics credit for all they have done. But they were not the pioneers of science. They do not, and they cannot sit under their own vine and fig-tree. They have themselves, almost to a man, been trained and educated by religious teachers. In the hour of difficulty and darkness, the Christian was in the front, bearing the brunt of the battle, while the Infidel lagged behind, whining and finding fault, but doing nothing. But now, after the day of doubt and danger is past, and the victory is won, behold him scrambling forward for the booty and the glory! He beheld, passing along, the chariot of Progress, drawn by the steeds of Faith and Works. He saw that it was his only chance for a ride. Though a "dead-head," he was not refused a place. He clambered eagerly up, cocked himself on a back seat, and then began to scatter hand-bills among the spectators, inscribed, See! see what Infidelity is doing for the advancement of Science!!

But my article is already too long. The sum of what has been said is this: Believers in the Bible have given to mankind over a hundred universities; innumerable colleges, academies and schools; the first and largest libraries and athenæums of the world; the cardinal discoveries and inventions, such as the Western Hemisphere, the heliocentric theory, the law of gravitation, the steam-engine, the telegraph, and the printing-press, which, beginning with the Bible, has filled the earth with books. Scriptural religion has ever held aloft the primeval Fiat, Let there be light. This light has varied in intensity at different periods. The whirlwinds of persecution have rushed upon it. The mist of superstition has enveloped it. The choke-damp of indifference has dimmed it. Many a jack-with-a-lantern has set itself up against it. But it has never been extinguished. Its flame has always been the brightest, highest, and steadiest. The Spirit of History is waiting for a greater than Bartholdi to prepare a worthy statue of CHRISTIANITY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

Yours with respect, G. H. HUMPHREY.

Evolution.

MR. EDITOR: The theory of Evolution is gaining ground every day. Among scientific men of real ability it has hardly any opponents. Information in regard to it is being diffused among all classes, and the force of the evidence in favor of it is seen and acknowledged by intelligent persons everywhere. The merely literary class now treat it with respectful consideration. The opposition to it now, as in the past, is chiefly by theologians, or in the interest of the prevalent theological system. But the theory is so well sustained, accepted by so many, by so great a number of influential minds, and is gaining so rapidly, that the more astute theologians are giving it their adhesion and trying to dissuade their less sagacious brethren in the ministry from their opposition to it. Some of the clergy at Denver criticized Braden severely for his opposition to modern science. They declared he weakened his cause and gave his opponent a great advantage in the debate. They wanted him to accept the facts and theories, and to claim they could be reconciled with the teachings of the Bible.

After the Jacksonville (Ill.) debate, some ministers sent a report of the affair to the Christian Standard, and stated among other foolish things that Braden had disproved the nebular hypothesis and evolution generally.

The report called out the following communication from Prof. B. J. Rodford, of Eureka, Ill. (where the Campbellites have a college). Prof. Rodford is of the same denomination as Prof. Braden, but, like many others of that denomination, he declines to acknowledge Braden as a representative of his "brotherhood" on the subject of Evolution.

"THE NEBULAR HYPOTHESIS DISPROVED."

"Many, no doubt, will be astonished to find, as they read the 'Discussion Summary' in the last Standard, that Bro. Braden has 'disproved the nebular hypothesis,' and 'exposed at every step the failure of evolution.' Moreover, many will be possessed of an abiding doubt as to whether he really did any such thing.

"There is something more involved in this matter than a question of victory between Braden and Underwood. Ever since the Church was established, each age has had its great intellectual question; some problem which claimed the larger share of the thoughts and speculations of men. This question compelled individuals and societies, and even the Church itself, to define their position with respect to it. At one time it was a question of astronomy, at another of geography, or chemistry, or geology; but whatever it was, it surely involved the necessity of taking sides on the part of all. Now it cannot be denied that the problem of this age is just this matter of evolution, which Bro. Braden is said to have exposed, and of which the nebular hypothesis is only a single phase. Patient workers are busy in tracing this principle not only in the genesis of their solar system, but in the growth of plants and animals, societies, institutions, arts, sciences, and I can show that Paul applies it to Christianity itself, in every feature claimed for it by the scientific men of to-day, and even beyond their present attainment.

"It is worthy of notice that in almost every such question as we have indicated, the thing which has been known in history as the Church, has been on the side of error, and has been compelled eventually to withdraw opposition and accept the inevitable, to re-adjust its spectacles of interpretation and get a better focus for the reading of the sacred text. Nor should we forget that the Copernican hypothesis was often 'disproved and exposed' to the satisfaction of the Church, by some learned champion; that the rotundity of the earth was often disproved and shown to be an impossibility by good churchmen. All this, at least, suggests that there may be danger of the Church getting on the wrong side of this question of evolution; and that she may be too easily persuaded that it has been disproved. The principles of evolution are too valuable, from a religious standpoint, to be lost, and I do not think they can be shown to be unreasonable. So long as opposition to it is simply Bro. Braden's position, it is no affair of mine, but when his position is set forth as that of our brotherhood on this great problem, I wish to put in a disclaimer. I do not desire that we shall take a position for which we shall be ridiculed and distrusted by our children, and I fear that this is what we are about to do.

"But there is something more involved in this than the mere discomfort of being laughed at. It is undeniable that Infidelity is gaining ground in the intellectual centers of the world, and much of this increase is due to the fact that the Church has in all the centuries stubbornly denied what thinking men knew to be true, and persecuted the brave spirits who have tried to carry out the command, 'Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.'

The effort to harmonize the Bible and Evolution will not be very successful I think. In proportion as Evolution is received and assimilated, the Bible, as a work of divine authority, is thrown aside. In closing I will give an illustration of the ingenuity that may be exhibited in reconciling contradictions, by quoting from a lecture by Mr. John Weiss:

"I have heard of another Episcopal clergyman who became profoundly convinced that some theory of Evolution must be true, after reading Darwin, Huxley, and the rest. And it occurred to him, too, that it would never do not to find the Bible in harmony. So he ingeniously made it out that the modern doctrine was clearly foreshadowed and implied in the following verses of a psalm: 'My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfected; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them;' and he proposed to translate the original Hebrew thus: 'My protoplasm was not hidden from thee, when, while still undeveloped, I floated on the old Silurian Sea, a fringed and embroidered jelly-fish' (Hebrew for 'curiously wrought'); 'thine eyes did see my sarcode, still unevolved; but in this germ all my members lay involved, so fashioned as to pass through continuance of evolution, while as yet there were none of them.' Could King David have known of this, I doubt if he would have been content to cut off only the skirt of this Saul among the prophets.

The same gentleman informed a friend that the Hebrew word which is usually translated, naked, meant also hairy. So that the verse in Genesis: "And they were both naked, the man and his wife," should be Darwinized thus: "And they were both hairy, that is, anthropoid apes, and were not ashamed of it." Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

THE true way of getting along well in the world is not to make one's self offensive to one's friends by excellence of character and habits of life, by success, or by doing anything praiseworthy. Let us strike the average as nearly as possible. Let us be good fellows rather than good men, and choke the first man who dares to ascribe to us a single virtue. Let us all keep down and out of sight. All that we do for ourselves, and all that we do for mankind, only feeds hell with slanderers, and so betrays the baseness of human nature that we may well blush to think that we are members of the human race.—Dr. J. G. Holland.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1877.

The Champions of the Church.

This, the fourth volume of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY—"The World's Sages, Thinkers and Reformers" being the first, Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief" the second, the "Great Works of Thomas Paine" the third—is now well in hand, and we propose to have it ready to present to our patrons in the coming Autumn. THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH will consist of biographical sketches of those who have been eminent and conspicuous in the origination, establishment and promulgation of the Christian system of religion—those who have fixed its creed and points of belief, those who have embraced it for political purposes, those who have fought its battles, those who have been its principal persecutors and executioners, and those who have been its brilliant lights from its incipency down to the present time, and will, in the aggregate, constitute a complete history of the character, origin, rise, progress and labors of the Church, embracing its appropriation of dogmas, rites and sacraments from Paganism, its change from diminutive and obscure numbers to a political power, its wars, its crusades, its persecutions, its inquisitions, its dungeons, its autos da fe, its burning stake, its scaffold and its prisons.

After an examination into the character and reliability of the Jewish Scriptures, it will treat as subjects, Jesus Christ, Peter, Judas Iscariot, John the Divine, Paul, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Origen, Tertullian, Eusebius, Constantine, St. Cyril, Clovis, Pepin, Charlemagne, Irene, Popes Joan, John XII., John XIII., Alexander I., Alexander III., Innocent III., Boniface VIII., Benedict XII., John XXII., John XXIII., Alexander VI., and some fifty others of the popes of Rome and heads of the Church; Godfrey of Bouillon, Guy Lusignan, Simon Montfort, St. Dominic, Peter the Great, Sigismund, Louis XI. of France, Loyola, Ojida, Torquemada, Luther, Calvin, Munzer, Ferdinand and Isabella, Cortez, Pizarro, Henry VIII. of England, Alva, Cranmer, Elizabeth, Charles IX. of France, Catherine de Medici, Philip II. of Spain, Guy Fawkes, Oliver Cromwell, Jeffrey, Charles II., Louis XIV. of France, John Graham (Claverhouse), James II., Parris, Cotton Mather, Ephraim K. Avery, Bishop Onderdonk, John Newland Maffit, L. D. Huston, Rev. B. Phinney, Rev. Dr. Pomeroy, Henry Ward Beecher, Anthony Comstock, Rev. Thomas B. Bott, Rev. J. H. Foster, Rev. Samuel H. McGhee, with a mention of numerous others of olden time and other libidinous and criminal clergymen of modern times.

The following sketch of Constantine the Great—the man who probably carried greater numbers into the Church, and did more towards making it a political power than any other individual—is taken from the forthcoming volume, and may be accepted as a fair sample of its style and spirit.

CONSTANTINE.

Flavius Valerius Aurelius, better known in history as Constantine the Great, the first Christian emperor of Rome, was born at Naissus, in Dacia, 272 A. C. His father was the Emperor Constantius Chlorus; and his mother, Helena, according to some authorities, was the daughter of a British king, while other traditions represent her as having been the daughter of an innkeeper. When he was eighteen years of age his father was elevated to the rank of Cæsar. This fortunate event was followed by the divorce of Helena—Constantius after his promotion having sought the splendor of an imperial alliance. Constantine shared the disgrace and humiliation of his mother. Entering the service of Diocletian, who had abdicated the imperial dignity, he soon signalized his valor in the wars of Persia and Egypt, and ere long rose to the rank of a tribune of the first order.

Although early distinguished by the profession of arms, he showed but little inclination for study and the improvement of his mind. In person he was tall and majestic; he is described as dextrous in all the military exercises, intrepid in battle, and affable in peace; cold and insensible to the allurements of pleasure, his whole conduct was tempered by prudence, and his mind entirely engrossed by ambition. His talents, courage, and martial services rendered him a favorite of the army, and an object of jealousy to Galerius, the emperor who shared with his father the administration of Rome.

Apprehending the sure and secret revenge of his imperial foe, young Constantine left the palace of Nicodemia in the night, and traveled with such incredible diligence through Bithynia, Thrace, Dacia, Pannonia, Italy, and Gaul, as to frustrate any attempt Galerius might make to overtake him. Amidst the joyful acclamations of the people he safely reached the port of Boulogne, and joined his father at the very moment he was preparing to embark for Britain. The result of the British expedition was a victory over the barbarians of Caledonia. This closed the military career of Constantius. Fifteen months after he had received the title of Augustus, and fourteen years after he had been promoted to the rank of Cæsar, he ended his life in the imperial palace of York.

The soldiers who had followed Constantine into Britain showed their esteem for their beloved emperor by immediately saluting his son with the titles with which he had been invested. The throne had ever been the object of Constantine's ambition; and now it was his only means of safety. He was sufficiently acquainted with the character of Galerius to know that if he would live he must determine to reign. Receiving the acclamations of the flower of the western armies which had followed his father to Britain, he justified himself in usurping the imperial purple, without so much as soliciting it in the regular and constitutional manner.

By his second wife, Theodora, Constantius had six children, three of either sex. These children of royal extraction claimed a preference over the son of the divorced Helena to the succession of their father. At this time Constantine was in the thirty-second year of his age, in the full vigor of both body and mind, while the eldest of his brothers was not more than thirteen years old.

Soon after the death of Constantius, Rome became divided into hostile powers, and became the theatre of revolt and war. At one time, and the only time in its history, six emperors ruled its vast territory.

Constantine formed an alliance with Maximian, one of the most powerful contestants for the throne, by the marriage of his daughter Fausta. The nuptials were celebrated at Arles, in France, with every circumstance of magnificence. After abdicating the imperial purple the second time, Maximian at last sought refuge in the court of Constantine; but when an incursion of the Franks had summoned the latter with a part of his army to the banks of the Rhine, the crafty Maximian spread a report of the death of his son-in-law, seized the treasure, and ascended the throne. Upon the first news of the perfidy of his father-in-law, Constantine returned by such rapid marches to the gates of Arles as left Maximian no time for the establishment of his authority, or even for resistance. He was obliged to withdraw to the neighboring city of Marseilles. Without delay Constantine immediately assaulted the city. The garrison purchased their pardon by delivering up the city and the person of Maximian, against whom sentence of death was pronounced, and who was allowed the favor of strangling himself with his own hands. Had Constantine possessed the humanity to have spared this old man, who had twice been Emperor of Rome, who had been the benefactor of his father, and who was the father of his wife, he would have been more justly deserving of the title "Great." Notwithstanding the murder of Maximian, and the slaughter of the barbarous Franks and Alemanni, whose captured kings he caused to be thrown to wild beasts in the amphitheatre of Treves for his diversion, the reign of Constantine in Gaul seems to have been the most innocent and virtuous period of his life. It will thus be seen at the outset that the virtues of this first of Christian emperors were not such as to render him illustrious.

At length, the deaths of Maximian and Galerius reduced the number of emperors to four. At this period of its history, Rome comprised all the possessions of the Grand Seigneur of the present day, except Arabia; all that the house of Austria possesses in Germany, and all the German provinces as far as the Elbe: Italy, France, Spain, England and half of Scotland; all Africa as far as the Great Desert, and even the Canary Isles. Epirus, Macedonia, Thessaly, Illyria, Pannonia, Asia Minor, the African coasts, and countries which are at present nearly barbarous and deserted, were then populous and well governed. It was the ambition of Constantine to confirm and enlarge the immense power of all these nations, and reduce them all to his single yoke.

It was while marching to Rome to fight Maxentius, one of the surviving rival emperors, that, according to that Christian falsifier, Eusebius, Constantine was converted to Christianity by a miraculous vision. This was the appearance in the clouds of the grand imperial standard surmounted by a large Greek R, with a cross, and certain Greek words which signified, "By this sign thou shalt conquer." This is said to have happened in the year 312. It would have been more consistent had this vision appeared in Italy upon a day of battle, with the inscription in Latin instead of Greek. But of course only Infidels are allowed to discredit this pious narrative. Maxentius was defeated and killed near Rome.

At length only one rival remained, his brother-in-law, Licinus, Emperor of the East; but gaining a complete victory over him at Adrianople, and having treacherously caused him to be put to death in violation of his imperial pledge of safety, Constantine was left the sole master of the Roman world. By the most treacherous, bloody, unscrupulous, and cruel course of conduct he had triumphed over all the rival claimants to the throne, and had at last attained the object of his ambition. Murder, assassination, and wholesale slaughter had marked his career. He had attained undisputed supremacy over the great empire of Rome, both in the East and West. And now he wished to offer an expiation for his crimes. He applied to Pagan priests and pontiffs. They told him that in their religion there was no atonement for such guilt as his; but they referred him to the then obscure sect of Christians who undertook to guarantee complete absolution for the greatest enormities through the merits of the blood of an innocent victim. And so Constantine made an open profession of Christianity—but without becoming strictly a Christian himself, for at that time baptism was essential to any person's becoming one; and Constantine, probably with the hope that he might continue committing every act with impunity, delayed the act of immersion till near the point of death. By thus waiting till the approach of death he doubtless expected, according to Christian teaching, to expiate at once in the water of regeneration, the guilt and bloodshed of a life-time. O, the most unfortunate event that ever befell the human race was the adoption of Christianity by this crimson-handed cut-throat in the possession of uncontrolled power!

The first legal enactment for the observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, was made by him. The edict was given A. C. 321, and was worded as follows: "Let all judges and people of the towns (or cities) rest, and all the various trades be suspended on the venerable day of the sun (venerabile die Solis). Those who live in the country, however, may freely and without fault attend to the cultivation of their fields (since it often happens that no other day be so suitable for sowing grain and planting the vine), lest, with the loss of favorable opportunity, the commodities offered by Divine Providence should be destroyed."

And as he must be master in everything, so he must be master in the Church. Accordingly in 325 he convoked and opened the celebrated Council of Nice, the first general council in ecclesiastical history. He had murdered his father-in-law, had cut the throat of his twelve-year-old nephew; and the very year that he convened the first great Christian council he beheaded his eldest son, Crispus, and suffocated in a bath of boiling water his wife, Fausta. In the words of an old Gallic author, "He loved to make a clean house." And after having caused seven members of his family to be put to death in cold blood, after having steeped his soul in the guilt of every crime, from private assassination to wholesale massacre, he called together the Christian world at Nicæ; and with the diadem upon his brow, covered over with jewels, seated on high in a golden chair, the first Christian emperor proceeded to settle the orthodox creed and determine the will of God for the centuries to come. In answer to the call of Constantine, two thousand and forty-eight bishops, all of different sentiments and opinions, met at the town of Nicæ, in Bithynia. The main object of this council was to decide the dispute between Athanasius, Deacon of Alexandria, and Arius, an Eastern schismatic, viz: whether Jesus Christ was God or creature, and to settle the canon of Scripture. Of course this meeting of two thousand violent and exasperated bishops, each intensely interested in having his own peculiar opinions prevail, resulted in a general quarrel; and to restore harmony Constantine, as moderator, expelled seventeen hundred and thirty of the delegates, thus leaving only three hundred and eighteen to settle the vexed question whether God the Son was the same as God the Father, as well as what writings were the word of God. "This was done," says one authority, "by placing all the books under a communion table, and upon the prayers of the council, the inspired books jumped upon the table, while the false ones remained under." But after a time, this seems to have proved a failure; the majority began to mock at the method, and the holy wrangling was renewed fiercer than before. They were then submitted to vote, each manuscript being subjected to two ballots: 1st. Whether genuine, or written by the person whose name it bore: 2d. Whether authentic—that is whether its subject matter was true.

Out of fifty gospels submitted, only four, viz: Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, were admitted, and those by varying votes. Luke passed by only one majority vote. Had one more voter been kicked out of the Council the Christian world would have been minus an inspired book.

Subsequent councils received as canonical books rejected at Nicæ. One council would restore a book thrown out in a previous one. "Thus," says a writer, "were the 'sacred writings,' the 'word of God,' tossed like a battledoor from sect to sect, and altered as the spirit of faction might dictate." As illustrating the spirit that actuated the "ordained heads" at these councils, the following is quoted from Tindal, the great Christian writer: "Indeed, the confusion and disorder were so great amongst them (the bishops), especially in their synods, that it sometimes came to blows; as, for instance, Dioscorus, Bishop of Alexandria, cuffed and kicked Flavianus, Patriarch of Constantinople, with that fury that within three days after he died." And speaking of their doctrinal consistency, he says: "For though they were most obstinate as to power, they were most flexible in regard to faith; and in their council complimented the Emperor with whatsoever creeds they had a mind to, and never scrupled to recant what they had before enacted, or re-enact what they had before recanted."

From the fact that from the Council of Nicæ (325) to the end of that century there were thirty-eight councils called to settle the matter of controversy between Arius and Athanasius, and that nineteen of said councils decided in favor of the doctrines of the former, and nineteen—precisely the same number—that declared in favor of the doctrines of the latter, the inference is that the authority of the fathers, after all, was not final in the establishment of the true faith.

The Nicene council ratified the creed of Athanasius, and condemned that of Arius. Constantine gave his imperial sanction to this decision, and set the seal of the empire upon the books there declared by ballot to be the "word of God."

He also issued an edict declaring that those who resisted the divine judgment of the synod must prepare themselves for an immediate exile. Eusebius of Nicodemia, for his wavering assent, was disgraced and exiled. The impious Arius was banished into one of the remote provinces of Illyricum; his person and disciples were branded by law with odious names; his writings were condemned to the flames, and capital punishment was denounced against those in whose possession they should be found.

The Emperor had now imbibed the genuine Christian spirit, which has been ever one of persecution and intolerance; and the angry, sarcastic style of his edicts was designed to inspire his subjects with the hatred which he had conceived against the enemies of Jesus Christ. But notwithstanding his zeal for the propagation of the new religion, it does not appear that he attempted any penance or expiation for his unparalleled crimes and cruelties. It was at Rome that he had exercised his most savage enormities.

In the jurisprudence of Rome the person of a citizen had always been considered sacred from the application of the torture. Through all the annals of tyranny, from the reign of Tiberius to that of the first Christian emperor, the last hours of a Roman citizen were secured from the danger of ignominious torture. But during the reign of Constantine there was no privileged exemption from the torments of the dreaded rack. Slaves and citizens, plebians and princes, the dignity of age and the tenderness of youth, were alike exposed to the most cruel tortures; and the terrors of a malicious information, which might select them as the accomplices, or even as the witnesses, perhaps of an imaginary crime, perpetually hung over the heads of the principal citizens of Rome. He put to death so many individuals of rank, in addition to the assassination of so many of his friends and relatives, that Rome at last cried out against him; he was openly insulted by the populace in the streets; placards were put upon the palace gates denouncing him as the second Nero; his residence at Rome ere long became hateful to him, and he quit it forever. He proceeded to the East to lay the foundations of a city that would rival Rome, a city destined to perpetuate his name, and to survive his empire and his religion.

The winding channel through which the waters of the Euxine flow with a rapid and incessant course toward the Mediterranean, became celebrated in the history of antiquity by the name of the Bosphorus. At an obtuse point commanding the opposite shores of Europe and Asia, where the waves of the Thracian Bosphorus meet and repel each other, stood olden Byzantium. Strongly guarded by nature, but yet on every side accessible to the benefits of commercial intercourse, its advantages and incomparable position had been contemplated and described by the historians of antiquity many centuries before the reign of Constantine. The place appears to have been formed by nature for the center and capital of a great empire. Here where it is said the Romans derived their fabulous origin, where every prospect of beauty, of safety, and of wealth seemed united in a single spot, Constantine determined to erect a city that should be an eternal monument of his name and reign, and that should be the mistress of the luxurious East, as Rome had been of the West. In the interminable forests that overshadowed the shores of the Euxine, and the celebrated quarries of white marble in the little island of Proconnesus, were inexhaustible materials; and the wealth, the labor, and the genius of millions were at his command.

And so he commenced the building of Constantinople in 327,—"by the command of God," he says in one of his rescripts. But it is probable if any God ever gave him a command, it would have been not to assassinate his wife and son. Some estimate may be formed of the expense bestowed by the master of Rome on the foundation of the city of his imperial residence, by the allowance of two millions five hundred thousand pounds for the construction of the walls, the porticos and the aqueducts.

Like Rome, the city of Constantine occupied seven hills. The Bosphorus and the Hellespont were the two gates, which could always be closed against a naval enemy, or opened to the fleets of commerce. The buildings of the new city were executed by the best artificers that imperial liberality could procure, and were decorated by the hands of the most celebrated masters of the age of Pericles and Alexander. Unable to revive the genius of Phidias and Lysippus, his rapacious vanity prompted him to appropriate their immortal productions; and by his commands the cities of Greece and Asia were despoiled of their most valuable ornaments. Constantine urged the progress of the work with the impatience of a lover, and the walls, the porticos, and the principal edifices were completed in a few years, or, according to some accounts, in a few months.

At length the founder prepared to celebrate the dedication of the city, and to consecrate it to the virgin Mother of God. The games and pomp of this memorable festival were such as may not be described. Constantine caused a statue of himself to be framed of gilt wood, and this, bearing in its right hand a small image of the genius of the place, was drawn in a triumphal car, accompanied by guards carrying white tapers and clothed in the richest apparel, upon each returning birthday of the city. When this arrived opposite the throne of the reigning emperor, he rose from his seat, and with grateful reverence adored the memory of his predecessor. At the festival of the dedication, an edict, engraved on a column of marble, bestowed the title of Second or New Rome on the city of Constantine. But the name of Constantinople has ever since prevailed, and after the revolution of fifteen centuries, still perpetuates the name of its founder.

In order to people his new seat of empire at the expense of the ancient capital, Constantine induced the noblest Roman families, the most opulent senators, the equestrian order and their innumerable attendants to repair thither. Indeed, it has been said that he built houses for them on the exact model of their Roman palaces, and gratified them with an agreeable surprise. He assigned his favorites lands and pensions for the support of their dignity. He alienated the demesnes of Pontus and Asia to grant hereditary estates to the citizens of the new city. As an encouragement to strangers and plebians, frequent and regular distributions of wine and oil, of corn, bread, money and provisions were made with such prodigality as almost exempted the poorest from the necessity of labor.

An annual tribute of corn imposed on Egypt was applied to feed the lazy populace of the Christian capital. The Emperor ordered that the fleet of Alexandria should transport to Constantinople the grain which it had before supplied Rome during four months of the year. The result of these regulations was a rapid increase of the population. New piles of buildings were hurriedly crowded together, scarcely affording space in the narrow streets for the perpetual throng of men, of horses and carriages; and in less than a century Constantinople disputed with Rome itself for preëminence in riches and luxury and numbers. Soon after the age of Constantine a separation was made of the two empires, Rome being the capital of the Western, and Constantinople of the Eastern. The Eastern empire endured many centuries after the fall of the Western.

A few years before his death the Christian Emperor espoused the cause of the Arians; in fact he became an Arian himself, recalled the banished bishops, rebuilt their churches, and favored the sect that had hitherto been the object of his bitterest persecution. At the mature age of sixty-four, after a short illness, Constantine ended his memorable career in 337, at the palace Aquyrion, in the suburbs of Nicodemia, whither he had retired for the benefit of the air and the warm baths. He had celebrated the thirtieth year of his reign. None of his predecessors since Augustus had ruled Rome for so long a period. His corpse was carried to the city which was destined to preserve his name and memory as its founder. His body was adorned with the vain symbols of greatness, the purple and the diadem, and was deposited on a golden bed in one of the apartments of the palace, which had been splendidly furnished and illuminated for that purpose. The demonstrations of mourning surpassed those practiced on any previous occasion. The empire was divided between his three sons, Constantine, Constantius, and Constans.

And now we will submit to the just judgment of impartial history the character and career of the first of the Christian emperors. That he had some of the qualities of a great statesman and general is not gainsaid; but that he was a saint and a paragon of perfection, as some of his pious apologists would fain have us believe, will never be admitted by any who read the history of Rome. He built Constantinople; but it was at the expense of, and in order to revenge himself upon, the Eternal City. In founding the Eastern capital, he planted the germs of rivalry and dissension that resulted in the division of the empire; and his political policy contributed more toward the ruin of Rome than the irruptions of the Northern barbarians. In establishing Christianity and giving it the guaranty of government, he imposed upon after generations the greatest curse that ever afflicted the human race. Christ declared that he came not to bring peace but a sword. Peter, the rock upon which he established his Church, smote off an ear with the sword. That was the extent of the power of the Church in Peter's time—to strike off ears. But that imperial parricide, Constantine, established the Church upon the throne of the great Roman world, and committed to its greedy clutch the sword of universal empire. Christ's name has been a synonym for blood ever since. Says John Alberger, in his "Monks and Popes": "Had Constantine the Great, though frenzied with ambition and crimsoned with guilt, beheld the boundless ocean of gore which was destined to flow from an incorporation of Christianity with the civil power, and to roll its heavy surge over all future time, he would have been more obdurate than a fiend had he not cowed his head in horror at the frightful vision, and dropped in mercy the pen already inked to inaugurate the tremendous catastrophe."

And now, what of the character of this most celebrated of Christians? Eusebius, Gregory Nazianzen, and Christian historians thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Romans iii, 7, ("For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet should I also be judged as a sinner?") will tell us that he was a great and a good man. The gratitude of Christians has invented virtues for, and excused the crimes of, this powerful patron of their religion with all the extravagance of pious flattery. He has been considered by them almost equal to the Apostles. The Church is certainly more indebted to him than to any other man. No other potentate ever did so much for the cause of Christ. Charlemagne cut the throats of 4,500 Saxons in one day because they would not be baptized. This measure, though it abolished the Saxons, still did not add numerically to the strength of the Church. But Constantine pursued a better policy. He bought candidates for baptism. He purchased souls for salvation at an easy rate. He saved sinners through the merits of a gift enterprise. A white garment and twenty pieces of gold were the premiums promised by the Emperor to every baptized convert. In one year twelve thousand men were baptized at Rome, besides a proportionate number of women and children. No wonder the Church cherishes his memory.

But though the Church has decorated Constantine with every attribute of a saint and a hero; though he was placed by the Senate of Rome among the gods, and by the Christians of the East among the saints, he stands out in the light of authentic facts, a murderous monster, and the most abhorred tyrant whose vices and cruelties ever dishonored the imperial purple. To learn the true character of Constantine, inquire of Julian, of Zosimus, of Sozomen, and of Victor. They say he was cruel, ambitious, and sanguinary; that he was a prodigal, a sensualist, and a public robber. He was all these, but still a Christian. He was, as already related, the murderer of his father-in-law, his brother-in-law, his nephew, his son, and his wife—all this, but still a zealous propagator of Christianity. The truth and candor of history will yet compel the Christian world to blush for shame at the character and career of this most infamous and conspicuous Champion of the Church.

In this connection we wish to make an appeal to our friends and patrons. It costs a pretty large amount of money to get up a crown-octavo volume of 1000 pages—the CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH will contain that many—and to warrant the effort and outlay, we wish to ascertain, so far as possible, how many copies will be taken by our friends. Quite a generous number have already bespoken a copy, but to justify the undertaking a much larger number should be ordered. We will surely bring it out in the coming Autumn if a sufficient number of copies are engaged. We are disposed to do all we can in publishing Liberal literature, but we have to look to friends all over the country for support and patronage. Our friends and readers have been kind to us, and by the earnest we have given of what we are disposed to do we think we may reasonably look for a continuance of appreciation and support.

We request that every person who will agree to take a copy of THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH in the coming Fall will send in their names to that effect at an early date. The price will be the same as its companion volumes, "The World's Sages," etc., "The Analysis of Religious Belief," and "Paine's Great Works, Complete,"—$3.00 in cloth, $4.00 in colored leather, red, burnished, $4.50 in morocco, gilt edges, postage included.

Those who are able and willing to advance the price will confer a special favor upon us by doing so, and will lose nothing by their kindness. Those who are disposed to do us a still further kindness of making us loans of $5, $10, $25, or $50 to aid us in the enterprise will confer a great favor upon us, and they shall surely be paid back in a few months. We trust that the evidence we have given of what we have done and of what we are willing and anxious to do towards spreading Radical reading matter is sufficient to impart confidence to our friends and to enlist their aid in helping us in the good cause.

We are pledged to spend the remaining portion of our life, energy, and ability in disseminating Liberal literature, but our capital, financially, is limited and we have rather exhausted ourselves in what we have done in the publishing line in the past few months.

We will be glad to publish the names of those who order THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH; those who advance the pay for it; and those who are generous enough to make us such loans as they are able to for the purpose of bringing out the work.

Friends, although we are nearly all poor, so far as the wealth of the Stewarts, the Vanderbilts, and the Astors is concerned, we have truth on our side, and we have a duty to perform towards our fellow-men. A great work can be accomplished if we make a good use of the means we have. If every one will help a little, the aggregate will amount to a great deal, and much good will be accomplished in the end. We are constantly gaining ground in the cause of TRUTH and MENTAL LIBERTY. Let us be encouraged to press on in the good work of human emancipation and elevation. We feel disposed to do our share if our kind friends will do theirs. How many will do it? How many will take a copy of the CHAMPIONS? How many will advance the pay for it? How many will make us moderate loans to help get it up? Friends, let us hear from you.

First Half of the Volume.

This number completes the first half of Volume IV. of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is, perhaps, a very fitting time to call upon those who have not renewed for the present volume to do so. It is very unpleasant to be under the necessity of urging friends to pay for that which it is manifestly their duty to pay for without a word of solicitation. We are publishing by far the cheapest Liberal paper in the country or in the world—that is, we furnish the most reading matter for the money—and our rule has been to continue sending it to patrons till they request us to discontinue, unless we become convinced that those so furnished do not intend to pay for it, when, with regret that Liberals will treat us so, we strike their names from our list. We have invested every dollar we had in the world in this enterprise; we have worked early and late and constantly to perform what we conceive to be our duty and to present to the Liberals of America a paper worthy their acceptance and support. It is a source of regret that so many are willing we should continue to send it on month after month after the time has expired for which they have paid. But so it is. A good portion of our readers are prompt to pay up as soon as their time has expired. Such give us reasons for feeling grateful and under a sense of obligation to them. How pleasant it would be were all so. But they are not. A large proportion of our readers seem perfectly willing to let six months or a year, and even more, pass by in which they are in arrears, and are quite indifferent whether we have money to pay our way or not. Such are not the right kind of Liberals. They are the sponging kind, not the sustaining kind. We need every dollar that is due us. Our expenses are heavy, and we cannot run a publishing business without money; and if every one who owes us would send us the amount due they would do us a great favor and lighten our burdens very materially. We have thought to keep still and not dun our readers for money this year, with the hope that all would remember us and send us what is our due; but too many never get ready to send. Of course times are hard, but they are just as hard for us as for anybody else. Were it not for the great scarcity of money thousands would take our paper and buy our publications who now do not; but those who are furnished a paper ought to be willing to pay for it some time or other. It is certainly easier for our readers to each send us two dollars a year than it is for us to print the paper and send it out without pay. We are nearly discouraged, and hereby request those who do not want to take the paper, and pay for it, to send us what they now owe and order us to stop. We hate to strike a name from our list, but must do so if they will not pay. We cannot publish a paper and send it broadcast over the country for nothing, though we wish we could. May we hope that this appeal will be regarded?

THE GREAT WORKS OF THOMAS PAINE, Complete, are now ready to send to those who want it. Let us again say that those who have it not should possess a copy. Cloth, $3; leather, $4.00; morocco and gilt, $4.50, postage included,

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

We are receiving many complimentary letters in reference to our book of "Forms, Hymns, and Recitations." We feel grateful to our kind friends for their good opinions. Trusting their letters may be as interesting to our readers as they are to us, we cheerfully insert some of them here.

LETTER FROM MRS. SLECKER.

SNOWVILLE, PULASKI CO.,
VA., Sunday, June 17, 1877.

FRIENDS AND LIBERALS: I have spent a goodly portion of this Christian Sabbath in looking over and reading various portions of this "Truth Seeker Collection," and I must say that I am well pleased with the book—every part of it! The Invocations are sublime! They are well calculated to lift the mind above the petty trials and insignificant disturbances of life, and cause it to soar aloft in the elysian fields of love, brightness and beauty. They defy no imaginary god, but speak straight to the real and living forces of Nature, and to the throbbing, beating hearts of men and women.

The forms of business for associations, marriages, births and funerals are all very good and very appropriate.

The hymns—five hundred and twenty-five of them—are sensible, reasonable and to the point. They are so varied that all can be suited, from the most orthodox Christian to the most Atheistical Atheist. There are gems of poetry from many of our best authors, and among them are poems that have long been as household words, and are woven in the heart-lives of very many of us, and are dear and precious from old and loved associations. Here they are neatly and closely compacted in an imperishable form, and ready to become a part of every Liberal library in all the land.

The Recitations are first-class. The grave or gay, the sad or merry, the philosopher or the poet, can each and all find something in this collection to suit his taste.

Surely our friend Bennett has out-Bennetted himself in this his last published work for the cause of free enquiry, and let us hope his efforts will be duly appreciated by every truth seeker and truth lover all over the civilized globe. May the United States, the Canadas and the Old World ring to the sweet music of these hymns, and may the lecture-rooms and debating-halls echo to the recitations, while the everlasting hills and echoing mountains reverberate to the glorious aspirations embodied in the Invocations.

But to publish books takes a mint of money, and we must not be content, brother and sister Liberals, to simply read and admire, but we must also put our shoulders to the wheel and help to roll along the great car of progress by sending in our orders and the indispensable dollar—seventy-five cents is altogether too little for so large and so useful a volume, especially when it comes post-paid. A few cents more is but a trifle to each buyer, but a large amount in the whole thousands of volumes which, it is to be hoped, will in a few weeks make glad the hearts and homes of all who love the cause of truth.

"The fruits of toil to toil belong,
Ever the right against the wrong."

Respectfully, ELMINA D. SLECKER.

FROM SUSAN H. WIXON.

KIND FRIEND: Please accept my thanks for a copy of your recent publication, "Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns and Recitations."

The work far exceeds my anticipations, embracing as it does almost everything of value and interest to the Liberal that can be comprised under its title. I fully agree with a remark of one of your correspondents that it contains abundant material for all one's mental moods. The only wonder is how you could get together so much matter in such pretty style and binding at so low a price. No Liberal can afford to be without a copy, for it amply supplies just what every one must feel has long been needed.

Yours sincerely, SUSAN H. WIXON.

FROM W. S. BELL.
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

MR. EDITOR: I have looked over the pages of your last book and am much pleased with it. The need of such a work to assist those who lead in the services, especially of funerals and marriages, has been deeply felt by Liberals in the past. Now we can get along on all occasions, from baptism to burial, without a single heavenly groan from the priests. And since we are now free from them, and they no longer burden us, we shall cease to have as many groans of our own as we had when we over hell were "hair-hung and breeze-shaken," each moment dreading that the next would find us all afloat on the burning lake.

It often happens in a community where a Liberal dies there is no surviving Liberal in that vicinity who feels capable of conducting the services. As a consequence a priest has to be called in who, though he would not speak to the dead Infidel before his decease, now says he was an "honest man," "had peculiar notions on religious subjects," but that now, "he doubtless is safe in the arms of Jesus."

The resolute, intelligent Freethinker wants no such cheap talk over him when he is dead. He would rather have plain and truthful words spoken; he would prefer less gush and slobber then and more charity and liberality extended towards him here and now while still on this side of Jordan.

If you would avoid having the priest sending you to heaven, where all the murderers (convicted) have been of late emigrating, get a "Truth Seeker Collection" now, but as Pat would say, "May the day never come when you'll have to use it."

The "Collection" contains a Constitution and By-laws for a Freethought Association. This will be a great help where Liberal Leagues or Freethought Associations are being formed. Sometimes it takes several weeks to get up a form of Constitution and By-laws, while with this book in hand a meeting of Liberals can organize at their first session.

The Table of Contents shows the number of topics treated. (1) Forms of Organization, (2) Articles of Association, (3) By-laws, (4) Articles of Agreement, (5) Demands of Liberals, (6) Thirteen Principles, (7) Invocations, (8) Marriage Service, (9) Naming of Infants, (10) Funeral Services, (11) Obituary Notices, (12) Epitaphs, (13) Benedictions, (14) Wills, (15) Sentiments and Toasts, (16) Liberal Hymns, (17) Liberal Hymns—Spiritualistic, (18) Doxologies, (19) Recitations. Five hundred and eighty-five pages, all for seventy-five cents! I trust, friend Bennett, that your liberal effort will be appreciated by the Liberal public in a liberal manner. (C. O. D., which, being interpreted in ordinary English, means "Come Ommmediately Down.") W. S. BELL.

FROM JENNIE B. BROWN.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: I have carefully read the book of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations, and take pleasure in saying that while many of the original pieces are of remarkably good quality, and all of them worthy a place in the collection, you have also done yourself credit in making miscellaneous selections from literature already in print.

The tone and general spirit of the matter you have thus collected and arranged cannot fail to enthuse all true Liberals with wholesome sentiments and aspirations, and while I most cordially recommend your book to the public, I will, in justice to myself, say that the carelessness of your printer has associated with my name one or two little mistakes which it may not be improper here to mention.

The music to which I fitted the original hymn, "Death," should have borne the name of "Ware" instead of "Zephyr;" and that above the Liberal Hymn should have received its proper appellation of "America" instead of being set down to my credit. The words I have dedicated to Truth are suited to the tune "Winchester," which is printed above them.

Yours truly,
JENNIE BUTLER BROWN.

[We regret the mistakes named, and will correct them in our next edition, which we hope soon to be compelled to bring out.—ED. T. S.]

STILL ONE MORE.

LAWRENCE, MASS., June 16, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I would assure you of a gratitude I feel unable to express for having placed in my possession so cheap, complete and comprehensive a work as your "Collection." I believe I was one who suggested the demand for such a book a long time ago. It is certainly something that has been long needed. Its chiefest value to many will be that it provides suitable services for the burial of friends without the employment of a pious preacher. I have been somewhat troubled lest at last some white-craved hypocrite would have the privilege of spilling his gospel slops over my lifeless body.

You remember that before you announced an intention of publishing such a work, I preferred a request to you that your address at the funeral of M. Stein might be delivered at my burial, if I died in your lifetime. I now feel relieved from anxiety upon this matter, for I can place copies of this little volume in the hands of friends who can perform appropriate services for those who die first. I would not be surprised if the pious appropriated some of the invocations by putting in "Heavenly Father" and "Great God" here and there. Nor that they plagiarized from the hymns and funeral forms, for they are so superior to anything ever originated among themselves. I was greatly disappointed in the size of the book, as I was looking for one that would correspond with other books of the same price. A 12mo. volume of nearly six hundred pages for seventy-five cents! I conclude by saying that this book gives me better satisfaction than any other piece of property that ever came into my hands. Send me twelve copies, together with the other books I ordered. Yours gratefully,

BENJAMIN GRIFFIN.

SHORT BUT SWEET.

June 24, 1877.

DEAR FRIEND: The "Collection" is received. It is very nice. I think much of it. I thank you ever so much. I enclose a dollar for it. Seventy-five cents is too little for such a book.

MRS. H. BUCKNER.

FROM A YOUNG FRIEND.

30 HIGH ST., LOUIS-
VILLE, KY., June, 1877.

DEAR UNCLE BENNETT: I feel that I am ready to sing, get married or die without the aid of a preacher, and you cannot imagine how free and independent I feel. The "Truth Seeker Collection" is just what is needed all over the country by all who are truly liberal. I am perfectly delighted with it, and it was just splendid in you to send me a copy. I shall never part with it; it shall be my Bible and hymn-book combined. It lacks but one thing, and that is, your name, written by your own hand, on the fly-leaf.

I cannot imagine how you can get up a book of its size and finish for so small a sum of money; it is worth ever so much more, and as for my copy, I consider it priceless. There are some beautiful selections, as well as original pieces within its pages. Altogether it is (to use my most expressive word) just splendid. Please accept my "grateful thanks."

WINIFRED V. ALLEN.

Hymeneal.

Our young friend, Morgan R. Nichols, of Etna, Minn., recognizing the great natural fact that it is not good for an Infidel to be alone, has, with due malice aforethought, gone and committed matrimony. His particeps criminis was Clara L., daughter of George Parks, a thorough believer in THE TRUTH SEEKER. A Justice of the Peace had a hand in the affair simply because Morgan neglected to send for the "Collection" a few days earlier. However, it will come in play when the time for "Naming of Infants" comes round. Health and happiness, peace and paths of pleasantness be theirs, and may their household be one wherein angels may love to come and sit and sing.

B. F. Underwood's Appointments.

MR. EDITOR: July 15th I speak at Kansas City, Mo. From July 16th to 22d, I will be in debate with the Rev. M. D. Todd at Pleasant Hill, Mo. July 23rd and 29th I lecture at Lincoln, Neb. Friends in other places that wish lectures by me on my way West, or when I return, should write me immediately. Respectfully,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Thorndike, Mass., June 12, 1877.

A Card.

I wish to inform the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Freethinkers of Western New York, Ontario, Canada, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois that I am expecting to go Westward soon after the Fourth of July, and am now ready to make arrangements for lectures on my way thither and back.

W. S. BELL.

New Bedford, Mass.

Jamieson Coming East.

W. F. Jamieson is to commence a debate with a representative of Christianity in Linesville Station, Pa., on the 10th of July.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

As it is expected that there will be a large gathering of Freethinkers at the three days' grove-meeting, August 17th, 18th, and 19th, at Wolcott, N. Y., and consequently much expense attending the meeting, it is suggested that every Liberal who feels so disposed will send a small contribution to Mr. J. M. Cassad, of Wolcott, N. Y., to assist in defraying the expenses of that gathering. Friends of Freethought of Central and Western New York, let us unite and make this meeting a grand success. Give your money and your presence. The editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER has given us encouragement that he will try and be with us on that occasion.

H. L. GREEN,

Friendly Correspondence.

A GOOD FRIEND, at Ottumwa, Iowa, writes: Your favor of the 20th reached me in due time, and should have been responded to earlier, but other engagements prevented. I did not even acknowledge its receipt in my last postal. Please excuse my neglect and the smallness of the postal cards. The fact of your not having responded to my letters heretofore needed no apology. I have always understood your situation and hardly expected any reply for want of time on your part to devote to the amusement of friendly correspondence. After totally destroying the credibility of the omniscient Jehovah in one of the most terribly severe and searching cross-examinations that ever a witness was submitted to, and after routing, demoralizing and vigorously contending with one of the ablest of the said Jehovah's paid attorneys, and publishing three or four good books and thousands of most excellent tracts, attending to an extensive business correspondence, besides editing the best and liveliest weekly paper in America, it is not difficult for me to understand that you haven't much time for friendly letters after writing to Jesus H., and spending an hour occasionally with the devil. THE TRUTH SEEKER grows more and more in favor each week, and every one who reads it pronounces it the pluckiest and most sensibly edited paper he ever read. Its splendid mission is being accomplished in this community in the most gratifying manner. I assure you it has many more readers than subscribers. This may not be quite so gratifying to you, but there is a reasonable excuse for it. The want for bread is more keenly felt than the want for literature. Excepting this, there is no reason why you should not have one hundred subscribers here. One of its results most gratifying to me is the fact that it is materializing the Spiritualists and persuading them from the folly of dark-lantern circles, table-tipping, etc. Your discussion with Mr. Humphrey is eliciting a great deal of attention here, and it is conceded on all sides that you have jammed him up terribly.

D. JENKINS, Hannibal, Mo., writes: The evidence accumulates in favor of the theory of total depravity—of ministers, at least. I send you a copy of a Hannibal paper containing a notice of the Rev. J. Foster of this place. Two of his predecessors, the Messrs. Savage—one of whom is our Liberal preacher of Boston—were not sufficiently orthodox for this place, and Mr. Foster was procured. Mr. Foster can preach orthodox truth, unadulterated, and, as the women-saints did say, "Was such a good man." It now seems that his pious reverence has been guilty of fraud, forgery, lying, licentiousness, embezzlement and bigamy. One Eastern correspondent, in relating his exploits there, says he left a deserted wife and a young Foster after financially ruining both her and her parents, and adds that when Foster reaches his home in the infernal regions the Devil will abdicate in his favor, as Hell will have no more use for a Devil. With my acquaintance with his reverence—as a preacher and in social intercourse—I was unable to discover either the ability or astonishing fascination with which he has been credited. It was probably discernable—like other godly mysteries—only with the eye of faith. These "lusts of the flesh" are becoming too general. Would it not be well to start a "Moral Reform Society" among the clergy; a Saint Origin Society according to Matt. ix. 12, or at least try to keep them within decent bounds, and protect the lambs from these wolves in sheep's clothing? These woolly wolves are getting too numerous for the people's safety. Such Fosters are being fostered too much, and are too much screened by the bosom (and bosoms) of the Church. Couldn't an anti-intimacy society be formed among the maiden church members to protect them from such insinuating shepherds? Yours inquiringly.

G. WILDFRET, Sandy P. O., Oregon, writes: I have intended to write you a letter for some time, assuring you how much I appreciate THE TRUTH SEEKER, but the pen sets awkward between my fingers after swinging an axe all the week. I would not miss the fearless little sheet and as my term of subscription soon expires I enclose you a dollar while I have it. It is hard to get hold of a dollar out in this wooden country, else I would have the "World's Sages," etc., but I hope for better circumstances to come. I am a new beginner in a new country. I suppose you know what pioneer life is without explaining it to you. We see the hardest times, and money is a great curiosity. This is the reason I can only send you one dollar; but be assured the other one will arrive in due time. There are a good many Liberals here in this vicinity; enough to "hold the fort." We have been assailed by preachers on different occasions, but there was a poor turn-out and they had to abandon the thought of converting Infidels so stubborn as are found here. I am gratified when going through the country to come across so many homes where Liberal books and papers are found on the tables; among them THE TRUTH SEEKER is foremost. People are beginning to appreciate this thinking for themselves; they see that the priest is like a drone that eats all the honey; and I think that they ought to be treated as such. I tell you, friend Bennett, I am down on them since I knew the truth of the matter. I never believed in their hocus-pocus, for I was furnished books as soon as I was able to think, which cleared away the thick fog of superstition which might have arisen in my brain in my young days. I am now one of the Bob Ingersoll stripe, and I often talk to those benighted, be-god-ed, befuddled church members after the same text as does B. G. Ingersoll. I get them down on me, too, as he does. I wish your paper could be printed in the German language, as the majority of the settlers here are Germans, and have not the opportunity to educate themselves enough to understand all the paper contains. No doubt, your readers would double in number throughout the land. In closing I wish you success with your bold and brave little paper. May you, as the helmsman of that gallant craft, guide it safely through the stormy sea of superstition, and spread light for many, many years to come.

Special Notices.

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN,
Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI, inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type, 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven." Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it. 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE WORLD'S Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,
CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING
New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the vast information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MRS. BEVIER, ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed Life and Energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COUNT CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET. 465 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

Radical Constructive Literature.
DISCOURSES AND LECTURES
DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY
OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB
IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.
2. The Old vs. the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.
3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN,
Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway.)
221f. New York.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.
Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
 2. Dangers of Proventions.
 3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
 4. Preparation for Maternity.
 5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
 6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
 7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
 8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
 9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
 10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.
- To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
 2. Best age for Bearing Children.
 3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
 4. Small Families.
 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
 6. Celibacy.
 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain." Godley's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable." Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

CRITICISM ON THE Theological Idea of Deity.

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS.

— BEING —

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - - 4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y. 3

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses... 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d st., New York.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 319 6th Ave., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $6 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greeley, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune, is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 18 Eliot street, Boston. Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, $2 per annum; three months, 50 cents. 6124

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, Editor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postpaid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

E. H. HEYWOOD'S BOOKS, LABOR REFORM, FREE-LOVE, ANTI-TAXATION.

YOURS OR MINE: Explaining the True Basis of Property and the Causes of its Inequitable Distribution. Fortieth Thousand. Price 1 cent.

CUPID'S YOKES: On the Moral and Physiological Aspects of Conjugal Life and Child Production, explaining the Principles and Purposes of the Free Love Movement. Twentieth thousand. Price 15 cents.

HARD CASH: Treats of the Greenback Delusion and demands the Abolition of Usury as the Right of Labor and the Duty of Capital. Twentieth Thousand. Price 15 cents.

UNCIVIL LIBERTY: or, the Social Heism opposed to Woman Suffrage, the Political Usurpation of Men over Women. Eightieth Thousand. Price 15 cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by Co-operative Publishing Co., Princeton, Mass.

THE WORD.

A Monthly Journal of Reform.

E. H. HEYWOOD, EDITOR.

The Word, regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service, favors the abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of Speculative Income, and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth, a power at the expense of useful people. It seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends, and profit, except as they represent work done, and the repudiation of all so-called debts, the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest. Terms, 75 cents annually, in advance. Address THE WORD, Princeton, Mass.

Mrs. E. H. Bennett,

GENUINE ASTROLOGIST,

Delineates character, points out the past events of life and indicates probable future incidents by knowing the date of birth and calculating the influence of the planets ruling at the time of birth and through life. Successfully consulted in matters pertaining to health, matrimony and fortune. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Terms reasonable. Personal interviews $1.00. Replies by mail on one or two points, $1.00; Full nativity for self and family, $2.00. Give your day and hour of birth as nearly as possible. Address

MRS. E. H. BENNETT,

4624

66 West Tenth street, N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.
Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.
Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Mr. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would out to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

For sale wholesale and retail by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'" In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

Gems of Thought.

CALUMNY would soon starve and die of itself if nobody took it and gave it lodging.—Leighton.

THE slander of some people is as great a recommendation as the praise of others.—Fielding.

WHATEVER appears, whatever does not appear, we are beautiful or sinful in ourselves only.—Wall Whitman.

NATURE alone is antique, and the oldest art a mushroom; that idle crag thou sittest on is six thousand years of age.—Carlyle.

CHRISTIANITY is but a synonym for slavery—always of the mind, sometimes of the body—and only in broad infidelity can true liberty be found.—Eugene Macdonald.

You may build your cathedrals until they kiss the heavens, and your altars until they glow like the rainbow with precious stones—if you build them without love they are nothing.—Henry Ward Beecher.

THE mind is the measure of the man—grander is its empire than military fame, vaster its conceptions than the edicts of emperors; the men of all ages bow to the majesty of mental and spiritual greatness.—Anon.

THERE are no such things as trifles in the biography of man. Drops make up the sea. Acorns cover the earth with oaks, and the ocean with navies. Sands make up the bar in the harbor's mouth, on which vessels are wrecked; and the little things in youth accumulate into character in age.—Anon.

PEOPLE's lips salute only doers, lovers, satisfiers, positive knowers; There will shortly be no more priests—I say their work is done; Death is without emergency here, but life is perpetual emergencies.—Wall Whitman.

TO BLAME or praise men on account of the result is almost like praising or blaming ciphers on account of the total. That which ought to happen happens; the blast which ought to blow blows. The eternal serenity does not suffer from these north winds. Above revolutions, truth and justice remain as the sky lies above and beyond tempests.—Victor Hugo.

CUBAN soil is fertilized by the ashes of her ruined villages,—in the vineyards of Spain the grape-vines send their crawling roots through the marrowless bones of tortured heretics, and the red wine of the grapes has the tint of the blood of the sleeping heroes who wait in vain for vengeance. The policy of the Church is written in scarlet on the tombstones of her victims, and on the gloomy granite of the Inquisition was carved her fundamental dogma, "I am the way."—Eugene Macdonald.

IT is much easier to believe as we have been taught from childhood than it is to break away from the cherished idols of our whole lifetime, and strike out by ourselves, almost alone in the, unemployed fields of thought. It is no wonder the timid and the weak hesitate and draw back from the dreaded ordeal. They have never tasted the joys of liberty, the ecstatic bliss of free and untrammelled thought, or the luxury of discovering and reveling in the joys of the new world where truth and reason are the only guides to knowledge and wisdom.—Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.

A YOUNG man once picked up a sovereign lying in the road. Ever afterwards, as he walked along the road, he kept his eyes steadfastly fixed on the ground, in hopes of finding another. And in the course of a long life he did pick up at different times a good amount of gold and silver. But all these days, as he was looking for them, he saw not that heaven was bright above him, and Nature beautiful around. He never once allowed his eyes to look up from the mud and filth in which he sought the treasure; and when he died a rich old man, he only knew this fair earth as a dirty road to pick up money as you walk along.—Thodore Parker.

ALL good governments were formerly administered through the ghosts. The earth was ruled by potentates and other parasites, and nobody had a right to be king unless some of the holy petroleum had been poured upon his head. Mankind had no voice in the matter; to rebel against a king was to rebel against the ghosts. The many lived in huts, that the few might live in palaces; the many dressed in rags, that the few might wear purple and gold; and all this injustice was done in the name of the ghosts. But, mark you! the ghosts lied all this time. The ghosts said the earth was flat, that eclipses were proofs of sin; that to look through telescopes was wicked, and digging down into the earth, to say the least, was a waste of time.—Ingersoll.

ALL good men, and, in fact, all men, are, to a certain extent, saviors. The man who gives a hungry man a dinner saves him in one sense; the woman who stands by her friend in sorrow, and comforts her in affliction, is also a savior. The wagoner who gave the young girl his great coat on a wet night—he too was a savior. Little is said about them; but there are thousands of women who are saving men, children and other women daily and hourly. To call the fanatic of Nazareth the savior of the world is to do injustice to the noblest of mankind. What a grand list is the list of saviors. Moses, Jesus, Confucius, Gautama, Socrates, Plato, Watt, Joan of Arc, Fulton, Arkwright, Herschel, Thomas Paine, Theodore Parker, Fannie Wright, Humboldt, John Brown, Garrison, Phillips and hosts of others. To many of them we owe vastly more than we do to Jesus; and justice has yet to be done them in the more intelligent future.—Wm. Denton.

Odds and Ends.

A HEALING medium.—A cobbler.

A HOME ruler.—The kitchen poker.

COOL, but not always collected.—An ice bill.

NO LADY is bound to bow to a gentleman until he loosens her pull-back.

IF Noah had made a failure in his shipbuilding he would probably have gone to New Jersey, knowing there is a New-ark there.

THE crockery-dealers have had their annual dinner. Wishes were made that the hotels might do a "smashing" business this year.

How can a man with no wings be said to be "winged" in an "affair of honor"? Because, in going out to fight a duel, he makes a goose of himself.

"PA, do storms ever make malt liquors?" "No, child; why do you ask?" "Because I heard malt tell Jane to bring in the clothes, for a storm was brewing."

A MAN who jumped overboard recently to save his wife from drowning, has explained to his friends. He said she had a good deal of jewelry on her person, and gold was high.

A WITNESS in a Catskill law office describes the poverty of a field of corn as follows: "The crop was so stunted and short that the toads could sit on their haunches and pick bugs off the tassels."

AT a colored funeral at Mt. Carmel, Tenn., last week, the officiating clergyman remarked fervently: "O, Lord, wade dy bloody garments ober dis misfortunate sistah, and save her soul."

IF the saying were true, how easily one could earn his living now by the "sweat of his brow." He would only have to stand in the sun for a few minutes and he would be comparatively wealthy.

AN Indiana girl at Vassar College writes to her parents: "This is the most stylish hair-pin of a boarding-school I ever tumbled to. I can eat four times a day if I want, and get a fair whack at the hash every time."

"POSTAL-CARD proposals," read Miss Pert indignantly, from the Washington news. "If a man has not got stamps enough for a letter he has not got stamps enough to get married. 'No cards' for me, if you please."

A CHICAGO boy of ten says that when his parents get into a fight, and his mother calls for a flat-iron and his father yells for the stove-handle, he is placed in a most embarrassing position, as he is sure to get licked, no matter which he minds.

IT is told for a fact that a little flaxen-haired boy of five years, who had passed the afternoon at an art museum, looking up in his mother's face, said: "If the mammas, when they die, turn into mummies, do all the papas turn into puppies?"

A SCOTTISH blacksmith being asked what was the meaning of metaphysics, replied, "When the party who listens disna ken what the party who speaks means, and when the party who speaks disna ken what he means himself—that's metaphysics."

"SMITH, seems to me you're sick pretty often nowadays. How is it?" Smith: "Cos I belong to five-cents-a-week medical dispensary. It's cheaper, and a man can afford to be sick. Couldn't when it cost ten dollars per visit. You bet I keep the hired doctor in our ward trotting."

"My boy," said a solemn-visaged evangelist to a lad who had just emerged from a hair-pulling match with another boy, "do you expect to rove hereafter in a land of pure delight?" "No," said the lad, "I've bursted another button off'n my trousers, and I expect to get licked for it."

SMITH and Brown, running opposite ways around a corner, struck each other.

"Oh dear! how you did make my head ring!" said Smith.

"That's a sign it's hollow," said Brown.

"But didn't yours ring?"

"No."

"That's a sign it's cracked," replied his friend.

HE AND SHE.—A NOVELETTE WITH NOTHING IN IT.

He was barely two-and-twenty.

She was only seventeen;

He of budding hopes had plenty.

She was graceful as a queen.

He had ordinary features.

An unusual affair.

She, the daintiest of creatures.

Was possessed of golden hair.

He beheld her and was captured;

She admired his manly style;

He professed himself enraptured

In a very little while.

She responded to him shyly.

Love she hardly knew as yet.

For Don Cupid's very wily

In the way he spreads his net!

He full often went to woo her.

Several times within a week.

And would whisper gently to her

Those soft nothings lovers speak.

She would hearken to him gladly

Just as maidens always do;

He declared he loved her madly

Which was very likely true.

He along the lane was straying.

An occurrence undesigned;

She was there engaged in maying.

Quite promiscuously, mind!

While Apollo, in his splendor.

Tinted every golden tress.

He exclaimed in accents tender.

"Be my bride!" and she said, "Yes."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	10
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	5
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	8
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	1
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	10
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	5
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	5
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	5
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers. W. S. Bell.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	5
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic B. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " and Ex. of Prop. Paper 50; cl.	50
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	72
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Crayon.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Digests.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
Radical Rhymes.	1 50
Who are Christians, Deluge, Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism—True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
Safest Creed.	1 50
Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Grayes' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	50
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts.	3 40
Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
People's All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 25
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 30 & 50	50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
Oris. Paper, 50; cloth	25
Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	25
Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
paper.	1 00
Political Works, cloth.	1 50
Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, & Parturition without Pain.	4 50
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.	1 00
3-00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
Great Works Complete, Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Stenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology, Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels and Thinkers.	4 50
Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	1 00
75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	30
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	75
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 27. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, July 7, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Book Publishing Concern of the Methodist Church South is in a bad way for the want of money. It needs present help to the amount of about $50,000 to carry it through.

CHINESE women set a very high value on the masculine gender, and their evening prayer to Buddha is to transform them in their next existence into men. They believe in metempsychosis.

THE Churchman objects to the introduction into church services of canary birds, gold-fish, tableaux, and floral displays, and wonders what children will come to if treated to as many of these things as they now are on their festive occasions.

ONE of the attendants in the British Museum was recently frightened into convulsions because he thought an Egyptian mummy, four thousand years old, spoke to him. It is not likely the mummy did anything more than to just wink his ear.

FIFTY Jewish houses in Cincinnati, representing an aggregate of over $10,000,000 of capital, have published a card in the Cincinnati papers pledging themselves to entertain no business relations whatever with the firm of A. T. Stewart & Co. Among them are several heavy clothing houses.

DURING Theodore Tilton's late lecturing tour from Sept. 14, 1876, to June 18, 1877, he traveled 26,000 miles, visiting every State in the Union but three. He left his autograph on the hotel registers at the Mammoth Cave, the Geysers, Yosemite Valley, and many other points not often included in a lecture tour.

THE Jubilee gifts received by the Pope foot up $1,342,000. It is consoling to know that God's Vicegerent has enough of the wealth of this world to carry him handsomely to the river that separates him from heaven. He has the comfortable sum of about $85,000,000 in the Bank of Italy. Popping is about the best business that is now carried on. The Bridgets and the Mickles are very generous.

THE Sun, in a recent editorial upon the utility of the Astor and Stewart memorials—the first being an altar-screen in Trinity church and the latter a Cathedral at Garden City—closes as follows: "But though we have so many churches, so imposing in size, and so satisfactory as specimens of architecture, we yet see infidelity advancing with rapid strides, and skepticism getting hold of many of our brightest young minds."

ST. CLEMENT'S Episcopal Church, Rochester, N. Y., was so badly in debt that in addition to losing its house of worship by Sheriff's sale under foreclosure, its personal property had also to be sold. The unusual announcement was made that all the personal property of the church would be auctioned off under an execution obtained by a creditor. The altar and all its belongings, the communion vessels and rectory carpets, were thus disposed of.

AN immense camp-meeting of colored folks at Duffey's Grove, near Baltimore, has just closed with a reported result of several hundred conversions. Some of our colored brethren are so full of bouncing enthusiasm when they go to camp-meeting that they appear to be converted when the conversion does not strike in more than skin deep. Many of the converts speedily become backsliders, and are subjects for conversion again when the next camp-meeting comes round.

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN ACCUSED OF HERESY.—Rev. S. Miller Hageman, pastor of the Union Tabernacle, Brooklyn, E. D., has given offense to his congregation by entertaining heretical views, which are said to be similar to those held by his uncle, Rev. John Miller, who was recently tried at Princeton, N. J. The nephew will probably have the same hard road to travel. Clergymen, like laymen, must not presume to entertain views of their own. They must go according to copy.

BOB INGERSOLL IN A HOT PLACE.—Col. Ingersoll and family, in company with Superintendent Curtis and M. G. Gillette went through the Ophir mines recently. When Ingersoll saw the hole he was to go down he weakened somewhat, but his plucky wife and daughter braced him up, and the party got the miner's rig on and dropped into the lower levels. In the west drift of the 1,600 feet level they struck a temperature of about 140 degrees, and when Bob came out of the drift he remarked: "If there's any place hotter than this, I'm damned if I don't join some church."—Virginia City Chronicle.

WE sometimes hear ministers preach about "the battlements of heaven," although the Scriptures do not expressly declare that there are any such battlements. But good Sister Van Cott goes further in the battlement line. The other evening she said: "I want some day to stand on the battlements of hell and shake my glorified white robes at old Satan." Think for a moment how the Monarch of the nether regions must feel when the valorous widow stands upon the battlements aforesaid and shakes her petticoats at him. We should advise him to surrender at once.

THE editor of the Baptist Herald means business when he baptizes people, and is not disposed to waste time on the exercises. He says that as a partial result of the series of meetings just closed, he immersed forty-nine persons in nine and a quarter minutes on a recent Sunday morning. This allowed eleven and one-third seconds for each baptism. A Catholic missionary among the Indians about three centuries ago baptized nearly a whole tribe by sprinkling them from the nozzle of a vessel like a watering-pot. He had climbed a tree for the purpose, and the Indians passed under him for baptism. One of our steam fire engines would make a splendid baptismal auxiliary!

THE editor of the Methodist organ which is published in Syracuse is instructed to abridge all obituary notices to fifty lines. This was made necessary by the flood of lengthy notices of deceased subscribers, which threatened to crowd out all other matter. Fifty lines is a long obituary, even for an old and important subscriber. Why not adopt the method so successfully practised by Philadelphia's greatest elegiac bard in the columns of the Ledger, and condense the virtues of the deceased into four, six or eight lines of flowing verse? Such verses might read thus:

O, grief's beyond description!
Our loved subscriber's gone:
He paid his cash subscription,
Then left us all forlorn.
So we in woful sorrow
These fearful lines inscribe;
But hope that by to-morrow
Some others will subscribe.

THE Macdonnell case disturbs the General Assembly of the Canada Presbyterian Church, now in session at Halifax. Mr. Macdonnell is a popular young preacher of Toronto, and the trouble is that his belief in everlasting damnation is not strong enough to satisfy the Presbyterian fathers. Last year he said he was in an undecided frame of mind on the subject, and was seeking light. By vote of the Assembly he was allowed a year to find the light he sought. He now comes before the Assembly in as dark a state of mind as before, and the brethren are in a quandary as to what to do with him. His views being as yet undefined, his only answer to questions is that he holds no views contrary to the Westminster confession of faith. On such a negative statement as this it will be next to impossible to convict him of heresy. He has written no magazine articles as Blauvelt did. A large number of the members of the Assembly are with Mr. Macdonnell, and intend to stand by him all the way through.

THE trial of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant, in London, for selling Dr. Knowlton's "Fruits of Philosophy," termed an obscene publication, has terminated by their being sentenced to six months' imprisonment and each to pay a fine of £200, or about $1,000. The sentence seems a singular one, in view of the verdict that the selling was not done with bad intent. The judge made the sentence heavier because they had sold the book after the rendition of the verdict. That looks as though they were punished for an offense committed subsequent to their trial. The question arises, Has a judge a right to sentence a party for an offense not committed before their time of trial? Justice would say not. England evidently needs more of the liberalizing influence in her courts of justice. The imposition of this sentence reminds us of the imprisonment of Richard Carlile, Robert Taylor, Geo. J. Holyoake, and others. Bradlaugh and Besant have obtained a stay of proceedings until a writ of error can be presented and argued. We hope they may succeed in obtaining a better quality of justice. The little work was published in this country nearly forty years ago, and for a long time has been out of print. No copies can be obtained short of London. Owen's "Moral Physiology" is very similar in character.

A TURKISH SPIRITUALIST.—Teofik Pasha, the Turkish General who is now in this country superintending the manufacture of arms for the Turkish Government, writes to the Provincer Journal to say that he has seen spiritual manifestations in which Mr. Charles H. Foster was the medium, and that in the course of his observations the following facts occurred: "As is well known, my native language is Turkish or Osmanli, the alphabet of which is largely borrowed from the Arabic. I am an utter stranger to Mr. Foster, never having seen or even heard of him till this morning, and I know he can not have known me or about my antecedents. In my own language I proposed to this gentleman certain questions, with names on slips of paper, which were carefully rolled up so as not to be seen or read by him, even were he able to read Turkish, and in an incredibly short space of time I had not only answers to my questions, but these were written in Turkish! And facts were given me, and revelations made, which I am free to confess completely changed my opinion on this subject. The Turkish characters are exceedingly strange to Western ideas and forms of thought; still with a slight discrepancy, no more than would be anticipated from a person who, for the first time, attempts to form them. I readily read what was communicated. Mr. Foster observed that with a little practice he was confident he could readily write all that was required in my language. I own that I was completely surprised, both at the personal information conveyed and the manner in which it was given me, viz., in my native language."

THE following sensible remarks we clip from the Evening Telegram: President Porter, of Yale College, has been preaching his baccalaureate sermon in New Haven. He was respectfully listened to, of course, by an intelligent and respectable assemblage. During his discourse he made one remarkable point—namely, that the young men whom he addressed—and, by deduction, everybody else—ought to believe in the doctrines of religion, by which he meant the popular theology, by mere force of will, and without regard to convictions of reason. How disgusting such an exhortation as this to every truly sensible man! Without presuming to discuss here such an important question as the authenticity of the Scriptures, we might say that, though millions profess to believe in the Bible who have never for a moment investigated the claims it has on belief, yet the very weakest thing that can be said in its behalf is that it is to be accepted without our reason having anything to do with the matter. You might as well tell a man to believe in Brahminism or Mohammedanism by a mere effort of the will as to ask him to apply that process to the Scriptures. Every man ought to have a reason for his belief; and to declare that he believes as he does because he has willed to do so is simply to have no reason at all. Our young men who are about to start in life must have more manly arguments than these presented to them. The fault with professors, whose knowledge of life is confined to the four walls of a study and the musty books accumulated there, is that they are too apt to look upon students merely as children whose intellects are to be kept perpetually in leading strings. Young men ought to be taught to think, and not to cower at any conclusion to which reason, under the instigation of Freethought, leads them. It is only in this way that individual and national minds grow. President Porter's plan keeps the minds of our young men in a state of infancy. Intellectual cowardice and supineness set in, and the race of striplings who should be growing up to a strong mental manhood have servile brains bowed beneath the tyrannous hands of dogma. It is not thus that a youth is prepared for the battle of life. A college should be the nursery of brave thought. Yale College never can be so while its president advises such a policy as that herein described.

Events of the Week.

BISHOP MAURICE DE PALAIS, of Vincennes, Ind., died very suddenly from a stroke of apoplexy.

A GANG of thieves—eight men and a woman—was arrested by the police on Stanton street, in this city.

THIRTY-FOUR young ladies graduated at the Jersey City Normal School commencement on Saturday last.

DANIEL O'LEARY began early Monday morning a great feat of walking. He expects to make 520 miles in six days.

By the falling of a bridge over the Montmorency in Quebec, a Mrs. Falkenburg was killed and her companion injured.

ONE hundred and one thousand persons bathed in the public baths in this city last week, eleven thousand of whom were women.

LIGHTNING struck the Liberty Oil Works at Lawrenceville, Penn., burned 2,000 empty barrels and 3,000 barrels of oil. Loss, $30,000.

A SEVERE frost last week visited parts of Michigan, by which corn, potatoes, beans, tomatoes, cucumbers and squashes were badly bitten.

A CATHOLIC church at Laconia, N. H., was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. Loss, $6,000. Was it accidental, or done on purpose?

ONE hundred and sixty Custom-House employees were discharged on Saturday last. No funds appropriated to pay with was the reason given.

THE Harvards beat the Yale crew in an exciting boat-race on the Connecticut at Springfield, Mass. The Harvards also gained a victory over the Yales at base-ball, 5 to 2.

A TERRIBLE wind-storm passed over and near Coalesville, Pa., on Sunday last. Twenty houses blown down, and the families rendered homeless. One man killed and several persons injured.

WE have been having very fair Summer weather in this locality. In parts of the West the rain has been altogether too plentiful. Some of the flat parts of Illinois have been badly drowned out.

MORE clergymen sailed for Europe last Saturday, Rev. Fred Bell among the number. It will soon be so a man will not be able to act as pastor of a church unless he can go to Europe every four or five years.

A FARM-HOUSE near Stirlingville, Jefferson county, N. Y., was set on fire by a tramp who was refused admission. Two small boys barely made their escape, and a girl eight years of age was burned to death.

SOME seventy-five mail vans, for transporting the mail matter of this city, paraded our streets on Saturday last. They are gotten up in beautiful style, and are so secured that there seems to be no possibility of the mail being tampered with in transit.

FISH have been extensively killed in the streams of Rensselaer and adjoining counties in this state with the poison designed for potato bugs. The quantity of Paris green used for bugs has been very heavy, and the price has nearly doubled.

THE total amount of silver coin issued up to the first of the month is $33,121,587, of which $11,981,525 was issued on account of currency obligations, and $21,140,061 in the redemption of fractional currency. It looks more and more as though silver will be re-monetized when Congress meets. The measure is gaining ground rapidly, especially in the West. It is a step in the right direction.

THE war between the Turks and Russians is making some progress. 60,000 Russians crossed the Danube in three places with trifling opposition. Warm fighting has taken place since. The town of Nicopolis has been entirely destroyed. The Turks are making heroic resistance to the Russian advance. The cannonading is represented as being fearful and destructive. It cannot be denied that the Turks are showing good fighting qualities. In Asia Minor the Russian advance has been slow and the Turks have had time to improve their condition there. Heavy engagements are daily expected on the Danube and in Asia Minor.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

The Indian loves tobacco, and he thinks the Great Spirit does also. The choicest bundle of leaves is placed on his altar. The priest hates reason and knowledge; he thinks his God must hate them too, and demands the civilized man to lay his reason on the altar of his conjuration. No; Fetishism has not passed so long as Christian churches in their most sacred communion imitate the cannibal in his worship. He sacrifices the captive seized in war, and afterwards sits down to a horrid repast with his comrades. They meet, and in "lovefeast" break and eat the body and drink the blood of a crucified God!

"Oh!" you say, "it is only as a spiritual type." Do you forget that the great Church of Christianity holds unflinchingly that the words of a priest convert the bread and wine into real flesh and blood?

With the addition of hate, superstition becomes fanaticism. Superstition and bigotry go mad. Becoming firmly persuaded that its dogmas are right, and all others wrong, it wages an unconditional war of annihilation. Religion propagates itself by the sword. Mohammedanism has been long cited as its type, but it has drawn the sword no more than Christianity.

Monotheism by its exclusiveness instills this venom into the veins of its believers. Polytheism, although occasionally spasmodically persecuting, knew nothing of this mode of proselytism. Yet this exclusiveness or persecution is not peculiar to Monotheism, only more persistent. The Egyptians were as exclusive as the Jews. It was pollution for them to drink from the same cup with one of another faith. So jealous were they of their gods, that to kill an ibis or a cat was a capital offense, and sufficient to drive a whole city to frenzy. Even the Greeks manifested this spirit inherent in religion. Their laws against Atheism were severe. Many of their philosophers were exiled, and one at least answered with his life. Even the laws written by the philosophers for their imaginary republics were intolerant. They in no instance recognized religious liberty. If the Christian system is right and true, bigotry is blessed; fanaticism, its intensest form, most praiseworthy; and persecution, proceeding to its direst extent, a blessing to the sufferers. For if believing as the Church believes is to save us from the everlasting tortures of hell-fire, does not the priestly inquisitor, who tears and bruises our flesh until our hardness of heart be overcome, and we follow his dictates, confer a favor by bestowing on us the everlasting bliss of heaven? Goodness and benevolence of heart wedded to ignorance has thus been corrupted, and it has been paradoxically but truly said, the better the ignorant man the more cruel he is as a persecutor.

Christianity is said to be a religion of love, teaching the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and thereby changing his moral character. The real influence it has exerted may be read in history. Persecuted at first, it grew strong, and turning, it fleshed its fangs in its opponent. Read of the millions of martyrs bound to racks, burned at the stake, torn by red-hot hooks and pincers, starved, lacerated, buried in thick walls of masonry, suffering living deaths in fetid dungeons. Read the narratives of religious wars—most terrible of wars—of massacres, of autos-da-fé. Read of crusades sacrificing nations of warriors for the childish possession of a vacant sepulchre. Worse than all, view a great and gigantic power, having the control of the mental atmosphere of the world, stifling every new thought, every attempt at advancement; claiming science and philosophy as tributaries, and as freely dictating in their realms, as freely employing the thumbscrew and dungeon on their votaries, as on heretics to its own incomprehensible vagaries.

Christianity has assisted human advancement in the same manner that a brake assists the progress of a locomotive. Its fanaticism forms a page of history unequalled in demonic cruelty—in foul and malignant venom—in that of any other faith. Professing universal love and peace, it has gone forth like one of the dreadful genii called into being by Arabian fancy—the Bible in one hand, a dripping sword and chains in the other, while from its black lips it has hoarsely shouted, "Believe or be damned!" Men ran wild at the approach of the goblin. Flagellants scattered themselves in armies over Europe; anchorites perched themselves on towers; hermits sought caves and mountains by thousands; the whole world would turn monk or nun.

It was high carnival. The day was darkened by the smoke of charring human flesh—the night illuminated with the blazing fagot. The plains of Europe were continually strewn with the wreck of armies bearing aloft the cross—emblem of the only true religion—engaged in exterminating warfare over unintelligible dogmas.

Deep in dungeons, far from the blushing light of day, the pious inquisitor plied his dreadful trade, and holy priests and worshipful saints stood by and smiled when the tightening screws made the heretic writhe, or a moan to fall from his ashen lips. What were these holy men doing? They were at the noblest of all possible employment—they were saving souls! They were compelling rebellious and ever simple human nature to walk in the straight and narrow way prescribed in the Bible and their creed. Alas! too well they plied their holy arts. The groans that ascend from the fields of battle are silenced by the cries from the dungeon, scaffold and gibbet, the never-ending wail of despair from the widow and orphan, where the minions of the Spectre have busily worked.

With this black record of crimes; with hands red with the blood of earth's bravest sons; with garments purple with clotted gore; and with a history showing that she has fought to the death every advance of the race, cursed every new discovery in science, attempted to suppress every invention whereby the condition of mankind has been ameliorated; always siding with tyranny, aristocracy, and slavery—Christianity has the effrontery to raise its voice and claim itself the cause of civilization! The method it has pursued in advancing knowledge is unique. It was by substituting a blind faith in the place of reason, creeds and dogmas in the place of knowledge, miracle in the place of law. It was by silencing Kepler, burning Giordano Bruno, imprisoning Galileo, opposing its flat earth to the schemes of Columbus, excommunicating the sciences, throwing them out of the schools it carefully controlled. Outside of the Church, despite its influence, with social ostracism and death suspended over them, daring students explored the secrets of Nature; in seclusion others pursued philosophy; others in the arena of politics studied national polity. By the concentration of all, the nations were forced onward, dragging this dead weight of creeds and dogmas which now claim to be the cause of the civilization attained. As well might it be claimed for a millstone suspended to the neck of a strong swimmer, because he sustained himself despite its weight, that it sustained him and preserved his life!

At present, the fangs which projected from those gory lips cannot flesh themselves in the heterodox thinker. The talons are dulled and cannot lacerate, but the will remains as strong as ever. This hag, ignorant of Nature, of human nature, and of God—hating opposing beliefs, and trembling with brute fear—is subject to recurrent fits of madness. Within her influence the best emotions of mankind gather mould from the dank and blasting atmosphere. Outside of it, learning has thriven, morality waxed strong; and Governments, upheld by the potent strength of Justice bestowed by knowledge, chain Superstition and Fanaticism, and compel them to respect human rights.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. VII.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I do not call Judge Story especially a "pettifogger," but mean all who try to make out that our National Constitution is a Christian institution, when it contains not a word about God, Jesus Christ, or the Bible. So far as the coat fits Judge Story he is entitled to wear it.

You mentioned Lincoln again. While his name is still on the tapis allow me to refer to the fact that Robert Dale Owen, the Infidel, who has just died, full of years and honor, had not a little influence in causing Mr. Lincoln to issue his ever-memorable Emancipation Proclamation. His letter to Lincoln upon the subject, urging with powerful arguments the emancipation of the slaves of the southern rebels, was written upon the day of the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862. Mr. Lincoln wrote the Proclamation on the 20th and 21st, read it to the Cabinet and signed it on the 22d, and it was issued on the 23d. This letter by Mr. Owen has just been published for the first time in our city papers. That it had great influence upon Mr. Lincoln's mind in deciding upon the course to pursue may be learned from this extract of a letter from Salmon P. Chase—who was Secretary of the Treasury under Lincoln, and who handed Mr. Owen's letter to the President—to Mr. Owen: "It will be a satisfaction to you to know that your letter to the President had more influence on him than any other document which reached him upon the subject—I think I might say more than all others put together. I speak of that which I know, from personal conference with him." I mention this matter because it has recently for the first time been brought to the notice of the public, and to show that one of the oldest Infidels in the country had far more influence in the issuing of the Proclamation of Emancipation than all that Christians said upon the subject, including the Christian McClellan, who, in his Harrison Landing letter to Lincoln, strongly urged him to take no steps towards disturbing the institution of Slavery. So, here is another proof that the credit of the emancipation of four millions of slaves, which you claimed for Christianity, really belongs to Infidelity.

I was in hopes that inasmuch as you hold the Bible to be a book of science, and your faith in it is so strong, you would give a scientific explanation of how the earth could exist, morning and evening take place, vegetation of all kinds grow and flourish, perfecting fruit and seeds, before the sun had been brought into existence and before there had been a drop of rain upon the earth. I hoped, too, you would explain scientifically how the water was produced which covered the earth 29,000 feet in depth, and where it went to afterwards; for many thousands have wondered in their simple hearts how God could make so much water and how a little wind which he sent over the face of it could dry it all up, and where it went to when in a state of vapor. I was in hopes you would bring your science to the task of explaining how a man could stop or control any of the heavenly bodies; how the waters of seas and rivers can be divided and made to stand up in perpendicular walls and wait for millions of people and cattle to pass over. I was in hopes, also, you would give a scientific explanation of the hundreds of utter impossibilities with the accounts of which your scientific book is so plentifully filled; but it seems you found it more convenient to skip over them and thousands of years of superstition and error—for which your Bible is directly responsible—and come down to modern times, when science has been able to raise its head and wield some influence in the world.

You speak of my "misrepresentations," and enumerate several of them. I did not intend to use misrepresentation nor falsehood, and, with your permission, will look at my mistakes and see how "gross" they are. What you claim as "error first" is where I said the book of Job is not mentioned in any other part of the Bible. You show that the name of Job is used in three places. Pardon me; I cannot see how that shows that I misrepresented. I said the book was not mentioned, not the name! The name Job is mentioned once in Genesis (and there are not the slightest grounds for supposing it was the man who had the boils); it is mentioned once in Ezekiel, and once in the New Testament. I did not succeed in finding it in the Apocrypha where you directed me. Ezekiel mentions Noah, Job, and Daniel. It cannot be the Daniel who is said to have been thrown into the lions' den, for that Daniel did not live and write until a generation later than Ezekiel, and many learned scholars believe that the book of Daniel was not written till four hundred years later than the time it purports to have been, so we are at a loss to know what Daniel Ezekiel was talking about, and it is the same of Job. It is probable that the three names he used were only myths of whom he knew nothing. The matter of James' using the name of Job, and referring to the story, has no more force than your or my using it. He knew no more about Job or his book than we do. Mark, I did not say the name Job was not used, but meant that the locality, characters, and incidents of his story were not alluded to in any contemporaneous part of the Bible.

You next attempt to show that I was wrong when I merely asked the question if the best Hebrew scholars had not decided that the book of Job was not written by a Hebrew. I made no assertion, but asked a question. But I was not mistaken. Ebnazar and Spinoza were learned Jews who so held in relation to that book. The names you give in refutation are of the past two or three centuries, and of men whose opinions were given before philology had been extensively brought to bear as an auxiliary in deciding the origin of ancient writings. If you will consult the modern learned Hebrew scholars, Ewald, Kuenen, Goldziher, and Adler, you will find that they regard the book of Job as a Gentile production, and also as having been written at a much later period than was formerly supposed—as late, at least, as the date of the Jewish captivity. The learned historian and essayist, Froude, maintains the same opinion, as you will find by reading his Essays. Chandler Halstead also entertains the same views. They all found that the personæ of the drama, or poem, were not Hebrew, most of them being Arabic; the names of the constellations mentioned are Greek, while the theological ideas employed were distinctively Egyptian, and were not written till some centuries after the translators supposed it to have been. The conception of the character, Satan, is not Hebrew, and his name is mentioned in only three other places in the Old Testament, which is the part of the Bible I referred to in connection with Job. The writers of the New Testament certainly knew nothing of him, so I did not misrepresent as to Job.

You arraign me next for saying that Paul used the word science but once, and say he used the word which should have been translated science about twenty times. I referred solely to the English version, deeming that sufficient for our purpose. If it was not translated right, so much the worse for the translation; it is no fault of mine. But the Greek word gnōsis does not mean science; it simply means to know and corresponds with our word know or knowledge. It does not reach the dignity of science, of which Paul knew and cared very little. Thus you will see I was not in error here.

You next take me to task for saying the ancient Jews lived in tents and knew very little about houses. To disprove the fact you quote the singing of visionary, dreamy prophets about Summer-houses, Winter-houses, houses of ivory, etc. Summer-houses were doubtless very slight edifices, and probably composed of vines and branches. The Winter-houses may have been of rough stones and earth. "Houses of ivory" probably had a far more ideal than real existence. I must repeat that the remains of houses of hewn stone are not to be found in Palestine. Not a hewn stone, not a monument, not a Hebrew inscription is to be found in the whole country. The Jews were a branch of the Semitic race, and more or less of a mixed character—brothers of the Arabs—and semi-barbarians. These races all lived in tents and knew very little of houses, and there is no proof to the contrary. Until there is something more reliable to depend upon than the inventions of dreamers and singers, I can hardly change my position upon the subject of Israelitish dwellings.

Let me here give a quotation, as not inappropriate, from Albert Barnes, the distinguished theologian: "The Bible came from a land undistinguished for literature—a land not rich in classical associations, a land not distinguished for pushing its discoveries into the regions of science. Chaldea had its observatories, and the dwellers then looked out on the stars and gave their names; Egypt had its temples, where the truths of science, as well as the precepts of religion, were committed to the sacred priesthood; Greece had academic groves, but Judea had neither. To such things the attention of the nation was never turned. We have all their literature, all their science, all their knowledge of art, and all this is in the Bible. Among the ancients they were regarded as a narrow-minded, a bigoted, a superstitious people" (Lectures on Ev. of Christianity, p. 257).

You next arraign me for saying the Hebrews stole from the Egyptians. Are you not catching at small straws? What is the difference morally, or in fact, between stealing, and borrowing without the slightest intention of ever returning? Besides, in Exodus xii. 36, in alluding to this very business, it says the Israelites spoiled the Egyptians. In Webster's Christian Dictionary, spoil is defined to mean to rob, to plunder. So I was not far out of the way. If I had used the harsher word rob, it would have been quite correct.

You next indict me for saying Paul was great for extolling the virtues of faith and blind credulity. You acknowledge the correctness of faith, but say as to blind credulity it is "utterly false." Now I cannot see much difference between faith and credulity, whether blind or not blind. You seem to make a distinction where there is no difference. What is faith unless it is credulity? Webster, in his Chris- tion dictionary, defines it as belief; assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting solely and implicitly on his authority and veracity—in other words, “going it blind.” Paul had a great deal to say about faith. He used the word over one hundred and fifty times. In the Old Testament it is used but once. Paul said, “Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Heb. xi. 1). Now if the things believed in were not seen, was it not a kind of blind credulity? Have not you and all other Christians faith in many things which you never saw, and of which you never had any proof? Do you not believe that Jesus was God? that he was begotten by God or by himself? that he had no natural father? that faith in him is sufficient to save millions of poor souls from the torments of hell? that one is three and three are one? that a son can be as old as his father and equal in all respects? You have no proof of these things; you never saw them. You believe without proof—nothing more or less than blind credulity. I have heard Christians again and again declare the importance of having faith without proof. That is blind faith; nothing less. There are many things in the Christian faith that are firmly believed which have not the slightest proof. I call such faith blind credulity, and I can make nothing else of it. It is the same confidence which a young robin (blind) has in its parent when it opens its mouth and takes whatever is given it. I have often heard that kind of confidence and credulity extolled by Christians. It certainly is a very blind credulity.

You next attempt to show that I misrepresented when I said Solomon was remarkable for his sensuality. You admit the fact but seek to evade its force by saying the Bible condemned him for it. You hardly state the truth. It does not condemn him for sensuality, but for going after other gods. “And the Lord God was angry with Solomon because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel” (1 Kings, xi. 9), but not a word of anger was expressed because he had seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines. It was not asked of him to be any better than was David, his father, and you cannot have forgotten how his sensual love was aroused towards another man's wife, Bathsheba; how he committed adultery with her and then caused her husband to be put to death to cover his guilt. This conduct was all right enough, so he did not turn away from his God. Solomon, in like manner, could have committed adultery and gross sensuality as much as he pleased, if he had not worshiped other gods. Herein consisted his sin. His sensuality, like David's, could have been easily winked at.

Here let me say that you seem to have stepped out of your way to malign Freethinkers and make the untruthful assertion that “the most progressive and advanced Freethinkers justify and defend remarkable sensuality.” The most advanced or the most prominent Freethinkers do nothing of the kind. So far as my acquaintance goes among Freethinkers (and I ought to be as thoroughly acquainted with them as yourself), they live as faithfully and happily in their domestic relations as any class of men. Tyndall, Proctor, Holyoake, Bradlaugh and Watts in England, Owen, Mendum, Seaver, Draper, Abbot, Ingersoll, Underwood, Denton, Tuttle and scores of others, will compare favorably in this respect with the very best of citizens. Even the “Free-lovers,” so called, are not guilty of “remarkable sensuality,” as were David and Solomon. They indulge no more in “free-lust” than other persons. They simply hold that love should be free. Let me ask if you are in favor of forced love? Ought not love always to be free? As you are a member of the American clergy, let me say to you in the most friendly spirit, that you ought to be careful how you make the charge of sensuality against Freethinkers, for however virtuous you may be yourself, your brethren are certainly very vulnerable. If I were to look for acts of sensuality and adultery I know of no more prolific sources than among the clergy of our country. I think I can name some hundreds of cases where adultery has been proved upon them, and I defy you to do anything of the kind among Freethinkers. I do not say that not one among the latter has ever made a mistake in this direction, but I do insist that they are as law-abiding and as moral as other men. For every adulterous Freethinker you point out, I agree to name twenty adulterous clergymen. You do not strengthen your case by such uncalculated insinuations.

You take exceptions to my saying there was nothing among the ancient Jews showing a high order of civilization. It does not seem that I am far out of the way when nothing can be cited to the contrary. Not an ancient painting, not a piece of sculpture, not a work of fine art, no ruins of temples or splendid architecture, nothing of the kind, while in other countries there is much that speaks of ancient grandeur and art. So far as DeWette is concerned, he can hardly be ranked as a Rationalist. Some of his writings tended slightly in that direction, but he gravitated towards the Church, and he was accepted as orthodox.

You close your arraignment by saying you “cannot stop to expose all my misrepresentations.” Indeed! What haste you must be in. If I made misrepresentations I wish them exposed; but with all due respect allow me to say that I think you made out a slim case in exposing my errors. I claim that in every instance where you charge me with misrepresentation I was entirely correct.

You did not satisfy me as to proofs about the intimate knowledge the Hebrew women had of dressmaking, cosmetics, etc. You quote from Isaiah, etc., where they are complained of for being haughty, stretching out their necks, having wanton eyes, mincing steps, and making a tinkling with their feet; about their rings in their ears and their noses; all of which sounds more as though they were semi-savages than highly cultured and intellectual ladies. I must confess myself unconvinced as to their perfect and refined civilization.

You next say “The Bible does not pretend to be a textbook of science.” That is just what I think, and I looked upon it as a mistake in you to set up the claim that it had any affinity or connection with science. There is hardly a book in existence that is more unscientific than the Bible, none more at variance with the experience of mankind and with the laws of the Universe.

It appears to me that you are wide of the truth when you claim a close intimacy between Christianity and science, or that the former has been friendly to the latter. A marked antagonism existed between them for more than sixteen hundred years. Christianity found Southern Europe in the enjoyment of an advanced state of philosophy and science. The labors and scholarship of Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Euclid, Hipparchus, Aristotle, Eratosthenes, Ptolemy, Archimedes, Apollonius, and others, had given to the world a higher degree of philosophy and learning than it had before enjoyed. Astronomy, geology, chemistry, mathematics, mechanics, etc., had been developed and brought to the knowledge of thousands. During the five centuries before the dawn of Christianity science achieved more distinction and position than it had ever before attained. But when that system of religion became a ruling power in the world this was immensely changed.

Christianity was made up of the theology of the Hebrews, combined with the story and teachings of the reputed Jesus, incorporated with the dogmas of Paganism. Neither the accredited founder of the system nor any of the disciples or apostles whom he chose as companions were men of learning. There is no authentic record that Jesus attended school or that he was a scholar. There is no statement that he ever wrote a word or imparted a particle of practical scientific knowledge. All the narratives we have of him represent him as a strolling mendicant who taught his followers no useful pursuits of life, and who stifled all enterprise, thrift, and foresight by enjoining his followers and listeners to take no thought for the morrow—to make no provision for the future. Though he is believed to be the son of Jehovah or to be the great Deity himself—the source of all knowledge and all science—he never during his ministry gave his students one lesson in practical science. He gave no evidence of knowing anything about astronomy, geology, chemistry, mathematics, hydrostatics, mechanics, biology, philology, psychology, or any of the kindred sciences. Had he possessed scientific knowledge, and had he felt disposed to be a practical benefit to the human race, what a splendid opportunity was afforded him for imparting a great fund of information to those who listened to him! But he had not the information to impart.

The Apostles were no better. They were unlettered, ignorant men, and were capable of treating of but little save the excellence of faith in the merits of the blood of a crucified God. They did not present to the people to whom they ministered any new scientific truths, nor did they in the slightest degree advance the knowledge of the world in the practical, useful, vital affairs of life.

The early Fathers of the Church were of the same character. A majority of them were uneducated men. Some became proficient in the lore of the time, but science and learning were the least among their cares. Their object was to establish their system of religion, and to hold up the uncertain state of happiness in a future life as of more consequence than education and prosperity in this. As the Church increased in numbers, and, under the murderous Contantine, became a political power in the world, the philosophy and learning of the previous centuries receded from view and was superseded by sectarian contention, bigotry, superstition, and ignorance, until the priesthood of the Christian Church became themselves the most ignorant of men; not one in twenty could read, or write his own name. So far from aiding the cause of science and learning, it rather did all it could to retard them. The Serapion of Alexandria, which contained four hundred thousand volumes, by far the largest library in the world, was ruthlessly destroyed near the close of the fourth century by the Christian Archbishop Theophilus; and Hypatia, the daughter of Theon the mathematician, a devoted student and teacher of science and learning, and who distinguished herself by her expositions of the doctrines of Plato and Aristotle, as well as by her comments on the writings of Apollonius, was assaulted while on her way to the academy by a mob of Christian monks under St. Cyril, who had succeeded to the episcopacy occupied by his uncle Theophilus, and she was stripped naked in the street, then dragged into the church, and there killed by the club of Peter the Reader. Her corpse was cut in pieces, the flesh scraped from her bones with shells by these Christian fiends, who doubtless felt that they had done great service to their Church and their cause. Prof. Draper thus tersely speaks upon the subject: “So ended Greek philosophy in Alexandria; so came to an untimely close the learning that the Ptolemies had done so much to promote. The ‘Daughter Library,’ that of the Serapion, had been dispersed. The fate of Hypatia was a warning to all who would cultivate profane knowledge. Henceforth there was to be no freedom for human thought. Every one must think as the ecclesiastical authority ordered him—A. D. 414. In Athens itself philosophy awaited its doom. Justinian at length prohibited its teaching and caused all its schools in that city to be closed.”

The history of the triumph of faith over reason, learning, and science is one sickening to read. It is full and explicit, but the limits of this letter will allow me to make only here and there a quotation. “The fourth Council of Carthage forbade the reading of secular books by the bishops. Jerome condemned the use of them except for pious purposes. The physical sciences were unqualifiedly condemned, as their cultivation was considered incompatible with the practice of religious duties. . . . No importance was attached to anything of an intellectual character except the childish and unintelligible controversies which were carried on for centuries” (Underwood). “These disputes diverted studious minds from profane literature, and narrowed down more and more the circle of that knowledge which they were desirous to obtain” (Hallam's Middle Ages, p. 453). Thus says the Christian historian, Guizot: “We saw them (profane literature and pagan philosophy) soon disappear; sacred literature and Christian theology alone remained. We no longer meet with anything but sermons, legends, etc. This decay has generally been attributed to the tyranny of the Church, to the triumph of the principles of authority and faith over the principles of liberty and reason” (Hist. Civilization, vol. iii, p. 30).

“The lives of the saints was the literature of the time. There were men who occupied themselves in collecting them, writing them and recounting them for the edification, no doubt, but more especially the intellectual pleasure of the Christians” (ibid, vol. ii, p. 339). “These lives of the saints filled fifty-three volumes. There were 1443 for the month of April alone. There were more than 25,000 saints contained in the fifty-three volumes” (ibid, vol. ii, p. 350). “The legends were to the Christians of this age (let me be allowed this purely literary comparison), what those long accounts, those brilliant and varied histories, of which the ‘Thousand and One Nights’ gives us a specimen, were to the Orientals” (ibid, p. 350). “Literature, properly so called, held but little place in the Christian world” (ibid, p. 95). “From the fourth to the eighth century there was no longer any profane literature; sacred literature stands alone; priests only study or write; and they only study, they only write upon religious subjects” (ibid, p. 317). “Toward the end of the sixth century there are no longer civil schools; ecclesiastical schools alone subsist” (ibid, p. 318). “The metamorphosis of civil schools into ecclesiastical schools was complete” (ibid, p. 318). “Not only did literature become entirely religious, but it ceased to be literary; there was no longer any literature, properly so called” (ibid, p. 320). “Doubtless nothing remains belonging to this age either of philosophy, poetry, or literature, properly speaking. . . but there was a world of writings; they are sermons, instructions, exhortations, homilies and conferences upon religious matters” (ibid, p. 331).

You must accept Guizot's authority, for he was eminently Christian; but Ingersoll portrayed much the same state of facts when he said, “In the Dark Ages the Church had the world by the throat. Every thought was strangled, every idea lost. Science was actually thrust into the brain of Europe at the point of Moorish bayonets.”

Hallam you will accept as a reliable Christian historian. Although in many instances he seems actuated by a desire to present the side of the Church in as favorable a light as possible, the facts he states are sufficient to forever damn it. I will make a few quotations from his Middle Ages: “A cloud of ignorance overspread the whole face of the Church, hardly broken by a few glimmering lights, who owe almost the whole of their distinction to the surrounding darkness” (p. 460). “In the shadows of this universal ignorance a thousand superstitions, like foul animals of night, were propagated and nourished. France reached her lowest point at the beginning of the eighth century, but England was, at that time, more respectable, and did not fall into complete degradation until the middle of the ninth. There could be nothing more deplorable than the state of Italy during the succeeding century. In almost every council the ignorance of the clergy forms a subject of reproach. It is asserted of one held in 992 that scarcely a single person was to be found, in Rome itself, who knew the first elements of letters. Not one priest of a thousand in Spain about the age of Charlemagne, could address a common letter of salutation to one another” (p. 460). Ingersoll stated the case in reference to the influence the Church had exercised when he said it had “reduced Spain to a guitar, Italy to a hand-organ, and Ireland to exile.”

I will make a quotation or two from Lecky: “Medieval Catholicism discouraged and suppressed in every way secular studies, while it conferred a monopoly of wealth and honor and fame upon distinguished theologians” (History of Morals, vol. ii, p. 222). “Not till the education of Europe passed from the monasteries to the universities; not till Mohammedan science and classical freethought and industrial independence broke the scepter of the Church did the intellectual revival of Europe commence” (ibid, p. 219). “Few men who are not either priests or monks would not have preferred to live in the best days of the Athenian or of the Roman Republics, in the age of Augustus or in the age of the Antonines, rather than in any period that elapsed between the triumph of Christianity and the fourteenth century” (ibid, p. 13).

“The influence of theology having for centuries benumbed and paralyzed the whole intellect of Christian Europe, the revival which forms the starting point of our modern civilization was mainly due to the fact that two spheres of intellect still remained uncontrolled by the scepter of Catholicism. The Pagan literature of antiquity and the Mohammedan schools of science were the chief agencies in resuscitating the dormant energies of Christianity” (ibid, p. 18).

Here is given the true sources of the science which the civilized world enjoys: first, the learning of the ancient Pagan nations, and secondly, the Mohammedans who conserved these sciences and kept them alive while Christendom was sinking and groping in the theological darkness of the Middle Ages—the Church driving the last remains of learning from the people. It is not Christianity that gave science, education and art to the world, and it was only when they saw that the people were determined to advance in intelligence and mental culture that the priests gave any encouragement in this direction. Science and civilization exist in Christendom not by the good offices of Christianity, but in spite of it.

I would like to quote more largely from the same and other authorities, but my letter is already too long and I must hasten along.

You name Copernicus and claim that his scientific discoveries were due to Christianity. To show how unjust your claim is, it is only necessary to state that his discoveries were rejected by the Church. They were declared to be in opposition to the Bible and to revelation; and for a century afterwards his views, though of so much importance and so true, were not accepted by the Christian Church, either Catholic or Protestant. Luther denounced him as an old fool, and said he was trying to upset the whole art of astronomy and in refutation of his views appealed to the teachings of the Bible. This discovery of Copernicus was one of the grandest ever made by man. It ended a fallacious system founded on pretended inspiration from heaven to the effect that the earth is the centre and principal part of the Universe, and created a new and truthful theory that the sun is the centre of the solar system, and that the earth, like the other planets, revolves around it. Christianity, however, cannot be credited with the discovery. She opposed it firmly and persistently, and half a century after the discovery the disciple of Copernicus, Giordano Bruno, was imprisoned in the infernal Inquisition for two years and tortured in the most cruel manner, and was finally burnt at the stake for his devotion to science and truth. This was the way in which Christianity fostered science and the doctrines of Copernicus.

Still later, Galileo had much the same experience to pass through. He embraced the doctrines of Copernicus, and made some additional discoveries in astronomy, but for this the Christian Church pursued him and punished him with the most vindictive cruelty. For holding and teaching that the earth moves round the sun he was, after he had become advanced in life and in feeble health, thrown into the dungeons of the Inquisition and kept for years a prisoner of the Church. The old man was compelled to forswear, on his knees, his honest convictions and to give the lie to the great truth that the earth is a sphere revolves around the sun. Had he not done this his life probably would have been sacrificed. This is another instance of the way in which Christianity fostered science, and now you have the assurance to claim for it the honor of the persecuted man's discoveries and teachings, when at the peril of his life it compelled him to recant the truth of his doctrine.

Vanini was another scientist—another disciple of Copernicus whom the Church persecuted unto death because he dared to entertain views which it did not approve. Oh, what a patron of science was the Christian Church for over sixteen hundred years! It frowned furiously upon every effort in that direction.

I will make one more quotation, and from Professor Huxley: "Extinguished theologians lie about the cradle of every science as the strangled snakes beside that of Hercules; and history records that whenever science and orthodoxy have been fairly opposed, the latter has been forced to retire from the lists, bleeding and crushed if not annihilated: scotched if not slain. But orthodoxy is the Bourbon of the world of thought. It learns not, neither can it forget; and though at present bewildered and afraid to move, it is as willing as ever to insist that the first chapter of Genesis contains the beginning and end of sound science; and to visit with such petty thunderbolts as its half-paralyzed hands can hurl, those who refuse to degrade nature to the level of primitive Judaism" (Lay Sermons, p. 278).

For more than twelve hundred years the Christian Church held the world, or so much of it as was under its control, bound in the chains of darkness and ignorance. While science and learning were being fostered and cherished by the Arabians and other Oriental nations, Christianity held a black pall of superstition and degradation over its entire domain. Draper thus states the fact: "When Europe was hardly more enlightened than Caffraria is now, the Saracens were cultivating and creating science. Their triumphs in philosophy, mathematics, astronomy, chemistry, medicine, proved to be more durable and therefore more important than their military actions had been" (Intellectual development, p. 306). Christian nations were at length glad to receive from the Mohammedan the science and learning which for centuries it had been conserving; and had not this source been accessible it is probable the night of Christian ignorance would still be hanging over Europe to-day. Where the reign of Christianity has been most absolute, the ignorance and degradation of the masses has been the most complete. Italy, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Ireland, and Mexico are cases in point. The Reformation raised an opposition to this rule. A spirit of rebellion or infidelity to the old regime actuated it. To this extent it was beneficial to the world. The more infidelity it exercised, the more beneficial its results. Protestantism is little more than the original system of Christianity with a modicum of infidelity blended with it. This is what the Church practically declared, and it has denounced as heretics and Infidels all who embraced its schismatic teachings and doctrines. This rupture in the rule of the Church doubtless opened the way for an increase of learning among the masses, though it is unfortunate that the new Church held to the same miserable and debasing dogmas which characterize the old. It made little or no improvement in the articles of belief, but that it tended to break to some extent the iron rule of the Romish Church cannot be denied.

For the last two centuries Christianity has shown more favor to science and learning than previously. It has been compelled by the spirit of the age to take this course. The priesthood have often evinced the disposition and ability to yield to the public demand when compelled to do so. They did so in the matter of education, though they used every exertion to make their old theological dogmas the dominant element. They have ever sought to make science subservient to superstition. The wily and designing Jesuits have established schools of learning, and numbers of them have reached degrees of advanced scholarship, but their object has been to promote their own interests and not to elevate and enlighten the masses. To keep the people in subjection has ever been the spirit and purpose of Christianity.

You make a formidable array of names of Christians who were men of education and comparative science, and mention many colleges which have been established under Christian auspices. With a large portion of these men Christianity was a mere incident, not a motive. They are reckoned Christians because they were born and reared in Christian countries. Being so born and reared did not increase their intellectuality or love of learning. The rule will be found to hold good that those who have been most wedded to science, and who were the most proficient in its pursuit, cared the least for the dogmas of the Church. From motives of policy, and to secure personal safety, they yielded a tacit allegiance to its rule—nothing more.

With an air of triumph you ask: "Where are the public museums of art, science, the libraries, and institutes that Infidels have established?" If you had taken a fair view of the field, I think you would hardly propound such a conundrum. Until within the last two centuries Infidels and scientists have been compelled to look out closely for their own personal liberty and their lives, for the minions of the Church were after them like bloodhounds upon the track of an escaping slave! What chance had Copernicus, Galileo, Bruno, Vanini and Servetus to found colleges and museums? Three of them were burned at the stake by the strong arm of the Church, and the others barely escaped. Universities and institutes are founded successfully only under government auspices, or by wealthy corporations. Governments have been in the hands of Christians, and what chance had a few ignored, despised Infidels to found such institutions? A spirit of irony must have actuated you to put such a question. It is almost adding insult to injury. But within the last half century a change has taken place. With the advance of science, and the progress of political and mental liberty, Infidels have grown a little bolder and now dare to speak aloud and say their souls are their own. For the time and means at hand, they have done nobly in the cause of science. With what James Smithson did in Washington, Stephen Girard in Philadelphia, Peter Cooper in this city, James Lick in San Francisco, the London University established fifty years ago independent of Christianity, and where its dogmas are not promulgated, Infidels can now hold up their heads with a degree of pride that Christians cannot honestly feel. You have doubts about the religious status of James Smithson. You need not have when you are aware that the matter of introducing and championing the bill for the establishment of the Smithsonian Institute was placed in the hands of the Infidel Owen, just deceased, who ably engineered it through Congress. Be assured, had there been the slightest grounds for claiming Smithson as a Christian, our cyclopedias and biographical dictionaries would have so stated it very prominently. Neither can I yield the venerable Peter Cooper, who has done more for the people of this city, in an educational point of view, than a thousand ministers have ever done. He is a good man, but he does not believe in the miraculous qualities of the blood of Jesus; he is not one of your kind. He is guilty of the same grave doctrinal crime for which your great leader, John Calvin, caused Michael Servetus to be burned to death by a slow fire. Had Peter Cooper lived at Geneva under Calvin's rule, there never would have been a Cooper Institute established. No! no! you cannot claim Peter Cooper! He has not faith enough for you!

Who are the leading men in the world of thought to-day? Are they the men who believe that the Jewish, personal, anthropomorphic Jehovah made the entire Universe of suns and worlds from nothing, less than six thousand years ago? Or are they the men who have risen above all the childish and puerile creeds of superstition and revelation, which have bound the world for thousands of years? The men who are leading and moulding the thought of the world this hour are skeptics, scientists, Infidels. They are holding up the light of science in view of the masses, and the mists and fogs of superstition are fast disappearing. Preceded by such men as Copernicus, Galileo, Bruno, Spinoza, Goethe, Humboldt, Lyell, and others, Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley, Spencer, Wallace, Helmholtz, Haeckel, Schmidt, Draper, Proctor, and hosts of others, are pressing vigorously on towards the temple of truth, rejecting the errors and follies which the theologies of the past have so persistently fastened upon the people of the world.

Some of the institutions of learning which you claim as Christian can hardly be justly so claimed. Cornell, for instance, has a very diluted article of Christianity. I am credibly informed that every one of the professors are unbelievers in the dogmas of Christianity, and are readers of Radical journals. Cornell has been denounced as an Infidel institution. Harvard is little better. It does not retain enough of the original faith to do very much harm. The great law of evolution is working in the Christian Church as well as elsewhere, and ultimately science and truth must triumph over superstition and error.

Probably the most ridiculous assumption you made in your last letter, is that a belief in Christianity is conducive to the inventive faculty. If you succeed in establishing that Christians are more inventive than other portions of the human race, will it not go far towards proving the system of Christianity itself a mere invention? Is it possible that you honestly maintain the opinion that a man who believes that a person was once begotten by a ghost, that the being so begotten is as old as his father; that the kind author of the Universe could create a burning hell to throw millions upon millions of his creatures into to suffer eternal agony; that to save a limited number from this fate, he caused his only beloved Son to be put to an ignominious death, do you think that believing this enables one to get up a better steam-boat, mowing-machine, improved bee-hive or patent churn than other men? The Chinese and the Japanese are very mechanical, inventive people; is it because they have so much faith in Jesus and accept the Christian dogmas? The Abyssinians are a Christian nation, is that what makes them such finished mechanics? The Spaniards, Italians, Portuguese and Mexicans are very ardent Christians; if your rule holds good, they should therefore be full of mechanical inventions. Are they?

So far as my observation has extended, inventors and distinguished mechanics are not especially pious and full of faith. They are generally a practical sort of people, and think more of cog-wheels, mechanical forces, etc., than they do of Gods and Christs, sanctification and imputed righteousness. The Christian Church probably distinguished itself in the field of invention more in getting up racks, thumb-screws, pulleys, wheels, boots, pincers, burning-irons and other engines of torture without name with which to mangle and kill thousands of the poor heretic wretches whom they took under their kind protection and inventive care. Could the Church have obtained a patent for its every invention of this kind, and could have sold the patents at a good price, the revenue from this source would doubtless have equaled that from the sale of indulgences, and from the pardons in advance, for the most heinous crimes. Pollock describes the pleasure the Church took in its inventions for torture thus:

"Inquisition, model most complete
Of perfect wickedness, where deeds were done—
Deeds! let them ne'er be named—and sat and planned
Deliberately, and with most musing pains,
How to extremest thrill of agony,
The flesh and blood and souls of men,
Her victims, might be wrought; and when she saw
New tortures of her laboring fancy born,
She leaped for joy, and made great haste to try
Their force, well pleased to hear a deeper groan."

You have evolved a long distance from where your brethren of the Church stood two or three centuries ago. You claim now that all these useful inventions belong to the Church while your predecessors consigned them to the devil. Hundreds of the inventions which you now claim for the Church used to be traced directly to his Satanic Majesty. Even the art of printing, which you vain would monopolize, has many and many a time by your former brethren been denounced as the work of the devil and a device of hell. Gutenberg and Faust, when they invented printing, were said to be in league with the "Evil One." Leading bishops and priests of the Christian Church did all they could to suppress the art and denounced it as a great enemy to the Church. They perceived that it possessed facilities for conveying intelligence to the masses, and they feared its influence. William Tyndale, a man of note, was, in 1536, by the authorities of the Church, burned at the stake for translating and printing the Bible. I think it was Gov. Berkeley of Virginia, an eminently pious Christian who, since the settlement of this country, thanked God that there was not a printing-press in the whole State, and he prayed that there might not be.

In like manner hundreds of other inventions were piously denounced as being the works of the devil. In this category may be placed the steam-engine, lightning-rods, the telegraph, railroads, reaping-machines, sewing-machines, friction-matches, etc., etc. Even your pious Church brethren, the Presbyterians of Scotland, for many years persistently fought the use of the fanning-mill for cleaning their rye, oats and beans, and called the wind it engendered "the devil's wind." Is it not amusing to see you now turn around and claim all these inventions as the special property of the Church? Verily, who is it sitting on the back seat of the car of progress throwing out hand-bills on which is inscribed, "See what we are doing for the advancement of science"? I fancy, Bro. Humphrey, I see you among the number.

You recite a great number of names of inventors, artists, etc., who lived and died in Christian countries. You could have increased this list greatly by copying the names of artisans and mechanics from the New York Directory. Nine-tenths of these would doubtless be found tacit believers in Christianity, and they would serve to swell the list greatly. You might with equal propriety claim Christianity as the foster parent of brothels, gambling hells, run-holes, lotteries, policy-shops, stock-gambling offices, horse-races, concert-cellars, etc., etc., for you would find a large proportion of those who conduct these establishments, as well as their patrons, believers in the Christian religion, and they are just as honestly entitled to be counted and claimed by you as the inventors, painters, sculptors, poets, printers, book-sellers, etc., etc. I am disposed to yield to you all that is justly yours.

You name several Freethought and Spiritualistic journals and intimate that they have done little or nothing in the cause of science. They certainly have done something in that direction, and have at least labored to do their duty in an unpopular cause, each according to its ability. They will, I think, compare very favorably in the direction of being teachers of science with The Observer, The Evangelist, The Christian at Work, The Christian Union, Working Church, and the four hundred other pious Christian papers published in this country. Are they par excellence teachers of science? If teaching Christianity and teaching science are the same, what a vast amount of science the sixty-five thousand clergymen of the United States alone ought to be able to present to the people! With so many teachers of science, every individual in the country over fifteen years of age ought to be well versed in its great truths. But it is not the case, for all the science they all teach can be put into a very small space. $200,000,000 are paid annually for the promulgation of antique myths and obsolete dogmas, and the truths of science form but a small share of their instructions.

I could hardly repress a smile when I saw that you claimed the dictionary as a Christian bequest. Why, there were dictionaries in the world before a Christian was thought of. Besides, the author of our dictionary and the old spelling-book was, during a part of his life a skeptic, especially when he wrote the spelling-book (see Memoir in Dictionary). Why do you not claim the rule of addition and the multiplication table as Christian institutions? You could do so with equal justice with much that you have claimed.

At the close of your last letter you draw a very pretty picture of the Car of Progress passing by, and of a dead-head wishing a ride, and of his clambering up, taking a back seat and at once throwing out his handbills, claiming great honor for what he has done for science and the elevation of mankind. This is all very pretty, only you have made a mistake in the individual. His name instead of Infidelity is Christianity—another instance of where you have claimed too much. In view of the manner in which the Church persistently stifled the aspirations of mankind for mental liberty and the truths of science for fifteen hundred years, and only when compelled was induced to recognize them, it is very refreshing to now see it mount the back seat and swing its banner, claiming thousands of years devotion to science. Yes; it is very amusing.

In closing let me make one more quotation from Lugersoll: "Christianity has always opposed every forward movement of the human race. Across the highway of progress it has always been building breastworks of bibles, tracts, commentaries, prayer-books, creeds, dogmas and platforms, and at every advance the Christians have gathered together behind these heaps of rubbish and shot the poisoned arrows of malice at the soldiers of freedom."

Pardon me for my great length. To answer your generalizations in detail necessarily requires considerable space. I have not aimed at aught else but to answer the points you raised. There is much more I would like to say bearing upon the same subject, but must defer it for the present. I am very truly yours, D. M. BENNETT.

Creation.

Have we a true account of the creation of the Universe in the first chapter of Genesis? If so, will our self-constituted divines who style themselves "God's Holy Ministry," please reconcile the conflicting statements, so we, the children of the Devil, can comprehend them, that we may become as they are, transformed into children of light.

We have here evidently two separate accounts of creation. The first account is given in the first chapter and the first three verses of the second chapter of Genesis. The second account begins at the fourth verse of the second chapter, and any careful reader will detect many contradictions between the two. The first always uses the single appellation, "God"; the second, "the Lord God." In the first God gave to man the fruit of every tree for meat. In the second, he forbids him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The first says the waters brought forth all the fowls of the air. The second, the Lord God formed them out of the ground. The first says the earth at the command of God brought forth grass and herbs. The second that the Lord God made every plant of the field before it was in the earth. The first says God created man on the sixth day: "Male and female created he them," and this was the end of creation. In the second we are told man was formed before the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air; that he had been placed "in the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it," and he gave names to all living creatures before woman was created. The first says God pronounced all of his creation very good. The second proves the first false, by showing that man unto whom he gave dominion over all the earth was not orthodox, for on his first temptation he falls. He follows the promptings of the Evil One in direct opposition to the commands of his Creator.

These two accounts not only conflict but plainly contradict each other. They cannot both be true, and what evidence have we that either is true? Neither will stand the test of reason, nor the light of science. Is this God's infallible account of creation transmitted to his children, or is it only man's traditions handed down from ignorant ages when man was in his infancy and science unknown? We are also told that God commanded our first parents to "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Man, with his peculiar organization and desires, was the embodiment of this command, and we cannot believe that God would utter a command without a necessity. Viewing God's love, mercy and goodness to us in the divine economy of nature around us, we have too much reverence for him to believe him guilty of many things our Christian brethren accuse him of. In this book, called by designing priests the "Holy Bible," God is accused of more and deeper crimes than have all the criminals of earth that have been arraigned before the bar of justice.

From these awful lies we find Infidels everywhere demurring. And this is our crime. For this we are denounced by these self-constituted judges, and denied every privilege, every right, and every source of happiness that they have the power to withhold. We have no rights that the Christian is bound to respect. We are only fit subjects for abuse in this world, and of endless punishment, woe and despair in the next. We believe that if God gave one supreme command to man at his creation, it was think for yourselves and subject all things unto reason.

Yours in search of truth,

E. GIMLIN.

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.—Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAINE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

"The causes which most disturbed or accelerated the normal progress of society in antiquity were the appearance of great men; in modern times they have been the appearance of great inventions. Printing has secured the intellectual achievements of the past, and furnished a sure guarantee of future progress. Gunpowder and military machinery (and greater skill in war) have rendered the triumph of barbarians impossible. Steam (and the ocean telegraph) have united nations in the closest bond. Innumerable mechanical contrivances have given a decided preponderance to that industrial element which has colored all the development of our civilization. The leading characteristics of modern societies are in consequence marked out much more by the triumphs of inventive skill than by the sustained energy of moral causes."

John Stuart Mill says: "Our knowledge of the properties and laws of physical objects shows no sign of approaching its ultimate boundaries; it is advancing more rapidly and in a greater number of directions at once, than in any previous age or generation, and affording such frequent glimpses of unexplored fields beyond, as to justify the belief that our acquaintance with Nature is still almost in its infancy."

It is a common thing to speak of "civilization" as if it were something new, of comparatively modern date. Christians speak of it as a thing produced by Christianity. But we should not forget that there were civilizations before Christianity had a local habitation and a name. There were the civilizations of Egypt, of Greece, of Phœnicia, of Babylon, of Assyria, of Persia and of Rome. In the New World the earliest civilizations were in Central America, Mexico, and Peru. It is true that Christianity played a conspicuous part in the formation of modern society—perhaps doing almost if not quite as much evil as good. But it cannot claim authorship of civilization or of religion, as Egypt was the cradle of religion. Many of the doctrines of the Church can be traced back to the land of the Pyramids. And as for civilization, no one can enumerate its factors—its causes are beyond all computation—and its sources out of sight. We can only trace a few of the more immediate causes, such as the descent of religion principally through Egypt and India. Our love of art beauty came from Greece. And just here we may observe that the Christian Church received from the Greek philosophy a wild imagination which led to endless speculations which frequently led the early Church into persecutions and wars. Rome contributed to the stock of the world's wealth its seeds of law and government. From these nations we have received as our inheritance, History, Religion, Poetry, Painting, Architecture, Sculpture, and Philosophy. In still later times the German love of individual liberty played a quite important part in preparing the way for modern institutions. The Greek sought freedom as a citizen, and the Christian spirit was personal surrender, but the German sought personal freedom.

We have been taught to call their old civilization "heathen," or "pagan," terms usually understood to mean all that is bad. Yet through the long centuries of the past, the Greek and Roman languages were taught in Christian institutions of learning. These institutions could not have existed without the stimulus of these languages, freighted as they were with the treasures of the past.

"Christianity transformed itself at a very early date from a religious organization into a state government seeking the control of the nation, and afterwards struggled for the control of all nations and all governments; and in this respect it was the controlling power in forming a new civilization—the civilization of Europe under the Roman Catholic religion. In this sense Christianity produced a new civilization, but the civilization of which we speak, the civilization of Europe and America to-day is totally different in spirit and aim. The former was characterized by two factors, slavery and ignorance, while the latter is noted for its individual freedom and enlightenment" (Index). So far as the old civilization remains under Protestant and Roman institutions, so far there remains conflict between Christianity and modern civilization.

It is a common belief in Protestant countries that Protestantism is the cause of all modern enlightenment, "overlooking," says Buckle, "the important fact that until enlightenment had begun there was no Protestantism required. Enlightenment was the cause of Protestantism. Many causes had been at work to bring up the public mind to a higher intelligence and a braver love of independence."

"The Reformation broke out at least twenty times before Luther, and was put down. Arnold of Brescia was put down, Fra Dolcino was put down, Savonarola was put down, the Albigenes were put down, the Vaudois were put down, the Lollards were put down, the Hussites were put down" (Mill's Liberty, p. 56).

The Reformation was therefore a result of previous enlightenment—a demand for larger individual liberty. It was the protest of reason against authority and superstition. But it was only a half protest—it only protested against the grosser abuses of power and authority. Liberalism is the full protest against all sorts of superstition and tyranny.

We have greatly overestimated the work of the Reformation. It did not so greatly change the humanities of society as we have so fondly imagined. Protestants were found to be persecutors when they had the power, just as the Romanists had been; circumstances, however, modified and restrained them from such atrocious cruelties. Yet Calvin could burn Servetus. "Persecution for religious heterodoxy, in all its degrees, was in the sixteenth century the principle as well as the practice of every Church" (Hallam, Middle Ages, vol. 2, p. 45).

"The Reformation was a change of masters; a voluntary one, no doubt, in those who had any choice; and in this sense, an exercise for the time, of personal judgment. But no one having gone over to the confession of Augsburg or that of Zurich was deemed at liberty to modify those creeds at his pleasure. He might, of course, become an Anabaptist or an Arian, but he was not the less a heretic in doing so than if he continued in the Church of Rome" (Hallam, Middle Ages, vol. I, p. 200).

The Saracens were among the first who caught the spirit of the new civilization through the method of science. "In science," observes Draper, "their great merit consists in this, that they cultivated it after the manner of European Greeks. They perceived that it never can be advanced by mere speculation; its only sure progress is by the practical interrogation of Nature. The essential characteristics of their method is experiment and observation. Geometry and the mathematical sciences were looked upon as instruments of reasoning. In their numerous writings on mechanics, hydrostatics, optics, it is interesting to remark that the solution of a problem is always obtained by performing an experiment, or by an instrumental observation. It was this that made them the originators of chemistry, that led them to the invention of all kinds of apparatus for distillation, sublimation, fusion, filtration; that caused them to appeal to divided instruments, as quadrants and astralopes; in chemistry to employ the balance, the theory of which they were perfectly familiar with; to construct tables of specific gravities and astronomical tables; that produced their great improvements in geometry, trigonometry, the invention of algebra, and the adoption of the India numeration in arithmetic."

To the Mohammedans belongs the credit of giving the greatest awakening to the intellect of Europe at the close of the eighth and beginning of the ninth century.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

AN idea is often more fatal than the muskets of a whole army. A bullet kills a tyrant; an idea kills tyranny.

PERSECUTION never kills truth; false patronage is deadly. It buries the truth alive; suffocates it; makes a mummy of it, a husk, a stone.—Dudley.

If the world knocks you down and jostles you in its great race, don't sit whining under people's feet, but get up, rub your elbows and begin again.

IN childhood we chase butterflies; in youth, fancies as ephemeral; in manhood, golden schemes that tarnish when obtained; and in age, phantoms that ever lure us on, and elude us too.

EVERY tree that spreads its branches over the earth; every leaf that unfolds itself to the sunshine; every flower that exhales its perfume on the air, and every spire of grass that points toward heaven, is an eloquent minister ordained to preach the resurrection and the life.—S. B. Britton.

To skepticism we owe that spirit of inquiry which during the last two centuries has gradually encroached on every possible subject; has reformed every department of practical and speculative knowledge; has awakened the authority of the privileged classes, and thus placed liberty on a surer foundation; has chastised the despotism of princes, and has even diminished the prejudices of the clergy.—Buckle.

The population of England at the Norman conquest was about two millions. In five hundred years it had scarcely doubled. It had scarcely doubled. It may be supposed that this stationary condition was to some extent induced by the papal policy of the enforcement of celibacy in the clergy. The "legal generative force" was doubtless affected by that policy, the "actual generative force" was not. For those who have made this subject their study have long ago been satisfied that public celibacy is private wickedness. It was openly asserted that there were one hundred thousand women in England made dissolute by the clergy.—Draper.

Now the Church, as keeper of God's kingdom, bids you assent to arbitrary creeds of its own science, and bow the knee to its forms. Thus the Christianity of the Church, as it is set forth at this day, insults the souls, and much belittles a man before it can bless him. The Church is too small for the soul, "the bed is shorter than a man can stretch himself in it, and the covering narrower than he can wrap himself in it." Some writer tells us of a statue of Olympian Juno, majestic and awful in its exquisite beauty, but seated under a roof so low, and within walls so narrow, that should the statue rise to its feet, and spread the arms, it must demolish its temple, roof and wall. Thus sits man in the Christian Church at this day. Let him think in what image he is made; let him feel his immortal nature, and rising take a single step toward the divine life—and where is the Church?—Theodore Parker.

CHRISTIANITY is conspiring against the existence of the State, as dangerously as did the now extinct slave power of the South. In the very heart of the Great Republic we have a domestic foe in the Christian Church conspiring openly and with deadly hatred against the whole framework of our political institutions; and it is even now trying to fire the Christian heart with the flames of treason. The parallel is complete. The Church proclaims the absolute dominion of Jesus over the nation, and teaches that every citizen belongs to him, body and soul. What is this but to proclaim once more the exploded infamy of property in man? It is slavery still that aims the deadly blow at the national existence. Once it was slavery of the body—now it is slavery of the mind. The difference is nothing—the principle is essentially the same. The conflict is between Christianity and freedom—between the Christian Church and the Republic—between the Christian creed and the Declaration of Independence.—Index.

A Plea for Paine Hall.

THORNDIKE, MASS., June 25, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: No one now, I think, can reasonably find fault with the tenure of Paine Hall. The main cause of dissatisfaction has been removed. The property has been transferred from the Joint-Tenants by whom it was held, to a Board of Trustees legally elected at a meeting of the donors. Precautions have been taken by the Board, as far as possible, to secure the building against the liability of loss to the Liberal cause, and measures have been inaugurated to make the project, started several years ago, but retarded unfortunately by obstacles caused chiefly by mistakes and misunderstandings, leading to a bitter public controversy among its friends, worthy of the renewed confidence and deserving the encouragement and assistance of Liberals everywhere throughout the land.

I was never pleased with joint-tenancy, and my views upon the subject have been well known to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. From the first I have believed the property should be vested in a board of trustees, and what influence I have had has been used to secure this result. I have regretted deeply the controversy which grew out of differences on the subject, and the principal parties on both sides can bear testimony to my persistent efforts to stop it and bring about an amicable settlement and understanding that would lead to some harmonious action which would be likely to restore confidence and insure the success of the enterprise.

It will be noticed that I am one of the Trustees. This position was not desired by me. I even declined in advance, when Mr. Burt and others requested me to accept a place on the Board; but having been chosen one of the Trustees at a meeting of the donors, held in Boston last March, and urged by friends of the movement to sacrifice my feelings and wishes to the interest of the Liberal cause, I deemed it a duty to serve.

The Board held their first meeting last week, and agreed upon an appeal to the Liberal public, which your readers will have seen probably ere this letter appears in print.

I now ask Liberals to bury in the past, never to be revived again, all bad feeling growing out of the Paine Hall controversy, and give the Board of Trustees their good wishes, their influence and their aid in the work of removing from the building the present indebtedness. I believe the Board, to the best of their ability, will endeavor to carry out the wishes of the donors in a faithful performance of the duties of their trust.

Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

We are pleased that the change is effected. It is all that we contended for.—ED. T. S.

"Truth Seeker Collection."

We are pleased to say the orders for this little work are coming in freely, some calling for a dozen to distribute among their neighbors. A good many persist in sending one dollar, although our price is seventy-five cents. We invariably put in some tracts or something of the kind to make up the amount. We have received many letters, of which the following are samples, and it gives us pleasure to lay them before our readers:

LETTER FROM HUDSON TUTTLE.

BERLIN HEIGHTS.

D. M. BENNETT: The reception of your "Truth Seeker Collection" was a great surprise. Only yesterday you announced your design of publishing it, and to-day it appears complete! Have you Aladdin's lamp, the magic ring, or the purse of Fortunatus that you are able to publish in such rapid succession the large and costly volumes that almost weekly come from your press? Most sincerely do I hope the Liberals of the country will appreciate your efforts. They have had the dearest of literature, and now you make for them the cheapest. Your work cannot be measured, for you are teaching an inconceivably vast audience; breaking their mental fetters, pulverizing their old creeds and substituting the glorious principles of Free-thought.

The "Collection" is a book the need of which has been deeply felt by every public speaker, and I think admirably meets the demand. Criticism at first may pronounce it too large, but if you furnish the six hundred pages at the price at which two hundred are usually sold, it is disarmed. So wide and varied is your field, all are able to find what pleases them.

The forms of marriage, funerals, etc., are exceedingly valuable and will be appreciated by lecturers,

You present the advantages of organization in an able manner, and it is to be hoped the "mills of the gods" have now ground the Freethought element sufficiently fine; that the process of disintegration has now reached its limits, and that the forces of assimilation, of growth and development may build a new temple pure and holy as man's ideal, on the ruins of the old.

Your chapter of Invocations, which, as you say, "Many persons are in favor of them," are good, but you know I regard them as only way-marks, to be completely cast aside when we get a little further on to a full appreciation of our selfhood. Prayer, as you say, will not affect a change in any being outside of the Universe, or upon the Universe itself, but "may have a salutary influence upon the person," etc. This is true, but is there not a better way out of this labyrinth of superstition? If a man lift on his boot-straps with "sincere" purpose of carrying himself into the street, an hour every morning, he may not affect his purpose, but he will strengthen his muscles. You would not, however, advise this kind of exercise or encourage the person in the waste of time that might be better employed. Invocations by Liberal or Spiritual lectures are shams, endured by the best of their audience, and sops to the half-way creedist. Of all, B. F. Underwood's is the best, for it turns the whole subject into a burlesque, and reveals the exact thoughts of the speaker—he ignores a personal God, and asks nothing if there is one.

The songs—Liberal and Spiritualistic—are excellent, and the Recitations are well chosen and valuable.

Only an extensive sale can justify the low price at which you have placed it, and it is to be hoped the Liberal public for whom you are making such great sacrifices, will appreciate your labors.

I am most fraternally yours,

HUDSON TUTTLE.

FROM THE AUTHOR OF "THE HEATHENS OF THE HEATH."

LINDSAY, ONT., CAN., June 27, '77.

MY DEAR MR. BENNETT: Accept my thanks for the vol. entitled "The Truth Seeker Collection." This work will be, no doubt very acceptable to a large class of Liberals, and I sincerely trust that they will properly appreciate the enterprise which placed such a book within their reach.

You have hit your Rev. opponent pretty hard in your last letter. Yet it is amusing how positive such men are in their errors, and how reluctantly they succumb, even when admissions are fairly forced from them.

Wishing you health and every success, I remain, Sincerely yours,

W. McDONNELL.

FROM J. F. RUGGLES.

Let me say a few words about "The Truth Seeker Collection." It is an extraordinary production, and at a marvellously cheap price. It is a great improvement on the English "Secular Manual," Kneeland's Hymns, and all similar efforts at making Liberal text-books. Every Freethinker should regard it as a matter for pride to be the fortunate possessor of this unique magazine of pathos, sentiment, humor, wit, and wisdom.

J. FRANCIS RUGGLES.

Bronson, Mich.

FROM ELLA E. GIBSON.

1114 CALLOWHILL ST.,
PHILADELPHIA, PA., }

BROTHER BENNETT: I am desirous of adding my "feeble testimony," as the Christians repeat in 'class-meetings, in favor of "The Truth Seeker Collection of Hymns," etc. I think them excellent, and that they meet a long-felt want among Liberals, Spiritualists, and reformers. May their sale prove a success, as has their publication.

Lord Amberley's work is a treasure! I question if there is any other work of the kind in the world of equal value. What a pity that the gods could not have spared him a little longer to us, since it would seem that we had the most need of him! I wish every minister in the world was obliged to read a copy, or throw up his commission, and the laity to sit by while it was read and propound questions. Is that illiberal, Brother Bennett?

Yours for truth, ELLA E. GIBSON.

FROM MRS. HUTCHINSON.

BISHOP CREEK, INYO
CO., CAL., Jun. 21, '77 }

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The Hymn Book is just received. I think it splendid! Please send me one more, for which I send you one dollar, for I'm at a loss to know how you can afford them so cheap as seventy-five cents a copy.

You seem to be a real Samson in making things move generally. Rut mind and not let any Delilah cut your hair or cripple your efforts, and you may yet live to see the Temple of Superstition fall upon the heads of its votaries, even though you may perish in the efforts you are making to pull down the pillars on which it stands. L. HUTCHINSON.

FROM DR. A. SHERMAN.

I think the "Forms, Hymns, etc., so nice. I sold a copy to a friend of mine, and he said he would not take five dollars for it if he could not get another. A. SHERMAN.

Champaign, Ill.

The Wolcott Grove Meeting.

BRING YOUR TENTS AND SEND ON YOUR CONTRIBUTIONS.

SALAMANCA, June 26, 1877.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: Your line saying you will attend the Wolcott meeting is received. I am sure many Freethinkers in Central and Western New York will improve the opportunity to meet you. Bring along your splendid publications and give all a chance to purchase and circulate. And now allow me to make a suggestion. The 17th, 18th, and 19th of August is just about the time many people would like to take a little recreation and vacation from business. This meeting is to be held in a beautiful grove, and is near Cosad's Liberal Hall, in which the meetings can be held if it should rain. I therefore suggest that in many towns where there are half a dozen or more who would like to attend this meeting let them unite, get a small tent, and camp out near the meeting grounds. We must learn something from our orthodox friends. Let us make this a large camp-meeting where the God of Nature shall be adored.

And as most of the expense of the meeting will fall on one liberal and generous brother, the builder of Cosad's Hall, do not forget, so soon as you read this, to immediately mail to Mr. J. M. Cosad, at Wolcott, any sum you may choose, from $1 to $50, to be used in defraying the necessary expenses of the meeting. Be assured he will make good use of it, and all sums so subscribed will be reported at the meeting. I am confident arrangements will be made with many of the railroads to carry passengers to and from the meeting at half fare.

H. L. GREEN.

Friendly Correspondence.

MRS. J. H. MOORE, Angola, Ind., writes: Seeing an article in your columns headed "Cowardly Journalism," brings to my mind a circumstance which happened here not long since. During a Moody and Sankeytorious meeting, when all other means failed, the priest in his holy zeal to save souls felt it his duty to practice a little pious fraud to scare sinners into the fold by citing to them the case of a very estimable lady friend of mine who died a Materialist, and who, through all her sufferings (which were intense as she died from cancer), maintained the same heroic fortitude which characterized her through life. And at different times when visited by preachers who wished to pray for her she gently but firmly refused, saying she had no need for prayers. But the reverend Divine had been informed by a pious sister that she died asking for prayers, and he so stated it to his hearers. Some of the family were present and were filled with grief and indignation at so foul a wrong to the name of their revered mother. They went with the story to their father who managed to be present at the next meeting, and after asking permission, placed the matter in its true light before the audience. As the Angola Herald and Republican had been publishing nice little articles lauding the efforts of the preacher, and dwelling on the beneficial influence of the meeting (what we could not see) the father thought to disabuse the minds of the people by writing a correction of this pious lie for publication in the above mentioned papers. But it never appeared in the columns of either. Now is this cowardice or godliness? If it is godliness, I cannot understand such.

JOHN MELLENDY, Shawano, Wis., writes: Please send me "The Truth Seeker Collection;" several of us Liberals have decided to use it instead of preachers on the death of beloved friends; hence this remittance. Two recent attempts to get up a revival here resulted in a most astounding failure, owing to the free circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER; also hard times. As soon as it was demonstrated that there was no money in the operation the "evangelist" pulled up stakes and embarked for a more congenial clime. The people here begin to believe that if they take care of their bodies their souls will take care of themselves. I am nearly 47 years of age, and in consequence of having been compelled to submit to Christian customs and Christian bulldozers, I find myself at middle age. Had theologians preached more hygiene and physiology and less theology from their pulpits, the penitentiaries and lunatic asylums would now contain comparatively few inmates. Teach us how to take care of the body and the soul will take care of itself. Away with the soul-savers and give us body-savers. Teach us truth, reason, and common sense. Your excellent paper is making many true friends here, and nothing but the hard times prevents extensive subscriptions. Go on, Dear Brother Bennett, with your good work; success is sure to crown your efforts. As soon as I can command the money I shall invest largely in many of your excellent works, especially "The Analysis of Religious Belief." The "Sages" is now going the rounds, and it is pulling the wool from the eyes of the priestcraft-blinded people. No man can ever sincerely join a church (a bulldozer) who has once read the "Sages." It is a masterly work. Oh, those orthodox bulldozers! why will they continue to humbug the people in order to satisfy their amorous and avaricious passions and be the very first to plunge into the hell-fire of brimstone which they have prepared and theorized for unbelievers. Caught at last in their own trap. Give us men who have sufficient moral courage to preach hygiene and physiology from the pulpit (down with bulldozing theology), and teach the masses that the great Christian customs and Christian bulldozers, such as bolted flour, alcohol, strychnine, vinegar, salted pork, tobacco, opium, camphor, coffee, and tea, shall be totally abolished from habitual daily use in order to empty our prisons and lunatic asylums. Give us preachers who have sufficient moral courage to preach that we must live in conformity to the laws of nature by eating graham flour, fruits, and vegetables, and fresh meats sparingly; i.e. we must eat to live; whereas the Christian bulldozer lives to eat, and subsists upon the above-named bulldozers. Teach us truth and morality, and health and happiness will be your reward.

MRS. SALLIE J. MINER, Angola, Ind., writes: Brother Bennett, one point in your reply to the young folks of Paris, Ill., we consider worthy of particular notice. In speaking of your change from your early religious impressions you say: "This was not because we lapsed into immoral practices, but because our mind evolved, advanced, and took a higher range of thought." Here is an idea of great importance. Many persons talk about what they believe and what they do not believe, simply because somebody else believes or disbelieves thus and so. Many persons talk of being Universalists that do not at all understand what Universalism is; they have heard somebody say that Universalists believe there is no future punishment, and some say they do not believe in any punishment, and every reckless scapegrace willingly falls in with such a doctrine, and loudly proclaims himself a Universalist. Thus it is with Atheists and Infidels, many think a person who does not believe in a personal God and the divine origin of the Scriptures must necessarily be very bad, but so far as I can learn by reading, the noblest minds this world has ever been blest with, and the noblest men or women that have lived in this or any age of the world, have seen more importance in laboring to enlighten human intellect to make mankind better than in talking loud and long about the wrath of a personal God or the torments of a future hell. It is easier for men to talk to an audience of sleepy listeners—of the blood of Christ—of the importance of being immersed or sprinkled—and break bread and pass wine—than to search earnestly for truth and work for the real practical good of mankind. Christians have no need to look among Universalists, Atheists, Infidels, or any other class of liberal-minded people, for iniquity, for they can find plenty of it right in the churches. Christians are the only class of people I know of that teach there is any possible escape from the just punishment of crime, great or small. But Christians teach there is escape from retribution, and consequently they encourage crime. When the mind evolves, advances, and takes that higher range of thought, it has no use for the petty, narrow dogmas of the Christian, their doctrines are but dry hooks to an advanced mind. If the young folks of Paris, and many others that are wasting their time praying for you, could but see themselves as every advanced mind must see them, they would see that there was much for them to learn, and that it was far better and more profitable for them to be searching after truth by studying the works of the Universe than praying that you might become a child of God. Such folly! Such folly!

"OBSERVER," Pilot Rock, Or., writes: Your influence is being felt in this remote region. Dr. York gave three lectures in Pendleton, about five miles distant, this last winter. On the first evening he had only a small audience, with but a few Christians, the next evening a few more, and the third the house was full to overflowing; it became a feast, in fact the good work just begun, and he left to fill other appointments. I did not have the pleasure of hearing him, but it made a marked difference in the future conduct of the people. On the heel of this all the Christian denominations went for a revival. In the country around about they had some success; at points they made quite a number of converts. Some stuck, and some go back on their profession, and have come to the conclusion that it all amounts to a magnetic influence one upon another—the young girls called more young men forward than the preacher converted. They would go around the congregation, perch themselves astride or on some young man's knee and place their hands on his shoulder and coax him to invest in the blood of Jesus. Their parents would stand back among the anxious-seats and sing and shout, and by their united efforts they got up a revival. Their actions would contrast favorably with the inmates of a bawdy house, where the shouting and dancing commenced in what was termed the "bull pen." The audience shot across the tops of benches to get a peep inside. It was glorious fun to witness the act first of excitement and insanity. Members would call outsiders by name and say they were raising up their family in disgrace, and call on God to send down more of his "converting power just now"—the term more "converting power just now" in Oregon parlance is a "pat phrase." They have been scouring about all through the country, getting up revivals. Now a course of camp-meeting is in order. It rained while here and prevented their service, but they were exhorted to spend a portion of every day to lift up their voice in supplication to the Most High for their success in other places. Some set forth the most ridiculous and absurd ideas I ever heard of, I slept in a recently-painted room for three nights, and on the third I had a stroke of the paint paralysis, and the whispering is that it is a just judgment of God on account of my unbelief. One of the foremost members of the church has a sick wife just about in the prime of life. She is not expected to live from one day till another. They have quite another cause for her—she is too good for this world, and God will probably take her as an ornament for his celestial kingdom. It is presumed that she will inhabit the New Jerusalem, with Peter as door-keeper; the walls made with precious stones, gate of pearl, and the streets paved with gold, great Jehovah sitting on a white throne tallying the number of hairs a fellow has got on his head. The more freethought there is, the more bankruptcy. I have frequently thought of the necessity of so much "book-keeping" who he is accountable to. Sitting there writing, or with his pen behind his ear, I am afraid he will come out like the pious Gen. Howard in the Negro Bureau—defaulter.

Special Notices.

CORRESPONDENCE solicited with a young lady of liberal views. Object, exchange of opinion and promotion of freethought. Address, J. M. P., care of TRUTH SEEKER.

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

THE EVOLUTION. No. 10.

Contains Essays on The Religion of Shakspeare, Some American Poets, Rip Van Winkle; a Sun-Myth, concluded, Education in Science, Medical Assistance as a social Function, Ethics of the Positive Philosophy, iv; Scientific Notes, one page; Bacchus the Prophet-God; the Origin of Christianity, first paper; Equality; Review of Morgan's "Ancient Society"; and six other articles of interest.

The Evolution, No. 11, Just Out.

Contains, Municipal Reform; Utah; Social Ethnology; Protestantism and Science; Opium and Opium-Eaters; Review of Spencer's Sociology; Offer of Prizes for Essays on the Labor Question; and a dozen other interesting articles. Terms of The Evolution, $3 per year (26 numbers) $1.50 for 13 numbers, 15 cents a single copy. Address ASA K. BUTTS, Publisher 34 Day street, New York. 2127

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN, Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY. By R. T. TRALL, M.D. A Scientific and Popular Exposition of the Fundamental Problems in Sociology. 25,000 copies of this work have been sold. Finely illustrated, and a very important work. Price, $2.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI. inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type, 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. Y. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Elske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greely.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slesker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hays.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker	Asa K. Butts.
(full figure).	W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 80 cts., to hold 60, $1.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAVEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

MRS. BEVIER,

ELECTRICIAN.

Cures Dyspepsia when all others fail; also by VITAL MAGNETISM

the most despondent are inspired with renewed life and energy. It imparts Electricity, Life, and Tone to the Brain, preventing Heart disease. I also have the VITAL SPARK, or COUNT CAGLIOSTRO'S SECRET. 465 Sixth Avenue, N. Y.

Radical Constructive Literature.

DISCOURSES AND LECTURES

DELIVERED BEFORE THE SOCIETY

OF HUMANITY AND THE LIBERAL CLUB IN SCIENCE HALL, New York City.

1. The Constitution and Regulations of the First Congregation of the Society of the Church of Humanity, with a short statement of the New Faith. Price, 25 cents.
2. The Old vs. the New Gospel. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 10 cents.
3. The God Idea in History. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
4. The Safe Side. By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.
5. Duties Proportional to Destinies. (In press.) By Hugh Byron Brown. Price, 5 cents.

HENDERSON & BROWN.

Science Hall, 8th St., (near Broadway.)

221f. [New York.]

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (3 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author's will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
 2. Dangers of Preventions.
 3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
 4. Preparation for Maternity.
 5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
 6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
 7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
 8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
 9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
 10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.
- To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife.
 2. Best age for Bearing Children.
 3. Shall sickly people become Parents?
 4. Small Families.
 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife.
 6. Celibacy.
 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring.
 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring.
 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child.
 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work?
 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring.
 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain."

Goody's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable."

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greely, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune, is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 18 Elliot street, Boston Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, 20 cts. annum; three months, 50 cents. 6724

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology$3 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book1 00
Health and Diseases of Women25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d st., New York. 11

Mrs. E. H. Bennett,

GENUINE ASTROLOGIST.

Delineates character, points out the past events of life and indicates probable future incidents by knowing the date of birth and calculating the influence of the planets ruling at the time of birth and through life. Successfully consulted in matters pertaining to health, matrimony and fortune. SATISFACTION GUARANTEED. Terms reasonable. Personal interviews $1.00. Replies by mail on one or two points, $1.00. Full nativity for self and family, $2.00. Give your day and hour of birth as nearly as possible. Address

MRS. E. H. BENNETT.

4624

60 West Tenth street, N. Y.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1080 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding	- - -	$3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges	- - -	4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band	- - -	4.50

Add 388.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth street, N. Y. 3

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. YES Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

Gems of Thought.

HAVE you heard that it was good to gain the day?
I also say it is good to fall—battles are lost in the same spirit in which they are won.
—Walt Whitman.

THERE never was any more inception than there is now;
Nor any more youth or age than there is now.
And will never be any more perfection than there is now.
Nor any more heaven or hell than there is now.
—Walt Whitman.

THE love of the beautiful is inherent in the nature of every human being, and this love should be cultivated and cherished as one of our most valued and priceless possessions. The more we strive after and long for the beautiful, the happier we shall become, and the better able we shall be to appreciate all the loveliness that is scattered over the earth by the generous and lavish hand of good old Mother Nature.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

LET women stand where they may in the scale of improvement, their position decides that of the race. Are they cultivated?—so is society polished and enlightened. Are they ignorant?—so is it gross and insipid. Are they wise?—so is the human condition prosperous. Are they foolish?—so is it unstable and unpromising. Are they free?—so is the human character elevated. Are they enslaved?—so is the whole race degraded. Oh! that we could learn the advantage of just practice and consistent principles! that we could understand that every departure from principle, how specious soever it may appear to administer to our selfish interests, invariably saps their very foundation! that we could learn that what is ruinous to some is injurious to all and that whenever we establish our own pretensions upon the sacrificed rights of others, we do in fact impeach our own liberties, and lower ourselves in the scale of being.—Frances Wright.

FORCE first made conquest—and that conquest law;
Till superstition taught the tyrant awe,
Then shared the tyranny, then lent it aid,
And gods of conquerors, slaves of subjects made;
She, midst the lightning's blaze and thunder's sound,
When rocked the mountains, and when groaned the ground,
She taught the weak to bend, the proud to pray
To Power unseen, and mightier far than they;
She, from the rending earth and bursting skies,
Saw gods descend, and fiends infernal rise;
Here fixed the dreadful, there the blessed abodes;
Fear made her devils, and weak hope her gods;
Gods partial, changeable, passionate, unjust,
Whose attributes were rage, revenge, or lust;
Such as the souls of cowards might conceive,
And, formed like tyrants, tyrants won't believe.
Zeal, then, not charity, became the guide,
And hell was built on spite, and heaven on pride.
—Pope.

THE teacher of religion must seek to make all noble. He is not to make any one after the likeness of another—in the likeness of Calvin, Channing, Luther, Jesus, Moses, or Mohammed, but to quicken, to guide, and help each man gain the highest form of human nature that he is capable of attaining to; to help each to become a man, feeling, thinking, willing, living on his own account, faithful to his special individuality of soul. I wish men understood this, that their individuality is as sacred before God as that of Jesus or of Moses; and you are no more to sacrifice your manhood to them than they theirs to you. Respect for your manhood or womanhood, how small soever your gifts may be, is the first of all duties. As I defend my body against all outward attacks, and keep whole my limbs, so must I cherish the integrity of my spirit, take no man's mind, or conscience, heart or soul, for my master—the helpful for all helps, for despots none. I am more important to myself than Moses, Jesus, all men, can be to me. Holiness, the fidelity to my own consciousness, is the first of manly and womanly duties; that kept, all others follow sure.—A. J. Davis.

LET halls of science be multiplied, and opened on Sunday, free for all. Let us have lecturers dealing in facts, rather than priests dealing in fables. Instead of Bible societies and tract societies, let us have societies for the distribution of knowledge on which the soul can feed, and by which man can make the most of his present position. Let people understand the glorious truths of astronomy; and let telescopes be as plentiful as Bibles. Let the truths of geology, which are destined to supplant many of the fables of theology, be familiar to all. Let every child be taught a knowledge of its own body, and its relation to food, drink, air, light, etc.; and thus will the ravages of disease be stayed, and a foundation for long life and happiness secured. Let the producers of the world's wealth be secured the product of their labor, and let all idlers be compelled to work or starve; let Fashion die, and Use and Beauty take her place, and the true millennium will be here. The fever-breeding swamps will be drained, and fruitful gardens take their places; where the reed and the flag grow, the apple, the pear, and the peach shall flourish; the wild woods will fall, and stately palaces for humanity rise. The slave of capital shall stand erect, a man, and rejoice in the fruit of his labor, and the prison for the felon will be no longer needed. The pope and the priest, the king and the captain, will be loved and feared and hated no more. War will only be known in history, and love shall be at home in every bosom.—Wm. Denton.

Odds and Ends.

THE BEATITUDES.

Blessed is the man who minds his own business.
Blessed is the woman who never says to her husband, "I told you so."
Blessed is the man who can sew on his buttons when the baby is crying.
Blessed is the woman who won't marry a widower—providing he's your father.
Blessed is the mother-in-law who never reminds you that you married above your station.
Blessed is the rich relation who never looks down on you—when you are in the gutter.
Blessed is the poor relation who never looks up to you—for money.
Blessed is the old maid who don't hate children and old people.
Blessed is the old bachelor that don't hate cats and pincushions.
Blessed are the married people who don't wish they were single.
Blessed are the single people who are content to remain so.
Blessed is the husband who never says his mother's pies were better than his wife's are.

A HUMEROUS apothecary in Boston exposes a case of soap in his shop window, with the pertinent inscription, "Cheaper than dirt."

"You ain't afraid to die?" said a clergyman, tenderly. "No," replied the sufferer, "I'm only afraid if I do that the old woman will go snooting among my private papers the first thing."

A WESTERN paper, in describing an accident recently, says, with much candor: "Dr. Jones was called, and under his prompt and skillful treatment the young man died on Wednesday night."

THE new belt for ladies is said to be made in clasps, four of which go around the waist. It will be difficult, however, to improve upon the style of belt which is made in the shape of a coat-sleeve and has an arm inside of it. We have observed, however, that this kind usually requires more than four clasps.

AN elderly darkey was inquiring of a policeman if he knew anything of his son Pete. The policeman replied that there was a young darkey in the lock-up for breaking up a prayer-meeting with an axe-handle. "Dat's him," exclaimed the overjoyed parent; "he told me he was gwine to 'mause himself."

A VERY sympathetic gentleman went out to the county jail yesterday, and while looking about among the inmates he saw one fine-looking fellow whom he pitied most sincerely. "How came you in here?" said the S. G. to the jail-bird. "Oh, I came in here to get out of the crowd," replied the tender youth.

It is said that President Lincoln once asked Senator Fessenden: "What is your religion?" "Not much to boast of," replied the Senator, "but I suppose I am as much a Unitarian as anything." "Oh, a Unitarian," said Lincoln. "I thought you might be an Episcopalian. Seward is Episcopal, and I notice you swear about as he does."

A MAN who was not clever at conundrums, in attempting to get off one at a tea-party at his own house, the other evening, became exceedingly mixed. He intended to ask the old question: Why is woman like ivy? the familiar and gallant answer to which is: Because the more you are ruined, the closer she clings. But he put it, "Why is ivy like a woman?" which none of the ladies could tell, and so the unfortunate man told them himself, that it was "Because the closer she clings, the more you are ruined."

THE following conversation between two children is "smart," and this time it is Arlington: A sister and her brother were occupying the same bed; parents in an adjoining room; a cold winter's night; and the little fellow, whose name was Jimmy, awakening rather earlier than usual, slipped out of bed and was trotting around, when the sister, missing her charge, calls to him thus wise: "O Jimmy, come and get into bed this minute. You will caught your def a cold, and you will be sick and die, Jimmy, and go to heaven. And you know, Jimmy, you have no relations there. But I have, for Gramma B. is there. O Jimmy, do come!" and he came.

THE SECRETS OF MASONRY.

The story is told of a Mason's wife who plagued him almost out of his life. To learn the secret—whatever it be—The mystic words of Masonry.

Said he: "Now Mary, if I should tell The awful words I know so well,
When you get mad, my darling dear,
You'll rip them out, that all may hear."

Said she: "Oh, Edward, Never! Never! They'll rest in my heart's recess forever! Tell me Edward, and never more
Will I scold, or fret, or slam the door;
And I'll try to be quiet with all my might,
No matter what hour you come at night."

No man, unless he was made of wood,
Could resist an offer so fair and good;
So said he: "Now Mary, my woe or weal Depends on the words I'm about to reveal."

"Oh, Ned," she answered, "you may depend I'll keep the secret till life shall end."
Said he: "The secret that Masonry screens—
The awful words are—Pork and Beans!"

Scarcely a week had passed away,
When Mary got mad, and what did she say?
She shouted out that all might hear:
"Pork and beans! I've got you there!"

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	10
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	3
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	3
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	3
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodgrass. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sothoran.	5
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	5
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	2
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	1
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	1
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	8
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	3
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	1
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marple-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	3
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	3
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 134th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppes. London.	10
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	2
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	1
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	2
92.	The Bible: Is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ishabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	10
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	2
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. E. Brown.	1
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll. 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett. 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage. 8 pp.	1
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg. M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin. M.D.	3
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	10
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Flake.	5
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off.
As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
Cloth	50
" and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diagnosis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts. Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Snakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True. Orthodoxy False. 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species. (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	36 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuesbach. 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Creeds of Life.	2 00
Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religious Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc. Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidel's Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 770 cuts, Principles	3 40
" 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples' All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, & Parturition without Pain.	4 50
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	25
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntaxma, Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete, Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels and Thinkers.	4 50
Bennett. $3.00, $4.00, and
The Champions of the Church, Bennett.	4 50
$3.00, $4.00, and
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason. M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marple Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
&
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
&
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 28. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, July 14, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. M. J. Savage of Boston said, in a recent Sunday-school address, "One of the first things you ought to teach a child is to be a skeptic."

A MAN who sits in a comfortable seat in the cars and talks earnestly to his companion on the welfare of his soul while tired shop girls and ladies stand up, needs some kind of conversion himself.

COL. ROBT. G. INGERSOLL has stirred up a hornet's nest in California with his lectures. Six clergymen made him the subject of their sermons on a single Sunday. He has since been lecturing in Nevada.

THEN put your shoulder to the wheel,
And roll it on, my lads.
Hurrah for that old dollar piece,
That Dollar of our Dads.

—Inter-Ocean.

It is said of a very respectable old historic parish in Connecticut, that they starved their minister, and are now about to erect a splendid monument to his memory. He "asked for bread and they gave him a stone."

GEN. GARIBOLDI and his friend, Prof. Frandina, have become contributors to the Bradlaugh-Besant defense fund. This shows that the heart of the old hero is on the side of mental liberty and the freedom of the press.

THE Rev. Dr. Quinn, a Professor in Preston Catholic Seminary, Louisville, and a very popular preacher, has been suspended by his Archbishop for drunkenness and other misconduct. He went on a long spree, visiting many saloons, associating with loafers, and finally appearing in a police court.

THE Rev. S. Miller Hageman has been induced to leave his church in Brooklyn, E. D.—the Union Tabernacle—a part of which condemned him because they thought he partook of the heresies of his uncle, the Rev. Mr. Miller of N. J. The church is divided; a large portion will follow him to Lyceum Hall, which they have rented for him to preach in.

THE Congregationalist says that "a person, in the course of some remarks in a prayer-meeting, having several times observed that he should never forget the dying words of his brother, the pastor suggested that it might be well for him to repeat them, whereupon, with some hesitation and scratching his head, he said that they had slipped his mind."

WHEN a certain Lady Rolle refused, soon after her husband's death, to let the hounds go out, a learned sergeant at law asked Chief Justice Tindal whether there would be any harm if they were allowed to do so with a piece of crape around their necks. "I can hardly think," said Sir Nicholas, "that a piece of crape is necessary; it will surely suffice if they are in full cry."

THE London News contains an account of the sentence of Richard Marsh, an ecclesiastical agent or sub-clergyman—a clerk in holy orders—to twelve years' penal servitude, for seducing his wife's sister, who had a child by him. He learned she had some money, and, threatening to tell the world of the intimacy between them, compelled her to give it nearly all to him. It was shown that he had also seduced several other young women.

SEVEN hundred Mormon converts arrived here from Europe last week. They are the result of the labors of twenty Mormon missionaries for several months in the continental countries of Europe. They are from the lowest portion of the peasantry. Though healthy and robust, they showed few signs of active intelligence. They have gone on to Salt Lake City, where they will doubtless serve a good purpose as religious muddills.

A young lady who had some idea of marrying a young parson asked advice of the venerable widow of a clergyman. The old lady said: "If you ever marry a minister, marry one who in an emergency has enough of the grace of God in his heart to go from the pulpit to the kitchen and pare the potatoes for dinner without growling." A woman who draws such a matrimonial and ministerial prize as this ought to be willing to go into the pulpit and take her turn at preaching when emergency compels.

IN Colorado there is a Methodist church whose members are all women. They have a balance in the treasury, and are laboring for the conversion of a lot of men. There are a good many other churches in this country in little better condition. The sister element makes up the bulk of the churches, and without it the churches and the preachers would soon go to the dogs. In Europe females make up the principal part of the worshippers at the holy shrine. When the women get their eyes open to see it all as it is, the churches will go down.

THE latest religious wrinkle in Toronto is the holding of "full dress prayer-meetings." They take place twice a week at the houses of the wealthier members of St. James' church. The guests come in full evening costume. For about an hour the parlors are vocal with prayer and praise, after which cake and conversation are introduced. The meetings are said to be exceedingly genteel. The Rev. Mr. Rainsford, who was last Summer conspicuous at the Tyns Gospel Tent in this city, is credited with being the originator of this novel style of religious service.

"GANDER-PULLING" was the chief sport at a recent church festival at Waco, Texas. The Sunday-school Superintendent succeeded in catching the bird and dragging off its head. The game consists in riding on horseback under the gander, which is securely tied by the legs at such a height as to require considerable dexterity in the person who reaches for the squirming head of the poor creature. The more the gander writhes and wriggles, the greater the shout which the church people send up when the Superintendent or any other man carries off the prize.

A CHURCH COME TO GRIEF.—The Church of the Holy Savior, Episcopal, on Madison avenue, has prospered very badly. It is deeply in debt, with no possibility of being able to pay. The rector, Mr. Abraham B. Carter, has been forced to seize upon the organ, the altar ornaments, the communion plate, the furniture, etc., to help pay the debt of $15,000 which the church owes him. The entire indebtedness of the church is about $100,000. A pretty bad condition for the Church of the Holy Savior to get into. It is to be feared the Holy Savior takes little interest in it.

AN Iowa clergyman and his wife quarrelled and parted. Somebody advised them to read "Betsy and I are Out." They did so, and at once became reconciled to each other. Hereafter Carleton may append to his poem, after the manner of the patent medicine makers, the following "certificate" from the clergyman: "My Dear Sir: I can never be sufficiently grateful to you for your kindly advice in relation to my domestic affliction. I acted upon your suggestion, and it had the desired effect. We are reunited, never again, I trust, to part until the angel of death shall visit one of us."

THE Rev. Alonzo M. May was an Episcopal minister of Iowa who turned Methodist and was admitted into the Methodist ministry. On the strength of the change which he made the Episcopal Bishop of Iowa publicly deposed him "from the ministry of the Church of God," stating as the reason that Mr. May had "renounced the ministry and entered upon secular pursuits." Mr. May thinks this is rather a rough way of putting it, as he considers the branch of the Church in which he is now working fully as much "the Church of God" as ever the Episcopal was, and he is unable to see that in engaging in the work of the Methodist ministry he has "entered upon secular pursuits." He has issued a newspaper statement on the subject.

THE Hindoo pariahs throughout British India continue to endure the contempt, which, for ages, the other castes have thrown upon them, but in the French territory of Pondicherry they have united, five thousand in number, in an address to the Government, demanding the same rights as the Brahmins. "We drag after us," they say, "the heavy chain, not only of bodily slavery, but of moral slavery. We are regarded as impure beings, not only essentially unclean in our natures, but as cursed by a contaminating power which communicates itself by touch to any one encountered." The petition concludes by demanding that the children of pariahs shall be admitted into the College of Caliv-Soupraichetty on equal terms with the sons of Brahmins, or that an especial college shall be founded for them, where the instruction shall be the same.

THE case of Mrs. Besant and Charles Bradlaugh is attracting an extraordinary amount of attention from the English press. All the papers that reach us from abroad are full of comments and statements affecting this remarkable trial. The London Times goes out of its way in a law report to pay some extravagant compliments to the ability and eloquence of Mrs. Annie Besant. She was the chief figure in the trial, Bradlaugh's part not being very prominent. The London press is unanimous as to the utter absurdity of the prosecution. The Times, Standard, Daily News, Post and Spectator agree as to the unwisdom of a prosecution which increased the sale of an objectionable book from 500 per annum to 125,000 in three months. They likewise coincide in the opinion that the book is a bad one, and that the verdict was inevitable under the law. Frankly, there seems to be a good deal of hypocrisy in the position assumed by the English press in this matter. All its writers seem to think that the book should not have been suppressed and that the law is absurd; but out of deference to the supposed prejudice of their readers on so delicate a topic they do not find fault with the law, but with the police authorities, whose duty is to enforce the law. The spectacle of the Chief Justice of Great Britain bitterly condemning a prosecution, which is perfectly valid under the law, while, at the same time, upholding the law, in which curiously absurd position he is sustained by the press, is, to say the least, anomalous and queer.—Graphic.

THE N. Y. Graphic says: The Ritualistic movement in Great Britain has of late developed a feature which is about to engage the attention of Parliament, and which will be found more difficult to treat than the matter of postures, vestments, church furniture and the like, which has been so productive of agitation in the Anglican Church. Hitherto the High Church and its opponents have been chiefly exercised over what might not unreasonably be considered the mere cultus or outward forms of religion. Now, however, the public morals are alleged to be at stake. An organization called the "Society of the Holy Cross" is said to have issued a book to be used as a manual for "ritualistic priests" in receiving confessions. Its sale is confined to the clergy, and it is said to contain questions designed to be put to children which cannot fail to stimulate precocious passions, and point out the way to vice to the innocent and unsuspecting. The outcry raised against the book and the persons who use it, is very bad. In the press the book is denounced as calculated to deprave public morals. Already, it would seem, it is considered a disgrace for a young lady to attend the churches where there is a clergyman who employs this book. What appears to be most noticeable in the expressions of loathing and contempt which the manual has called forth is that nothing whatever is said of a nature hostile to "confession and absolution" as such. The cause of the discussion and the result of the commotion cannot fail to furnish matter for an interesting study of English social and ecclesiastical life. The following is from the London Times upon this subject: That with which we have to deal is an avowed attempt to establish confession as a rule, and to apply it to every detail of life. A priest is to interfere in every household, to direct a wife in the discharge of her duties to her husband, children in their relations to their parents and their school-fellows, girls in their relations to their mothers, their fathers, and, at length, their lovers, and so on through every delicate relationship. The bloom is to be rubbed off every modest flower of womanly, manly, and youthful feeling by the introduction of the hand of a confessor into the most secret recesses of the heart, and there are to be no two human beings in the world, not even a husband and a wife, without the eye and the authority of a priest between them. If this society cannot be suppressed among the clergy, rough times may be expected for the Church of England. The public take a comparatively languid and contemptuous interest in the disputes raised by the Ritualists on points of ceremonial. But if, as now appears, Ritualism means the inculcation of habitual confession, with all its consequences, Mr. Mackonochie and his friends must go, or the Established Church must go with them.

Events of the Week.

A CENTURY plant is in bloom at the Aquarium.

A HEAVY fire occurred at Del Norte, Col. Two blocks were burned. Loss $200,000.

THREE men were buried alive at Omaha by the caving of a bank of earth where they were digging.

O'LEARY failed in his attempt to walk 520 miles in six days. He made 471 miles and was much exhausted.

A CHILD was run over and killed by a Third avenue street-car. The driver was arrested and exonerated.

A ROYAL lode of lead, copper, silver, and gold is said to have been struck in Milan, N. H. It may be a big sell.

JOHN HERRIGON had his right arm chopped off close up to the shoulder in a planing machine in Brooklyn.

THE police force made a raid last Saturday night upon several gambling and disreputable places, and arrested 150 persons.

THE plague has broken out in Persia. In the town of Resht daily deaths from twenty to thirty. A regular exodus is taking place.

DEPREDACTIONS are still committed in Texas by bands of Mexican Indians. Orders have been issued to the military to pursue them across the frontier.

A TORNADO passed over Westfield and Chicopee Falls, Mass., last Monday, by which a paper-mill, several houses and barns were blown down, trees torn up by the roots, etc. A few persons were injured.

TWO LITTLE girls, Rosa Smith, aged six, and Maggie Leon, aged eight, while playing on the roof of a five-story building at 345 Madison St., fell to the ground. Rosa was instantly killed and Maggie pretty badly bruised.

JOHN GORHAM and his son Charles, while fishing, were drowned in the Hackensack river. The boy fell in and was sinking and called for help; his father, though unable to swim, jumped in to rescue him, and both sank together.

WE have enjoyed very pleasant Summer weather. In some parts of the West the mercury has risen to ninety-six, but it has not been uncomfortably warm in this locality. Frequent showers keep vegetation in a flourishing condition.

THE war against the dogs has been prosecuted vigorously here. More than three thousand canines have been caught and drowned. Lively scenes take place at the dog-pound. Many dogs are redeemed by their owners, men women and children.

A DESTRUCTIVE hail-storm passed over a strip of country a mile wide, south of Watertown, N. Y., stripping the leaves from the trees and ruining the crops. Hail-stones were nine inches in diameter, and many exposed cattle were left bleeding in the fields.

THE Russo-Turkish war is pressing on, making history. The Russians with their large army are marching on towards Constantinople. A Turkish camp captured, and the town of Tirnova surprised. Roumania, it is thought, will take a hand, and also cross the Danube.

TROUBLE is threatened with the Indians of Idaho. Chief Joseph is uprising, and it is not impossible that serious difficulty will ensue. Several Indians attacked a train guarded by Col. Perry, and ten soldiers were killed. It is charged that some of the Government agents have fallen short of performing their duty in carrying out Government obligations.

A TORNADO passed over the lively lumbering village of Pensaukee, Wis., twenty-five miles north of Green Bay, last Saturday evening, by which three lumber-mills, a flouring-mill, a large brick hotel, and every house in the place but three were in two minutes blown to pieces. Eight persons were killed and two are missing. Several others badly wounded. The tornado continued south fifteen miles in a track eighty rods wide, to the village of Coullardsville. Seventeen houses were blown down. Total damage, $300,000.

Career of Religious Ideas.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

CHAPTER VI.

VALUE OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS AND SACRED BOOKS AS AUTHORITIES.

Hopeful and glorious are the times when men can exercise the right to speak and publish the truth.—TACITUS.

The application of criticism to the Bible in the same manner that it is applied to other literary works is of recent date. The wonderful erudition of German scholars has yielded astonishing results in this field, and exalted criticism itself to the rank of a science. Most English and American theologians dispute their method, and maintain that dogmatic theology is the only means by which truth can be ascertained. They receive the Bible by unthinking and indiscriminating faith.

If the Bible is of human origin, it is subject to the canons of criticism, like other human efforts; if from God, the fact that it was revealed through the human mind and for human understanding makes it at most but a higher degree of human effort, and hence subject to the rules by which all such efforts are to be judged. The assumption and dogmatism of those who would introduce the Bible as supernatural into a natural world are fast meeting the disrespect they deserve.

Subjected to this criticism—judged by human expedients—what is the result? Historically, the Old Testament is a collection of all the books extant in the Hebrew and Chaldean languages up to a certain period. These were believed to have been written by inspiration, by the Jews and Christians; the apocryphal portion being of later production, and not sacred.

Of the number of books in the Old Testament there is diversity of statement. Josephus makes twenty-two—the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet; others make twenty-seven; the Talmud is not certain of twenty-four; the number now retained is thirty-nine. In different manuscripts the order in which they are placed varies, although their general arrangement is very old. The Apocrypha was at first only an addition to the Alexandrian version, and was first regarded as a whole by the Protestant. Luther arranged the books in a manner to please himself.

The Bible is interesting as being one of the earliest written books, and hence preserving the oldest forms of thought.

Who were its authors? Moses is said to have written the Laws; and it is certain that there was no literature before the school of Samuel. Critical acumen has determined that the four books referred to Moses, and perhaps Joshua, were written in the age of Solomon; Judges and Samuel still later; and not until the eighth century before Christ were the oracles of the Prophets inscribed. After the exile, Ezra and Nehemiah wrote new books of their own, and perhaps glossed those already extant. The Pentateuch was completed about the time of Josiah; the prophetic portion some time after Nehemiah; the heterogeneous Hagiographia was slowly accumulated as new Psalms were written and new prophets prophesied, and about the close of the Persian period became permanently arranged. Well knowing the story of the miraculous restoration of the corrupted text to be a fable, theologians adhere to it for want of a more plausible explanation. That the priests preserved the national record is probable from their known office in other nations, and the character of the books themselves. Thus preserved, they slowly accumulated during ages not characterized by activity of thought. The most ancient mention of the Old Testament collection was made 130 B. C., by Jesus, son of Sirach, but he does not declare it complete. Josephus enumerates twenty-two books, and places its conclusion in the time of Artaxerxes Longimanus. As the Jews regarded themselves as a sacred nation, everything pertaining to them, even their records, were sacred (Ex. xix., 6), and they regarded all their writers as divinely inspired. This was their earliest belief; but later, with the greater activity of thought, they began to have doubts, and were conscious of the departure of inspiration. They had no means of drawing the line between the inspired and uninspired writings. Malachi, as the last of the Prophets, closed the glorious era of inspiration, according to the current belief, yet Jesus, son of Sirach, deserves the title of Prophet far more than many of those who are canonized. With the first Temple the spirit of inspiration departed, according to the Talmudists.

The present Old Testament was by no means the only collection; there were others equally venerated by their possessors. The Samaritans received only the writings of Moses, whom they regarded as the only great and true religious teacher directly inspired. The Alexandrian canon rejected the apocryphal books, adding them as an appendix. To obtain a clear idea of the text preserved, the books rejected and lost must be considered. Mention is made in the preserved sacred writings of other books equally valuable of which not a vestige remains. These are the Book of the Wars of Jehovah, Book of Jasher, Book of the Constitution of the Kingdom, Solomon's Three Thousand Proverbs, Solomon's Three Thousand and Five Songs, Solomon's Works on Natural History, Book of the Acts of Solomon, Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel and of Judah, Chronicles of King David, Books of Samuel the Seer, of Nathan, of Gad the Seer, Prophecy of Abijah, Book of Shemaiah, Book of Jehu, History of the Book of Josiah, Sayings of Hosea, and a Second book of Lamentations. These represent a mass of revelation equal, if not superior, to that which has been preserved. The most fortuitous circumstances determined the loss or preservation of these books—the whim of a priest; the accidents of war; the caprice of the possessor to change, mutilate, or destroy. Knowing this, well may it be asked now it is possible to be guided by a revelation one half of which is lost. Nor are we assured the lengthy list of titles of books irrecoverably lost embraces a tithe of those books which have not even left a recorded name. Yet this collection was received in its various versions by Jesus and his followers as sacred and authoritative. The New Testament writers do not appear to have had the least idea that they were writing sacred books. They gave plain narratives of events, or simply letters to the churches, which were slowly gathered into the collection known as the New Testament. Apostolic fathers rarely cite the apostolic writings, only three vague allusions being made to them, and their mention of the Evangelists is equally uncertain. They allude to the Apocryphal Gospels in the same manner as to the genuine. In the time of Justin Martyr, who died one hundred and sixty-six years after Christ, the Gospels were not regarded as sacred writings. He mentions them as "The Memories of the Apostles," and receives books now lost and rejects many now regarded as holy. Scarcely ten years later, Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, refers to them as "The Scriptures of our Lord," showing the slow growth of the belief in the sacredness of the miscellaneous writings, and preparing the way for their collection. The first alluded to was in the possession of Marcion, and consisted of the Pauline Epistles and the Gospel of Luke. It was made in Pontus, and brought to Italy under the title of the "Gospel," or the "Apostle." About the beginning of the third century the extension of Christianity brought forward all the writings relating to the subject from their ignoble obscurity, and the principal teachers quoted them as authorities. While the three great leaders, Irenæus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria, agreed in receiving the four Gospels, the Acts, thirteen Pauline Epistles, First Epistles of Peter and of John, and the Apocalypse; the first received the Second of John; the second, the Epistle of Philemon and of Jude; the third, Hebrews, and quotes apocryphal Gospels—as that of the Egyptians—in the same manner as he did the true. The idea of the sacredness of the writings had gained strong hold, and Irenæus speaks of the "Divine Scriptures," and as being "perfect, since they are dictated by the Logos of God and his Spirit." He, in unison with Tertullian and Clement, thought the Holy Spirit dictated the words to the writers, and founded this claim on the internal evidence of the writings, the character of the writers, and tradition. They were satisfied with this test; but its worthlessness is made apparent by their not agreeing among themselves on the position of many of these books—a failure more clearly manifested by an examination of the early Fathers. Who should be a better Judge than Origen? yet he rejected Hebrews, James, the Second Epistle of Peter, the Second and third of John, and Jude, receiving as inspired the Shepherd of Hermas and the Epistle of Barnabas. Eusebius regarded the Epistles of James and Jude, the Second of Peter, the Second and Third of John, as disputed; and as spurious, the Acts of Paul, the Shepherd, the Apocalypse of Peter, and the Institutes of the Twelve Apostles. The Apocalypse of John and Hebrews were regarded as genuine by some and spurious by others. It would be interesting to know on what evidence the judgment rested.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER. NO. VIII.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I wish, first of all, to state that I did not, in my last letter, assert that any institution or individual was of a Christian character, until I had examined the very best accessible authorities on the subject. I did not follow traditions or newspaper items. Neither did I reckon any one a "Christian because he was born and reared in a Christian country." Throughout this discussion I have stuck rigidly to the terms of our propositions, and to the standard definitions of words.

You remind me of a class of men who rejected John because he did not eat and drink like other people, and then rejected Christ because he did eat and drink like other people (Matt. xi. 16-19). You have contended that the framers of the Constitution must have been Infidels, because they expressed no Constitutional partiality to any form of religion, and you have insisted that Franklin was an Infidel, though his writings abound in religious sentiments, though he declared himself a "Protestant of the Church of England," and a "sincere lover of social worship," and though he made a motion for daily prayers in the very Convention that brought the Constitution into existence. The Constitution is unsectarian; but it is not irreligious. Immediately after its adoption, Washington and Adams, with no precedent to press them to it, made annual Thanksgiving Proclamations. I repeat, then, the language of Judge Story, that none could hold Christianity in more reverence than the framers of the Constitution.

In your last letter you show several individuals in a false light. What authority had you for saying James Smithson was a "Freethinker"? None whatever. As I have said already, the circumstantial evidence is all the other way. For instance, he graduated in the University of Oxford, at a time (1786) when that institution conferred no degree on anybody who was not a member of the Established Church (See Am. Encyclopedia, Art "University"). Where is your proof that he was a lying hypocrite at that time, or that he changed his views afterwards?

I cannot find that Robert Dale Owen had much to do with the establishment of the Smithsonian Institution. Neither Johnson's nor the American Encyclopedia mentions his name in that connection. It was the Hon. Richard Rush who prosecuted the claim to Smithson's bequest, before the British government. Prof. Joseph Henry—a most estimable scientist and Christian—has been at the head of the Institution ever since 1846.

Peter Cooper "is not one of your kind." He would scorn the idea of being a disciple of "Tom Paine." Unsolicited, he offered the Great Hall of the Union to the services of the Evangelical Alliance in 1870—all free of charge. He addressed a letter to the Delegates, wherein he said that "Christianity is in reality a true science of life"; "that he (the godly man) is guided by that great principle that controlled the life of Christ," and much more in the same vein. Did Mr. Cooper ever offer his Hall to an Infidel Convention? Did he ever say that Infidelity is in reality a true science of life? No. He accepts the Bible as the inspired word of God. He belongs, therefore, to my side of the proposition under discussion.

Ezra Cornell, the founder of the University that bears his name, was a Quaker. The other leading benefactors of that institution—Hiram Sibley, John McGraw, Dean Sage, Henry W. Sage, President White—are all thorough believers in the Christian religion. I got this information from Messrs. Henry W. Sage, 67 Wall street, A. B. Cornell, 16 East 42d street, and H. W. Sibley, 21 Courtlandt street. Nor is Cornell University conducted on the godless principle. There are prayers in the chapel every morning. Mr. Dean Sage's donation was made expressly to furnish the students with "Evangelical preaching," as Mr. Sage himself put it, or with "lectures on general theology by divines of different denominations," as the American Encyclopedia expresses it. Prof. Felix Adler is not "wanted" there any more. So you see that Cornell is in no sense "an Infidel institution."

The same may be said of the London University. I was surprised to see you laying any claim to it. I would like to see your assertion backed with some proof.

You are hardly better as a Bible critic than as a delineator of character. You regret that I did not take more trouble to harmonize the conclusions of modern science with the teachings of Scripture. That reconciliation is by no means impossible. There is no conflict between the Bible, rightly understood, and Science, properly so called. But it is as undesirable as it is impossible to reconcile the Bible with every whim, vagary, and balderdash, that every scribbler persists in calling science. If you are disposed to read in that line, you have access to such works as Kurtz' "Bibel und Astronomie"; O. M. Mitchell's "Astronomy of the Bible"; Chalmers' "Astronomical Discourses"; Hugh Miller's "Testimony of the Rocks"; Dana's "Manual of Geology," 1875, pp. 765-770; Dawson's "Nature and the Bible"; Hitchcock's "Geology," 1853, pp. 284-315; Duke of Argyll's "Reign of Law"; McCosh' "Christianity and Positivism"; Morris' "Science and the Bible"; Mozley's "Bampton Lectures on Miracles," 1865; Winchell's "Doctrine of Evolution," and "Reconciliation of Science and Religion," and many other works of the kind, with which everybody ought to be familiar.

You show an inclination to dispose of some Bible characters by calling them "myths." Are you not aware that the "mythical theory" is going out of fashion among the "thinkers" of Germany? That little critical farce is about played out. What has shown in a book called "Historic Doubts Relative to Napoleon," that the mythical theory would apply to Buonaparte with just as much force as to Solomon, Daniel or Job. Why, Sir, there is as strong a probability that Thomas Paine was a "myth" as there is that Moses was. The accounts of his life are very "contradictory." His career was full of "inherent improbabilities." Nobody knows to-day where his reputed remains are! Prove that Paine was not a "myth," and I will show by the same process of reasoning that the prominent characters of the Bible were no fictions.

The critics who believe that the book of Job was written by a Hebrew, are not all as old as you say. Many of them have lived until quite recently; and several of them are still living. Your distinction between the book and the name of Job looks more like a loop-hole than anything else. What is Job apart from the book? Who thinks of Hamlet without the play? As the book of Job was well known among the Hebrews many centuries before Christ, the book and the man must have always gone together in the Jewish mind.

I am afraid you have not read the work of that eminent scientist, Sir Isaac Newton, entitled "Observations upon the Prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse of St. John." It is the product of the same mind as the "Principia." A diligent study of it might modify your views of Daniel's date and real existence.

You say Solomon's sin did not consist in his many marriages? Have you forgotten that it was unlawful for the Israelites to marry "strange," that is, heathen wives? Have you not observed that Solomon is said to have "sinned by these things" (Neh. xiii. 26, 27)? You are certainly not ignorant of the fact that David himself looked upon his adultery as an "evil," a "sin," an "iniquity" and a "transgression" (Pss. xxxii. and li).

You stick to what Dr. Smith, Classical Examiner in the University of London, calls "the vulgar objection" in regard to the Hebrews "borrowing" from their Egyptian masters. Dr. Smith adds: "The word 'borrow' should be 'ask.' There was no promise or intention of repayment. The jewels were given for favor (Ex. xii. 36), as well as fear; and they were a slight recompense for all of which the Egyptians had robbed the Israelites during a century of bondage" (Old Testament History, 1869, p. 153). Perhaps the word "stripped," employed in the Douay Version, corresponds with the original better than "spoiled," in the present sense of that word.

You are still unable to distinguish faith from "blind credulity." Faith is trust in that which is trustworthy—credence of that which is credible. It is confidence in reliable testimony. It is "evidence of things not seen," in the same way that Le Verrier's computations were an evidence of the existence of Neptune before it had been discovered.

You say incorrectly that the word "faith," occurs but once in the Old Testament. It is to be found at least twice in King James' Translation (Deut. xxxii:20; Hab. ii:4); and the word so rendered in these passages appears more than twenty times in the Hebrew Scriptures (Taylor's Hebrew Concordance). There is nothing like being accurate, Mr. Bennett.

You have said more than once that Palestine contains no relics of an ancient civilization. Your informant is some "Great Unknown." In rebuttal of Mr. "Great Unknown's" testimony I will cite the authority of that celebrated scholar, traveler, antiquarian, and educator, Dr. Edward Robinson. As late as 1852 he found in Jerusalem "beveled stones," "viaducts," "aqueducts," "fortresses," "ancient arches," "massive ancient chambers," and many other "remains of antiquity" (Biblical Researches in Palestine and in the Adjacent Regions, Boston, 1857, vol. iii. pp. 161-263). Thus, in spite of the depredations of the Infidel Mohammedans, something still survives to attest the former existence of an advanced civilization.

Just as I expected! You give the "bloody shirt" another shake. You reiterate the usual accounts of ecclesiastical persecutions and oppositions to science. Let us look at the facts of the case:

1. The Greek Church has never arrayed herself against learning and science. Dr. Draper exonerates her in these words: "It has always met it (science) with welcome. It has observed a reverential attitude to truth, from whatever quarter it might come" (Conflict between Religion and Science, 1875, Preface).

2. Protestantism has never disfavored the progress of science. This, too, Dr. Draper admits (ibid.). A few individuals may have shown it some dislike; but no Protestant denomination has ever taken measures to obstruct its advancement. On the contrary, Protestants have given, and given munificently, of their time, means, and influence, to establish institutions of learning, and to diffuse knowledge among the masses. It was the knell of the Reformation that awakened science from her lethargy. Dr. Draper says that "modern science is the legitimate sister—indeed, it is the twin-sister of the Reformation" (Conf. bet. Rel. and Sci., p. 353). He should have added that, Jacob-like, Science was enabled to come forth into the light of day by clinging to the heel of the Reformation. The twins have been most thrifty and intimate ever since.

3. The only organized opponent to science has been the Roman Catholic Church. Now, I am not a member of that Church. I cannot accept all her dogmas. I disapprove of her policy in many respects. But there were circumstances that, to some extent, extenuated her faults and crimes:

(1) Catholic opposition to science was more an error of the head than of the heart. Prof. Huxley admits this in one of his Lay Sermons.

(2) There has always been, as there is to-day, so much poor stuff passing under the misnomer, "Science," that suspicion, and shy acceptance of it, and that only after close scrutiny and careful sifting, is quite excusable. There may be wheat in the pile on the threshing-floor. But that is no reason why everybody should be required to gulp it down with "blind credulity"—bran, shorts, chaff, cockle, thistle, smut, and all.

(3) Even through the Dark Ages, the Catholic Church kept in existence "Schools," where the human mind was made strong by a thorough discipline. The intellect of Copernicus and Galileo was no sport of Nature. It was the natural product of a mental training that had been continued when Science was at its lowest ebb.

(4) Before, and especially since, the Reformation, the Catholic Church has done a great deal for Science. Huxley does not hesitate to say that the Jesuits were the "best school-masters" of Descartes' day (Lay Sermons, p. 321). The American Cyclopaedia says of the Benedictines: "During the middle ages they were the great preservers of ancient learning, and assiduous cultivators of science and art, copying and preserving the classics, the Scriptures, and writings of the early Fathers. For centuries they were the principal teachers of youth in their Colleges and Schools" (See Articles, "Benedictines" and "Library"). We must not forget that Copernicus, Galileo, Pascal, Columbus, Descartes, and a host of other eminent philosophers, lived and died in the Church of Rome. Read Sir David Brewster's "Martyrs of Science," and you will find that Galileo, Tycho Brahe, and Kepler received encouragements from several ecclesiastics. The great life-work of Copernicus was printed "at the entreaty of Cardinal Schomberg (Draper's Conf. bet. Rel. and Sci., p. 168). Galileo received permission from the Pope to publish his discoveries. And when his book appeared, it was attacked more fiercely by the philosophers than by the theologians. The mathematicians said Amen to the verdict of the Inquisition (Chambers' Biography, London, 1855, p. 9).

As a matter of course, you told us about the destruction of the Alexandrian Library. I am glad you did; for you thereby gave me an opportunity to tell the whole truth about that unfortunate affair. Julius Caesar was the first to set it on fire. He burned more than a half of it (Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science, pp. 21, 108). It was next dispersed by Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria. He destroyed less than the remainder of it. He was "enjoined" to do it by the Emperor Theodosius (ibid., pp. 54, 103). Its destruction was completed by Amrou, Lieutenant of the Khalif Omar. John Philoponus—a Christian scholar—interceded for it, but in vain (ibid. p. 103). Gibbon gives the details. But these salient facts are sufficient. They show that the Christians burned the Alexandrian Library once, and that the Infidels burned it twice. The Infidels, therefore, burned far more of it than the Christians.

It was to be expected that you would also go over the story of Hypatia and Cyril. I will not reply in your style, and say Hypatia was a "myth." I will admit that her treatment was most disgraceful. But the motive was not the extinguishment of science, but the removal of a woman who was supposed to be too intimate with Orestes, prefect of Alexandria, and who, as it was imagined, alienated his affections from the Archbishop (Smith's Classical Dictionary). It is notorious that the most accomplished women of the period between Socrates and Cyril were courtesans (Lecky's History of European Morals, vol. ii, pp. 308-314). Be the truth as it may about Hypatia, it is plain that the object aimed at in her massacre was not the extermination of science.

I trust the foregoing remarks will do something to correct the Infidel catechism. I protest against the customary lumping of all Christians, and saying they are opposed to science. This is true of only one of the three grand divisions of Christendom. Would it be just to say that all Infidels are "terrible," and hostile to learning, simply because the French "Freethinkers" instigated the "Reign of Terror," and suppressed the University of Paris? Would it be right to say that all skeptics are licentious, because the freethinking "Free-lovers" wish to abolish marriage? Certainly not. On the same principle it is wrong, outrageously wrong, to say that the Christian religion is hostile to science, when there is only one species of it so.

But have scientific men never persecuted one another? Have they, too, not resisted scientific innovations? They certainly have. It was as scientists more than as mere theologians that Copernicus' and Galileo's contemporaries condemned the heliocentric theory. They stood up in defense of what science had hitherto taught. They made their great mistake in supposing that science is ever absolutely correct, infallible, and unchangeable. When Harvey announced the true theory of the circulation of the blood, the doctors were the last to welcome the discovery. When Jenner gave vaccination to the world, the doctors were the tardiest to appreciate and commend it. When Cotton Mather was trying to introduce inoculation in New England, who opposed him with all their might? The doctors again (Sparks' Am. Biography, vol. vi, p. 314)! Who are to-day more hateful to each other than the different "Schools" of Medicine? But the doctors have always been regarded as scientific men. When Franklin announced his discoveries in electricity, Abbe Nollet did all he could to bring discredit on them. (Parton's Life of Franklin, vol. i, p. 292). Did Newton give his great ideas to the world without opposition? No. Even such eminent scientists as Hooke and Huygens persecuted him. Newton himself used that very word, "persecuted" (Brewster's Life of Newton, revised by Lynn, 1875, p. 51). How the engineers fought the improvements of George Stephenson! Huxley is out of humor with Prof. Owen because he denies that the Ape is possessed of a "posterior lobe," and a "hippocampus minor." Prof. Owen's offense is indeed a grave one—ignoring the infallibility of Prof. Huxley! But a "liberal scientist" should not lose his temper under any circumstances (See Huxley's Evidences as to Man's Place in Nature, N. Y., 1863, pp. 133-8). Clergymen are not allowed to cross the threshold of Girard College. So it seems that Infidels are not always so mighty "liberal" after all. They, too, can set up proscriptions and interdicts whenever they get the chance.

The greatest enemies of Science and Art are Science and Art. The footman opposed the horseman; the horseman opposed the stage-coach; the stage-coach opposed the steam-engine. Slow transit has always been an enemy to "rapid transit." The Telegraph has always been a subject of contention and litigation. Every great improvement has sent a multitude into bankruptcy. The car of Progress, as it moves along, ruins many a trade, impoverishes many an industrious workman, and crushes to the earth many a handsome fortune. How many a poor Jennie did the spinning-jenny throw out of employment! Thus the motives for showing indifference to Art and Science are not all religious by any means.

The progress of Civilization is inevitably slow. Science, like the Church, must arrive at the Heaven of her purity and triumph "through great tribulations." She must get rid of her dross. As the iceberg breaks from the Northern shores, and floats southward, cold, creaking, imposing in appearance as it goes, resisted now by surface, now by under currents, in the meantime, however, melting gradually away, until at last it disappears, leaving a small deposit on the Newfoundland banks, so the Human Mind detaches from the shores of the boundless Unknown, now an "hypothesis," and then a "theory," which is borne, often slowly, and through many resistances, toward those latitudes where bulky error vanishes, and where only the residuum of Truth remains. These modern speculations, erroneously termed "science," are only icebergs. They are vast in the dimensions of their pretensions. They seem bright—with borrowed light. They may wreck the bark of many a weak one's faith. But the Christian insists that it would be unwise to build a house on any of these icebergs. He believes, moreover, that their destiny, for the most part, is—disappearance. But he will be among the first to accept the modicum of truth which, it is hoped, some of them will leave behind.

I will now submit the case to the reader. I have endeavored to show that the spirit of the Scriptures is friendly to genuine Science; that believers in the Bible have given to the world almost all its institutions of learning, libraries, museums, discoveries, and inventions; that only one out of the three grand divisions of Christendom has offered systematic resistance to science and learning; and that even the Catholic Church has done infinitely more for both than any Infidel organization that was ever formed. I know that my work is incomplete. Many things have been left unsaid. But it is to be hoped the reader will take these scanty outlines as prompters to a more thorough investigation of the subject.

Yours very sincerely, G. H. HUMPHREY.

By others' faults, wise men correct their own.

Our Florida Letter.—No. 8.

A friend said to me not long since, "I am waiting to see one favorable word for Florida from your pen." I replied, "I am a truth seeker, writing for a TRUTH SEEKER, and trying my best to tell the truth. I consider the State to-day, as far as new settlers are concerned, one grand experiment. Its resources I believe to be unlimited, and its climate as near perfection as possible. There is the Jacksonville Agriculturist which contains each week letters from all parts of the State, from which one can get a very excellent idea of what can be done here, or at least what has been done in the last few years.

But while I have had no desire to puff the State I have most earnestly wished to be able to present some of the little disagreeables that render life almost unbearable. I have never yet seen the mention of anything unpleasant in any of the various published letters that are to be found in almost every Northern paper. In fact it is as fashionable now to have a Florida correspondent as it is to have a foreign correspondent. And it is very curious to notice the unvarying eulogies that are heaped upon this State. Now, there is a dark side to every picture, and this has been so persistently ignored that people on coming here are often times so sadly disappointed that they will not even remain long enough to satisfy themselves that there is anything pleasant, but return full of disgust and indignation. First impressions are not always correct, and new countries, like new faces, may sometimes repel at first sight. But as we come to know more of them we find there is a deeper meaning hidden, and that there are undeveloped sources of beauty and utility that we never dreamed of on the first acquaintance or at first sight. Among the many annoyances that every one should be prepared to encounter are to be reckoned fleas. I have seen Northern people worried almost into a fever by these terrible pests. They exhaust one, and, most of all, distract one's attention from any particular object. I have been trying for the last three months to read one of Carlyle's works. This reading required the utmost concentration, and all attempts have been failures, as much so as would be the struggle to sit quietly in an orthodox prayer-meeting with a hornet's nest for a chair cushion.

Then this is certainly the dirtiest place on earth. Two baths and two changes daily are required, at least, to maintain any degree of tidiness. If in humble circumstances, and obliged to be one's own washerwoman and laundress, the wear on the physical energies is something terrible. To keep clear of pests and dirt requires nearly all the time, and leaves one too exhausted to be in condition for anything else. I do not want to see tidy Northern women subjected to all this.

An important question in a well-regulated house is the food; at least it is in our house. We have a Christian neighbor, however, who doesn't take this view of it. He always pronounces an elaborate blessing at table, but he always omits to provide a dinner. Under this economical mode of managing his wife died last December. It is really an exhausting task to provide a variety for the table here. "Oh," says some one, "but you can have everything sent from New York if you have means." Humph! a wise person will stay in New York and eat his good things, and not run down to the Equator just for the sake of having his goodies sent to him there; and people of means don't come to Florida to live. And it is the class of people who would come here poor to settle that I am aiming at.

I know little of farm life in New England or the West. This may be a paradise compared to it. And I say to all who have a clear two thousand dollars to invest, Come to Florida; and by economy and work you will in time secure a fine home and a good income. But don't expect perfection here; and don't look for anything in the way of lectures or literary entertainments or Liberal societies; all these are as far off as the orange grove, which one sees in an incipient state now, and which may have many an evil hour—a freeze or a die-back—between it as it now stands and as we picture it in our mind's eye, in all its golden perfection and beauty. It's as uncertain as an insurance company or a modern savings bank—that is, during the year of its growth. And when I see an intelligent wife wearing out her life in this slavish existence, and denying herself so many of the comforts of life, I am only doing my duty in sounding the note of alarm, which is: Don't come without means! Men say: "Lovey, after five or six years we will have a nice income and will be able to travel and enjoy ourselves." And then, if I am near, I just get round by the other ear, and I whisper: "By that time, 'Lovey,' you will no longer possess the capacity for enjoyment, and some other 'lovey' will appropriate the fruit of your misspent years." Money is good, but, obtained at the expense of health and strength, it becomes evil.

I'm of such a practical turn that I don't take much stock in prospective fortune, any more than I do in prospective heaven. To starve and pinch to-day that I may enjoy a feast to-morrow, to suffer and be patient in view of a heavenly reward—bah! I like not such sophistry; I prefer to equalize things, and scatter the heaven and material comforts over each day of my life.

By the way, some of our new settlers, after scratching about in Florida sand for a year, and finding themselves not equal to the raising of a bushel of potatoes—in fact, after discovering that they are good for nothing under heaven—suddenly find the way for overcoming all financial difficulties. They immediately devote themselves to diligent study of commentaries and take to preaching. Now I think of it, this plan must have been in operation at the North for a long time, in a quiet way. I was on the point of giving Florida credit for this discovery, but as I can recall so many northern ministers who are good for nothing under heaven, I think it must be a very old principle revived for the present occasion.

We have a man in this region who has successively been united to three different orthodox organizations. He wanted to be sure he was right, and as each had a different way of opening the pearly gates, and securing for its votaries the freedom of the celestial city, he thought he would go the whole figure and be on the safe side. He has now become dissatisfied with the whole thing, and says he will sell out his three experiences for five dollars. Was there ever such generosity and prodigality known! Another case of "three in one." As one such change of heart is considered beyond all price, what must three be worth! If I was inclined to be godly I should jump at such a chance, because it's just as reasonable to buy your conversion as to hire your praying done. Would that mankind could only realize what a crime they are committing when they barter their birthright—to think and reason for themselves—for a miserable mess of theological pottage! DI VERNON.
Lakeside, Fla.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 28.

Great Jehovah, are there not many statements made in thy Bible wholly at variance with the laws which govern the Universe, which are opposed to the observation and experience of mankind and are wholly beyond the range of possibility?

Is it not a mistake that there was never a rainbow until after the flood, about five thousand years ago? Is not the rainbow produced by the rays of the sun falling upon mist or drops of water, and has not this result been produced as long as there has been a sun to shine and drops of water to fall? Thus, was not the rainbow as really "set" in the clouds five hundred thousand years ago as five thousand?

Is not the statement that Moses and Aaron changed rods into snakes, dust into lice, all the water in Egypt—including the great river Nile—into blood, that they produced frogs in immense numbers, as well as locusts, etc., etc., very greatly exaggerated or wholly untrue?

Can it be true that the water of seas and rivers by certain motions or ceremonies made by men, could part and stand up like walls while millions of men and cattle passed over without being at all wetted? Is it possible for water to act in any such manner?

Could a man or any other being by any possibility arrest the motion of the sun, the moon, the earth, or any of the globes or spheres that revolve in space? Are not the motions of the stars and orbs that exist throughout space wholly independent of all persons and all beings? Are they not controlled by forces or laws which cannot be interfered with or set aside?

Is it not untrue that any day since the morning of time was several hours longer than all the rest of the days that have passed?

Has not the evaporation of water from the surface of the earth, and its descending again in the form of rain and dew, been a process that has been in operation as long as the earth has had existence? Is it not untrue, then, that there was ever a period of three years and over when neither rain nor dew fell upon the face of the earth?

If such a drouth had taken place, would not every tree, every shrub, every plant, every animal, and every human being inevitably have perished from the earth long before the end of the term?

We would enquire, too, how the vapor for so long a period arising from the earth and never descending, could be sustained by the atmosphere? Is it not a well known law that the atmosphere is capable of holding up but a limited amount of water when in a state of vapor, and when that limit is reached the water must fall back to the earth again? Would it not be absolutely impossible for one month, even, to pass away without rain or dew descending to the earth? If from certain arid localities the currents of air impel the vapor to other parts, must it not of necessity fall somewhere else? When the atmosphere is surcharged and full, like a sponge, is it not impossible for it to hold more?

Is it not impossible for man, who is adapted to live upon the surface of the earth and to breathe the atmosphere which weighs fifteen pounds to the square inch, to be taken up above the atmosphere and live even for the space of five minutes? If the pressure of the atmosphere was thus suddenly removed would not his blood-vessels be immediately ruptured? Would not blood burst from the lungs, the mouth, the nostrils, and other parts of the body, and death inevitably ensue?

Deprived of the oxygen which the atmosphere contains, would not a man die as surely and as quickly as a fish when removed from the water?

Is it not impossible for a man weighing one hundred and fifty pounds, more or less, to overcome the power of attraction which draws all bodies to the earth, so as to rise into the ether above the atmosphere?

If this possibility could be accomplished, would not the intense absence of heat in the upper regions—reaching a degree of cold, as scientists estimate, of four or five hundred degrees below zero—render the existence of human life utterly out of the question?

Could an animal fitted to live upon the earth exist for five minutes, even, when there is neither oxygen nor warmth?

Is not the story of Elijah, then, or of any other individual, going bodily up into the upper regions and continuing to live, utterly impossible?

Is it not clear that the person who wrote the story of Elijah knew nothing about the laws which govern human life or that he did not care how extravagant he made his statements?

Is not the story of Jonah being three days in the stomach of a fish, deprived of all possibility of getting air to breathe, equally absurd and impossible? If a man were to be so incarcerated, would he not die for want of oxygen in a very few minutes?

In this view of the case, is it not absurd to retail such stories of utter impossibilities to intelligent people and demand that they shall be believed?

Is not the story of three young men being thrown into a superheated furnace, without receiving the slightest injury, of a similar character? Is it not utterly impossible for the human organism to be brought into contact with the intense heat of several thousand degrees and remain uninjured for one moment?

Are not the laws governing life as imperative as any that have existence? As these laws are from the highest power, are they not absolute, and is there any other power capable of setting them aside?

Are there not many statements made in the newer part of the Bible equally devoid of possibility? The existence of a person in human form, having body and organs, living by the food he ate and the air he breathed, and coming into the world without a natural father, we have already considered, and come to the settled conclusion that a being never existed on the earth that had not a natural father, and who did not originate by the same process that inaugurates all animal life. Is it not positively true that there cannot be a son without a father with parts and organs like himself?

The earth being a globe or sphere, is there a mountain-top in Syria, or any other point, from whence a person could view all parts of the world? Owing to the convexity of the earth, is it not utterly impossible for the sight to follow its surface more than a limited number of miles? Was not the person who wrote the story of Jesus "beholding at one view all the kingdoms of the earth" ignorant of the fact that the earth is a round ball, and that a very limited portion of it can be seen from any point?

Is not the statement that the sun was shrouded in darkness for three or more hours not only improbable but impossible? Is not the light generated by the sun too intense to be destroyed for a single moment?

Is not the avowal that the earth was so shaken that it was rent, and the graves opened, the dead bodies rejuvenated and enabled to walk into Jerusalem and hold intercourse with their former friends, wholly incredible?

If by any possibility such events could take place, is it not likely that more than one man would know something about them? Would they not have been referred to by all the historians of the time? Would saint Matthew have been the only one to have spoken of it?

Is it not entirely impossible for a body from which life has departed to be reanimated and again made a living being?

While there have been numerous cases of suspended animation, when life appeared to have departed, and resuscitation has been effected, is it not just as impossible to reanimate a corpse absolutely dead as it would be to animate a log or a bank of clay?

Are not, then, the stories about Elijah and Elisha bringing dead persons to life wholly incredible? Is not the story of Lazarus and others being made to live again after they were fully dead an equal departure from the truth?

Is not the statement that Jesus made a journey of eight thousand miles, to the centre of the earth and back, in the space of thirty-six hours between his burial and his resurrection a very remarkable story?

As the interior portion of the earth is intensely hot, and greatly compressed by the pressure of surrounding matter, would it not be very difficult for a being to get through it at the rate of two hundred and twenty-two miles an hour, allowing not a moment to be passed at the centre?

If such a journey were possible what could be gained by making it? Was any good accomplished by thy Son making that trip to the centre of the earth?

Is not the statement a silly one, based upon no reliable authority whatever, and one which only simple people can believe?

Not wishing to be too prolix in enumerating all the extraordinary statements made in the Bible, we would ask, are there not hundreds of a character similar to the ones here alluded to, which requires a great amount of credulity to accept, and many impossibilities to overcome to be true?

Were not these stories written in an age of the world when it was the custom to minister to the marvelous in human nature, and to detail occurrences which could not possibly have taken place?

May it not be set down for a truth that if thou hast established the laws which govern the Universe thou wouldst not act against thyself and set them aside?

Are these laws not as imperative as thyself, and utterly unable to be ignored or superseded? Would it not be just as reasonable to talk about setting thee aside and superseding thy existence for a brief period, as of setting aside the immutable and irrevocable laws of the Universe which pertain to all forms of life and all conditions of existence?

Is it not far more probable that the many stories and incidents of the character indicated were the product of illy-informed men, and written to amuse or astonish minds still less informed, gotten up in an age, too, when marvels and wonders were the peculiarity of all their literature, than that they were written by thy hand or dictated by thy brain?

Is it possible that the source of all knowledge, wisdom, and truth would descend to the telling of absurd and impossible stories for the sake of increasing admiration for himself on the part of ignorant people?

Are not the laws and forces of the Universe, those denominated natural causes, sufficient for all the results that have ever need to occur? Has a single result of any kind occurred in any portion of the Universe which was not produced by a sufficient natural cause? Is it not wholly needless to introduce supernatural powers or causes into the Universe, even were such a thing possible?

Would not a being of infinite goodness present the great truth of life and of the Universe to the men and women he wishes to benefit, rather than bewilder them with monstrous narratives which could not possibly be true nor do them the least good, merely to excite their wonder and to cause them to think he was a being capable of setting his own immutable laws aside, and of acting against himself?

Is not the disposition plain to be seen, in all the ancient writings of various nationalities, to get up marvels, and unnatural events? Did this trait not arise from deficient knowledge of the Universe and its laws, and a belief in monstrosities and in unnatural and impossible existences?

As men advance in the knowledge of Nature and Nature's laws, of the material and forces of the Universe, that every event is the result of a natural cause, do they not believe less and less in the marvelous, the miraculous and the impossible?

Is not a belief in the unnatural, in the marvelous and the impossible injurious to mankind? and is it not calculated to keep them in ignorance and superstition, depriving the race of much of the knowledge and happiness they might otherwise attain?

Is not the day fast approaching when all the myths, miracles, and absurdities of the past ages of the world will cease to be revered as great truths, and when the practical, vital truths of Nature and of life and of science, will be regarded as of far greater consequence than all the old big stories and impossible narratives of the past ages of ignorance?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Liberal Grove-Meeting on Long Island.

Brother Elisha Hyatt, an earnest Liberal, has fitted up a platform in a pleasant grove on his place in the town of Hempstead, near Merrick station on the South Shore Road, and public meetings are held there every Sunday during the Summer, when the weather will permit. Sound Liberalism is delivered to the audiences, respectable in size and character, which weekly gather there. The Editor of this paper will address the people from that platform in Liberal Grove on Sunday, the 15th. Subject, "The Religions of the World."

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.—Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAINE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

"The native people of Christian Europe, not yet entirely emerged from a state of barbarism, were still clad in garments of untanned skins, and dwelt in huts in which it was a mark of wealth if there were bulrushes on the floor and straw mats against the walls. The sovereigns of Germany, France, and England, lived in cheerless, chimneyless, windowless dwellings not much better than the wigwams of the Indians. At this period the realms of Islam presented a picture of unrivalled culture and magnificence. The Caliphs were living in magnificently decorated palaces, with polished marble balconies and overhanging orange gardens, adapted to the purpose of luxury and ease. Splendid flowers and rare exotics ornamented the courtyards, while fountains of quicksilver shot up in glistening spray, the glittering particles falling with a tranquil sound like fairy bells. From the ceilings corniced with fretted gold hung enormous chandeliers; clusters of frail marble columns surprised the beholder with their precious weights, and the furniture of the vast and sumptuously tapestried apartments was of sandal and citron wood, elegantly inlaid with gold or silver or mother-of-pearl" (Sages, p. 340).

Another source of the present civilization may be traced to the Crusades. These great movements stirred up all Europe—in fact, there was no Europe, for it was by these great enterprises that Europe came into existence. Society underwent a transformation. Not only were the old manners and customs changed, but there was stimulated among men an increased mental activity. Society was awakened to a new life. The old narrow routine in which society had been wont to move was destroyed. Society itself began its new transformations into governments and nations, which, says Guizot, is the characteristic of modern civilization.

Mr. Buckle has attempted to show that Climate, Soil, and Food are the determining influences of progress. Hence it is, that in the march of civilization the priority is unquestionably due to the most fertile parts of Asia and Africa. But although their civilization was earliest, it was very far indeed from being the best or most permanent" (Hist. Civ., vol. 1, p. 37).

But Asia and Africa do not have as good a climate as Europe and America, and hence the higher and more permanent character of the civilization of the latter. There must also be taken into consideration the superior advantages in Europe and America arising from their mineral resources, and the numerous rivers, lakes and oceans which offer extensive facilities for trade and travel. Nature here is gentle in climate and generous in a fruitful soil. In the extreme North it is a struggle for existence to gain one's daily bread. It is a fight for life. Late and early the fisherman and hunter must toil for the food which shall meet his most ordinary demands of subsistence. He has no luxuries, no spare time for study, travel, or general culture. The soil gives but a niggardly harvest, the climate is inhospitable, and mineral resources are limited and unavailable. Nature there is unfriendly, and hence no civilization can arise under such conditions which can compare with that in temperate climates.

Before man can rise in the scale of manhood he must be able to gain his food easily. He must have time for leisure, for study and improvement. But this can never be enjoyed in the extreme North. In the tropical climates food is abundant—it grows without the aid of man; he may go forth and gather it at little cost of time or labor; still civilization is not of a high type there. The hot climate is almost as severe upon man as the cold climate. If the cold climate and barren soil spur the dweller of the North into great activity for his daily food, the heat of the tropics, on the other hand, enervates him and leaves him without activity of either body or mind. Besides, heat and moisture in tropical climates produce rank vegetation, thick, tangled growth and poisonous shrubs and plants, which all greatly impede human progress. In other words, man is unable to overcome Nature, and this is essential to human advancement. In such countries food is produced with but little exertion, houses and clothing are almost superfluous; but here the race always increases with the greatest rapidity. Hence, labor is superabundant and wages correspondingly low. And a legitimate result is monopolies and systems of caste.

"In our temperate climate man is compelled to exert himself more than in the tropics but his effort is not exhaustive and dwarfing to his nature, but tends to expand and strengthen it" (Buckle Hist. Civ.).

In the transitional state from savagery to civilization men as individuals crystalize into society. Progress afterwards consists in the greater mental activity of the individual and the multiplication of the functions of society. Man cannot live alone, nor can he achieve great results when he simply takes a wife and propagates his kind. He needs the benefits arising from social conditions. By united action with his fellows he is able not only to achieve good for himself, but all his acquaintances, whether of mind, morality, or material wealth becomes in part the possessions of society. So, also, do the industries, inventions and gains of his fellows become in part his possessions. Thus in union is strength; and from such union as society represents there is not only strength, but also progressive impulses to higher aims.

In the eighteenth century there sprang up a great deal of Infidelity. Doubt instead of faith possessed the minds of many of the most distinguished men of thought—as Bolingbroke, Berkeley, Voltaire, Hume, Diderot, Rousseau, D'Holbach, Gibbon. Some of the more prominent skeptics, as they were called, rejected Christianity, on the common-sense ground of the incredibility of the Scriptures. But as they had no form of belief or knowledge to substitute in the place of the dogmas they rejected, it was not difficult for the clergy to cover up the doubts and disbeliefs of the skeptics with specious explanations. Something more was needed to break the spell of superstition and arouse the minds of men to thought and action. In the first part of the present century evolution began to unfold the flower of the mind under the form of science. Science has done what skepticism failed to accomplish: it has given Knowledge as a substitute for Faith. It has cultivated intense intellectual habits in modern society, and given mankind a sure test of truth and its method of verification by means of experiment, observation, and deduction. Science is inexorably hostile to supernaturalism. It knows nothing of a super-nature; to it, all is Nature, and Nature is all. From prehistoric times the race has been under control of ignorance and fear, but science has given knowledge, and knowledge has given courage.

And we may be allowed to say just here, that Infidelity is no longer synonymous with mere disbelief. Infidelity is not the mere rejection of the churchly doctrines, but it is synonymous with the knowledge and acceptance of the general truths of science. Liberalism affirms that knowledge is power, that science is truth, freedom, and happiness.

"It is safe to say that no one thing has ever contributed so much to the benefit of the race as the transition from the speculative to the experimental method. The ancients were prevented from creating science by a false intellectual procedure. They believed they could solve the problems of the Universe by thought alone. The moderns have found that for this purpose meditation is futile, unless accompanied by observation and experiment" (Lewes).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Heresy of the Lord's Prayer.

"Our Father who art in Heaven,"—

A proposition inclining to heresy, since God (if there be one) is everywhere. Nay, we find in this expression the leaven of Socinianism; for here is nothing at all said of the Trinity.

"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;"—

Another proposition tainted with heresy; for it is said again and again in the Scriptures, that God reigns eternally. Moreover, it is very rash to ask that his will may be done; since nothing is or can be done but by the will of God.

"Give us this day our daily bread,"—

A proposition directly contrary to what Jesus Christ uttered on another occasion: "Take no thought, saying what shall we eat? or what shall we drink? . . . for after all these things do the Gentiles seek. . . . But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."—A rash proposition, which compares man to God, destroys gratuitous predestination, and teaches that God is bound to do to us as we do to others.

"Lead us not into temptation,"—

A proposition scandalous and manifestly heretical; for there is no tempter but the devil; and it is expressly said, in St. James' Epistle: "God is no tempter of the wicked; he tempts no man."—Voltaire.

The "New Faith."

B. L. STODDARD.

If you and I, good reader, had been born in Rome during the latter part of the third century, when Christianity, although not yet the established religion, had gained a multitude of adherents, and was destined to replace the rapidly-declining religion of Greece and Rome; if our parents and friends had chanced to be devoted worshippers of Jupiter and Apollo, Minerva and Ceres, and had therefore entertained an intense antipathy to the new faith which threatened to destroy the old cultus which was so dear to them; and if (to add one more to these suppositions) you and I had become persuaded of the mythical character of all the old legends of our pagan religion, and had embraced the purer faith of Jesus as modified by the liberal Paul and the philosophy of Greece, I fancy we should have been subjected to very much the same sort of remark, expostulation and entreaty, with which we are so well acquainted to-day. There would have been the same outcry made against destroying a long-established faith which had been handed down the ages from revered ancestors; distinguished, gray-headed believers in the old religion would have been pointed out, and we should have been asked if we dared to set up our inexperienced minds in opposition to their wisdom; the same arguments would have been adduced in favor of the genuineness of the old myths; the same expostulations would have been addressed to us to spare the peace of mind of all who were reposing in the old faith.

Finally, when all this had failed to convince us that we were in error, some deeper thinker would have taken us aside and said significantly: "You are right. These priests are half of them feigning to believe what they do not, and the rest are bigoted and deceived. You are right. The old legendary stories of the gods are untenable. I agree with you. The new faith is more rational, is purer, and may, at some future time, prevail. But be sensible. Here is our old faith still held by millions who love it devotedly and who believe in it fully. All over the civilized world are the beautiful temples reared for the worship of our gods. The whole wealth of our unrivalled art is dedicated to the production in life-like marble of the ideal forms of the deities of our fathers. Now, if you Christians succeed, you will overthrow a vast system of worship; you will make our gorgeous temples with their splendid rituals worthless; you will take the significance out of our beautiful sculptures and paintings; you will rob the groves, the rivers, and the fields of their presiding divinities, and you will thus distress the minds of thousands who cling tenderly to the old faith." And then some shrewd business man would have taken us aside, and said with a cunning smile: "Will it pay now for you to speak out boldly against the errors of our old religion? Will it prove any advantage to you to urge the adoption of this new faith? Look at your business, which will be wholly ruined if you come out openly as a Christian! Your old friends will desert you. Just be content to hold your peace. Entertain what views you will in secret, but, for policy's sake, keep silent!"

Now these words, which might have been with perfect propriety addressed to the convert to Christianity in the third century, are precisely similar to those which the majority of radicals, in the nineteenth century, hear daily from their friends in the old faith. At the present day, Christianity, as a religious system, is on the wane just as surely as the pagan religion was sixteen hundred years ago. Its many positive excellences, its moral purity, its teachings of brotherhood, charity, and forgiveness, remain, and will ever remain, as permanent blessings to mankind. But its deification of Jesus, its claim to being the prophesied faith of faiths, its supernatural stories, its more-recently manufactured creeds with their revolting dogmas and inconsistencies, and its worship of an infallible Church by the Catholic wing, and its worship of an infallible Bible by the Protestant wing, all these are surely and steadily crumbling away. The two great weapons, Scientific Discovery and Historical Criticism, are rapidly dispersing the clouds of error and superstition, as certainly as the sun scatters the mists of the morning. In fact, the amount which has already been accomplished in this respect, during the last fifty years, is simply amazing. The real change, which, unperceived by the orthodox, has actually taken place in their own ranks, is also most surprising. We stand, then, in very much the same attitude as the world did during the gradual breaking up of the errors of the old pagan religion.

Now, as then, the question comes home to every man who sees that he cannot honestly hold the old faith: "What shall be my course of action? Shall it be open, or shall I hold my opinions in silence?" The temptation is great to adopt the latter course. The "New Faith" is not yet sufficiently pronounced, nor so generally received, as to make the open adoption of it and the rejection of the old an easy matter to most Liberals. It is true, they are not exposed to the terrible persecutions to which early Christians were subjected, and which the Christians themselves repaid with interest on coming into power—the age has gone by for that. Still, in England and in this country, the radical labors under great disadvantages. There are being enacted every day scenes of heroic adherence to truth, which are none the less noble for being little known. Let me cite two examples out of many for whose authenticity I can vouch:—

A young man, who had lately worked his way painfully through college and seminary, with the hope of preaching the gospel, who had made repeated and severe sacrifices for this purpose, and who had actually entered successfully upon his work in an orthodox church, saw, after some years of closest study and agonizing doubt, that he could not conscientiously continue in the old faith, preaching the orthodox dogmas. It was a terrible trial for him. Relatives were dependent upon him for support. He had just reached that for which he had given the best years and all the enthusiasm of his life. But he saw that if he would be honest, he must relinquish it. What could he do to earn his livelihood? He had now no knowledge of commercial pursuits. He had admirably and laboriously fitted himself for a position which he found he could not conscientiously occupy. Some pursuit was found by him in which he could, with strict economy, maintain himself. Accordingly, he resigned his pastorate, gave up his handsome salary, and went quietly to the humble place which he had chosen—a true disciple of honesty and truth.

Another example: A young man recently occupied a very prominent and responsible position in a business house. He had long cherished the desire to be a preacher, and to address to men from the pulpit words which should incite them to a purer life. So soon as he had gained a sufficient sum of money to support for a time those dependent upon him, he left the flattering prospects which a continuance in business offered him, and began his theological studies. It is the old story. He found it impossible for him, as he ascertained the truth, to subscribe to orthodox tenets, and with noble honesty, despite the agony which came from the rude awakening from life-long, cherished dreams, he gave up the profession for which he had sacrificed so much.

A score of similar cases might be cited, and such acts are doubtless repeated in one way or another constantly. There are heroes and heroines in every walk of life, who are making sacrifices daily, because they are faithful to the truth which is in them. They are unwilling to adopt the too prevalent custom of repeating words in which they have no belief, and, moreover, they are earnestly desirous of helping onward the day of freedom from the narrow, bigoted dogmas which enslave so many minds. The question with them is not, Will it pay me in dollars and cents, or in social position and popularity, to be thus true to my convictions? That question must, for the present, certainly be answered in the negative. But there is a higher motive, that of devotion and loyalty to the truth and hatred of error and superstition, which impels them, not only to reject dogmas no longer tenable, but to aid in ascertaining and disseminating truth and light.

There is, however, one very weighty reason which deters many radicals from proclaiming openly their views. It is that these views are so largely negative. It is that they dislike to pull down, without putting anything in the place of, the destroyed faith. It is their want of a positive system of truth to promulgate. But, in considering this objection to outspoken radicalism, let us remember that the farther we go in philosophy or religion, the less dogmatic and positive we can be. If we see but one point, one side of truth, we are apt to assert most vehemently that we are right, and we alone. But if our vision is extended, if we see more than one side, we grow less positive. Our belief is less narrow and intolerant. In one sense it is undoubtedly true that the more light we have the more we doubt. We see this exemplified everywhere. The quack, acquainted with but one set of symptoms and with no knowledge of all the complicated influences which may affect the disease of his patient, is the most positive of men. The broad, cultured physician is much less certain.

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

Every man must patiently bide his time; not in idleness, in useless pastime, or querulous dejection, but in constantly accomplishing his task, that when occasion comes he may be equal to it. The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, without a thought of fame. If it comes at all, it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after. It is very discreet and troublesome ambition which cares so much what the world says of us; to be always anxious about the effect of what we do or say; to be always shouting to hear the echoes of our voice.

IRON is the symbol of civilization; gold represents wealth. The value of the former in the arts can be measured only by the progress of the present age. In its adaptations and employments it has kept pace with the scientific discoveries and improvements. Hence the use of iron indicates the advance of nations. Iron is worth more in the world than all other metals combined. We could dispense with gold—it ministers largely to luxury and refinement, but iron represents the honest industry of labor. Its use is universal. There is no "California" of iron; it is found in great abundance in every nation of the earth. From this fact we discover how indispensable Nature deemed this metal to the education and development of man.

DESPONDENCY.—What right has anyone endowed with an ordinary share of intellect, and blessed with a respectable share of good health, to despond? What is the cause of despondency? What is the meaning of it? The cause is a weak mind, and the meaning is sin. Never despond, friendly reader, for one of the first entrances of vice to the heart is made through the instrumentality of despondency. Although we cannot expect all the days and hours to be gilded by sunshine, we must not for mere momentary griefs suppose that they are to be enshrouded in the mists of misery, or clouded by the opacity of sorrow and misfortune.

Letter from U. K. Booth.

DETROIT, MICH., June 12, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed herewith I send you three dollars (principal and interest) for THE TRUTH SEEKER for this year's subscription, which, I am sorry to say, I have neglected until long overdue; and as apologies do no good, I will not annoy you with any, but simply send the money.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am happy to say, you are pushing on in its good work with an energy, ability, and momentum worthy of its noble name. Your "Interrogatories to Jehovah" are a most masterly arraignment of that mythical being, whose origin can be traced to a dead Egyptian chief, and whom the priests have so long used as a cat's-paw to rake out the money from the pockets of the poor, deluded, toiling millions.

Your discussion with the Rev. Humphrey, I am pleased to see, is rescuing and bringing to the surface, in a triumphant manner, the facts in relation to our noble old Infidel fathers, on whom the priests had already commenced the process of Christian metamorphosis, and who, I fear, but for your opportune, masterly, and successful efforts, would soon have been slided over (as the serpent does its prey before swallowing it), preparatory to canonizing them ere long as St. Paine, St. Jefferson, St. Franklin, St. Washington, St. Adams, St. Allen, St. Henry, St. Lincoln, etc., etc. Why, Sir, it is a fact easily proved by, and logically deduced from, the New Testament scriptures, that Jesus Christ himself was an Infidel of the most radical kind, and was put to death not in accordance with some great plan of salvation, but for Infidelity to the teachings of Moses, by the bigoted Jewish priesthood in obedience to the command of Jehovah to Moses (Deut. chap. 18). And yet some three hundred years after his crucifixion, or A. D. 325, this same Infidel Jesus, in accordance with the time-honored customs of pagan Rome, at the hands of the heathen Roman Emperor Constantine and his three hundred and eighteen ignorant bishops at the boisterous and turbulent Council of Nice, received his apotheosis and was canonized as the "Only begotten Son of God," notwithstanding in the Old Testament scriptures we are informed that God had other sons, who, straying away from the royal paternal household, came down to earth, "saw the daughters of men that they were fair," became enamored of and fell in love with those rosy-cheeked country girls, "and they took them wives of all which they chose," the result of which was a progeny of "giants and men of great renown" (Gen. vi. 24).

It is also a fact that the Devil even, before his "period of infancy began," (as the Rev. Humphrey says of Paine), which period dates back to that little "onpleasantness" in the rebellion first heard of in an old Greek fable; next reported by John in Revelation, chapter 12, and subsequently embellished and enlarged upon by the poet Milton in his "Paradise Lost," was held in high favor and esteem by Jehovah—being Premier. And it is a fact well known to the student of history, that during the various changes and developments of national religion which took place through the long, weary ages of the past, this same Devil has alternately been worshiped as God and Devil, under different appellations, names, or terms, almost without number; and that the "Beelzebub" of the ancient Jews, and the Christians even of to-day, and whom they characterize, denounce, and vilify in their "sacred scriptures," as the "Prince of Devils," is none other than the "Baal"—the highly-developed and refined God of the Phœnicians, that noble old people who gave learning and civilization to the world thousands of years before the Jews had an existence as a nation, and the sails of whose commerce whitened every sea, lake, and river, long before the Cæsars reigned in Rome, or the Cleopatras and Pharaohs ruled over Egypt. "Baal," says Chamber's Encyclopedia, "is a Hebrew word signifying Lord, owner, master. By some it was supposed to mean King of the City; by others, King of the Earth." And for a long time it was the name which had been given to Jehovah himself (Hos. ii. 16). It was the same as the Beelzebub, or Beelzebub, of the Philistines, to whom a magnificent temple was built and dedicated at Ekron. Hence, Baal, the god of the Phœnicians, and by them called "Melchert," "Melkrat," or "Melchraft," etc., and who was also the god of the Chaldeans, the renowned astronomers of the Old World, as also the old learned Syrians, became incorporated into the Jewish and Christian scriptures, and by them appropriated as their Prince of the Devils.

From the above it will be seen that God and the Devil have shifted offices and exchanged titles in serving the nations times almost without number. And in view of this fact, it has well been said that "Religion is only superstition in fashion, while superstition is religion out of fashion." Nor is the still more startling fact less true, that the priests' hell, and heaven, have undergone similar topsy-turvy transmutations. So that the cool, shady retreat of the Christian's heaven has been stolen, or manufactured, from the cold hell of the old Scandinavians by this same system of religious metamorphosis, while the heaven of this old superstitious people has been appropriated by the thieving priests, and by them manufactured into the hot hell of "fire and brimstone." Says a learned writer on this subject: "It is a curious fact that in most of the old Cymric and Gaelic neighborhoods the notion still prevails that it is very unfortunate to bury the dead in the northern side of a church. The southern side of graveyards is sometimes overcrowded, while the north side is vacant. Dr. Lee, a good authority," remarks this writer, "says it is an old tradition that the north is the region of Demons. In some parishes of Cornwall," he adds, "even to the present day, when a baptism occurs the north door of the nave opposite the font is always thrown open, so that (as it is believed) the devil that is cast out of the christened child may retire to his own place, the region of the north."

"Hell," continues this writer, "means freezing; it is the name of the Scandinavian goddess Hel, whose abode was an ice-house, in which the wicked were believed to lie in frigid torpor; while in the belief of the same race the good went to a region in the South called Sindri, a word identical with cinders. Our tropical theology has reversed the theories and made Paradise a shady retreat with four cool rivers flowing through it, while the other region has the cinders. But the ancient faith of a race at all isolated survives long, and so the most orthodox tribes of this country mentally people the North with demons, and bury their dead toward the regions of heat. This Christian 'petilarcy' on the old Scandinavians, and this inextricable mixing up of superstitious nonsense, is doubtless due to the fact stated in Chamber's Encyclopedia, namely, that 'after the introduction and diffusion of Christianity, the ideas personified in 'Hel' gradually merged, among all the races of Northern and Germanic descent, in the local conception of a Hell, or dark abode of the dead.'"

Hence, Mr. Editor, the intelligent readers of the Humphrey-Bennett discussion are not at all surprised to see your reverend gentlemanly opponent under the magical "Aggremento-presto-change" machinery of the Christian world—that has turned out so many lies since the time of the notorious interpolator Eusebius—employing the same motive power to transform into good, genuine, Simon-pure Christians such men as Thomas Paine, Jefferson, Franklin, Adams and all those noble old Infidel Fathers, who framed and adopted a constitution that struck the death-blow to superstition and gave to this favored land the noblest, grandest, sublimest charter of human liberty that has ever rested on mankind with one common benediction: and which made no war on religion but by the "withdrawal of the troops"—thus leaving it to stand on its own merits or fall by the weight of its own falsehood and corruption—left religion to make war upon itself. And while the warfare has been carried on among the different Churches and creeds—and their name is legion—with deadly strife and malignant hate, the radical, freethinking element all over the land has had a chance to take root and grow and thrive and flourish until the priesthood in the midst of their belligerent camp-fires have awoke with frenzied surprise, only to find a nation of Infidels confronting them on all sides, with no Christ, no Jehovah, and no God in their Infidel, godless Constitution to call to their hopeless and despairing rescue. Grand and sublime old Infidel Fathers! Already has the torch of liberty, by them lighted, sent up its bright scintillations so high that all nations can read their names emblazoned in characters of living fire among the stars that shine forever in the ether blue. Already is the talisman of fame clustering around their Infidel names with such a golden halo of lustrous light that the Christian priests are reaching out their pirate claws to gather them in as trophies to their waning cause. Notwithstanding for half a century and more their dashing cataract of denunciation and calumny, embellished with the blue flames of burning brimstone and the fire-tipped energies of seething falsehood and scorching hate hurled from ten thousand pulpits, have consigned them to the hottest seat, on the Wall street and in the coal-holes of their gambling, money-making theological hell. But thanks to the kind Fates that enabled the heroes of liberty for the first time in the world's history to catch the wary priests napping. Our Infidel Fathers saw the golden opportunity. They seized it, and the death-knell of superstition, thus struck, was lost in the loud tocsin of freedom, that by them was sounded, o'er ocean, mountain, sea, and plain.

All honor to Thomas Paine and his Infidel compatriots. Their glory walks abroad among the nations like a thing of life and beauty. Their fame is the soul of "Freethought" and in the hands of "free men" has passed beyond the grasp of the Christian priests and beyond their powers of piratical appropriation. Already has it crossed the death's dark river of Christian proscription; climbed up the shining stairway of human thought and human progress; pressed with its hallowed feet the flowery "aisles of immortal life," and with its magic hand above the dark cloud of superstition, hath twined a wreath such as the patriot oft in "dream-land" hath crowned the nations of earth, and the hero of freedom—freedom to body, mind and soul—hath decked the brow of the "Goddess Liberty," where perennial flowers of peace kiss Virtue's fragrant breezes, and rippling fountains of human happiness sing the sweet song of Hope's fruition.

Now, friend Bennett, I trust you will pardon my lengthy letter—I did not intend it when I began, but my pen struck a gait and I let it go. Hoping you will not permit the Rev. Mr. Humphrey to steal away Thomas Paine and his Infidel compatriots and drag them to his Christian den, I will close by subscribing myself your friend and co-worker in the cause of truth.

U. K. BOOTH.

First Response to our Late Appeal.

SAGINAW CITY, MICH., July 2, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: Enclosed find ten dollars, for which you may send me the "Champions of the Church" ($4) when ready; the balance you can place to my credit. How unpleasant it must be to you to be continually appealing to those in arrears to pay up, and not meet with the response you deserve. You recollect you said to me about nine months since, that Liberals were not always liberal. I think you were right. You find a certain class in every community, who are very eager and seem to endorse every new project or undertaking, but they have not got either the moral courage or the energy to contribute anything towards its support. To that class the sooner you stop sending your paper the better it will be for you. I, for one, propose to sustain your paper if it costs five dollars per annum. Probably you might find friends enough who are of my opinion, and thereby discard those whom you have so aptly termed "sponges."

Hoping your friends will rally to your support, I remain, Yours, THOS. L. JACKSON.

Thomas Paine's Complete Works.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER CLAN: Do you realize what a treat is in store for you? If not, let me tell you that I have just received the works of the great and good Thomas Paine, all complete in one large and beautiful volume—the happy thought of our redoubtable and indefatigable publisher, D. M. Bennett. The illustrious author hero himself would be proud, could he awaken from his long last sleep and see himself thus done up in such good shape and style.

No Liberal library is complete, or indeed not really commenced, unless it contains the works of the immortal and gifted Thomas Paine, and I hope orders for this volume will flow in "Thick as budding leaves or rising flower O'er spread the land, when Spring descends in showers."

Only just think of it! twelve books all in one, and such good, sound, sensible books too. Why the beautiful little poem, "Castle in the Air," is of itself worth a dollar. I learned it when a child, but had forgotten many of the verses, and when I read them again in this collection, they seemed like the greetings of some old friend of Lang Syne.

Nor must I forget to say how well I like the terse, condensed biography of our benefactor, Mr. Paine, as written out in this volume in the plain, simple, unique style which we have all learned to know and love so well since the advent among us of the little, bold, fearless and zealous TRUTH SEEKER.

I begin to think it is impossible for D. M. Bennett to publish a work which will not be worth double, if not quadruple its cost to any of us. Well may he call his TRUTH SEEKER Library "Bold Books for Brave Brains." And it is to be hoped his subscribers and readers will appreciate them and him as they deserve. It is but a "drop in the bucket" for each one of us, if we purchase every volume as it comes crisp, fresh and new from the binder's hands to what it would cost us to pay for a seat in the holy (?) sanctuary, and drop our countless offerings into every ubiquitous contribution-box, in aid of we know not what wild, useless or visionary "scheme of salvation" (from what?)

Let us, then, dear brothers and sisters, send our few dollars where we know they will aid in giving light and truth to the world—to D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street, New York, then

"Joy unto ourselves returning
From this perfect fountain-head;
Freely as we freely give,
Shall the grateful light be shed."

Respectfully, ELMINA D. SLENKER.
Lord's Day, July 1, 1877.

LETTER FROM J. MELENDY.

SHAWANO, WIS., July 1, 1877.

MR. EDITOR, Dear Sir: The "Truth Seeker Collection" is gladly received, and is really a very agreeable surprise to us—containing a large collection of the choicest Liberal poems extant, elegantly and substantially bound, and is entirely destitute of the real essence of Christianity, i. e., hatred and revenge. It is truthfully a practical work, which all Liberals will hail with delight. In the publication of this invaluable work you have dealt a terrible blow to priestcraft by clearly showing the way by which their useless and superfluous services can be satisfactorily dispensed with; and also another important step is taken in the cause of humanity, morality, and human happiness. As a poetess, a truthful writer, a moralist, and a real public benefactor Mrs. E. D. Slenker of Virginia stands pre-eminent. May her truthful and fearless pen, guided by her powerful intellect, long adorn the fearless columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER in the same spirit manifested in the "Collection." The extremely low price of the volume together, with its evident adaptability to the urgent needs of the present enlightened age, should very soon place it in the hands of every true Liberal in America.

The Wolcott Grove-Meeting.

To the Liberal Public: This meeting is announced as for Central and Western New York, but Liberals from all sections of the country will be heartily welcome. There are many who reside in Western Pennsylvania and in Upper Canada who can conveniently reach the meeting. The Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg Railroad and all its branches will carry persons at half fare to the meeting. The inhabitants of Wolcott and the farmers about the Grove will entertain most of those who attend free, and arrangements will be made with the hotels for board at cheap rates.

It is some time before the meeting, but at this early day I desire to urge Liberals to make preparations to attend this Convention. It is to be held at a time of the year when farmers have a little leisure and when every one desires some relaxation from toil. From letters received I am sure the meeting will be a large one, but that is not enough. Let us turn out in such numbers from every section of the country as will give some proof that we are in earnest.

A notice of this meeting has already appeared in the leading journals of Central and Western New York, and should appear in every journal in the state that will publish it. And I hereby request every one who may read these lines to have a notice handed to the local editor of the town for publication at once. It will help our cause as well as the meeting. Then do not forget to send your contribution for defraying the expenses of the meeting to Mr. J. M. Cosad at Wolcott, N. Y. Mr. Cosad is a veteran in the army of Freethinkers and should not be allowed to pay all expenses. Those who can not attend should at least send their contributions. There are many able speakers already engaged, and others will be if these contributions will warrant it.

Now, lovers of Truth and Humanity, let us make a grand effort to have this meeting one worthy of our noble cause. Remember the time, August 17, 18, and 19. Please send your name to me if you think of attending the gathering.

H. L. GREEN.
Salamanca, N. Y.

Friendly Correspondence.

T. A. CAPEHART, Polk Patch, Ind., writes: For the enclosed please send me the "Marple-Underwood Debate," two copies of "Ingersoll's Lectures," and five copies of "Design Argument Refuted." I am hardly able to buy the books, and every time I order a book I think it will be the last; but I am continually applied to for Feethought literature. The consequence is, that occasionally we get an addition to our ranks and that, so encourages me that I invest in another book. I tell you, Bro. Bennett, if each Liberal in the land would invest five dollars in books and tracts every year, and scatter them among their neighbors, it would not be long that we would hear men say that their employer was a member of the church, and that he dare not take any Liberal publications. My opportunity for the past five years for ascertaining the minds of the people has been excellent. I find a great many skeptical in regard to the Bible. All they want to set them right is something to read. I find others straight-out Infidels, but don't know that any one is of the same mind; consequently are afraid to speak their minds. The fact is, that I can take ten dollars' worth of your tracts, and at the same time, I can make more converts that will stay so than all the prayer-doers in the country. It appears to me that it is about time that Liberals were waking up and getting to work. Of course the same would suffer by it. One would have to stand the slang and abuse of the clergy, as well as that of a great many of their ignorant and fanatical followers. I will except some, for some treat me as well as I could desire; but there are others, who, were it not for the law, would do to me, as their patron saint John Calvin did to Servetus—give me a taste here of what they pray I may get hereafter, by burning at the stake. There are men here, who say that they would not believe an Infidel on oath. I think we can afford to take that, for they only expose themselves. We always judge others by what we think we would do under the same circumstances; they therefore virtually say that if it was not for the fear of hell, they would bear false witness, and in fact do anything that is mean; and from the acts of some of them (if their religion has any restraining influence over them at present) I believe they tell the truth in that respect. For my part, I am willing to part company with such men, for I dislike to associate with men that I have to watch continually, if they are Christians. I herewith send you my miniature. My phiz reflects but little intelligence, but I am proud of one thing, that is, like Collin's ram, I've a head of my own. Please send me in return, Underwood's photo. Some friends in the country have appointed a meeting with the view of organizing a Liberal Club, and want me to go and assist them. I think then I will get some subscribers, and orders for books.

WM. W. SCHOLLES, Barnesville, Ohio, writes: Enclosed find P. O. order for two dollars, for which please send me your valuable paper for another year. I have been a reader of it, for a little over a year, and I have become so much attached to it that I cannot get along without it. I lend my paper to others thinking that some will subscribe for it. I have not succeeded in procuring any subscribers yet, but I think I will soon, as some have promised me that they would take it as soon as they could spare the money. I will work for your paper and get all the subscribers I can. Barnesville has a population of about three thousand, one-half or more of whom are church members, and but very few are Freethinkers. There are really only about half a dozen outspoken Freethinkers in this town. I know of several here that are liberal enough in their views to read a paper like yours, but will not do it, because they do not want to be talked about. But they will go to church just to be popular, and listen to the priest's nonsense and hear him shamefully misrepresent Infidels and Freethought publications (as I heard a Methodist preacher do last Sunday evening). I shall send for a few copies of the first volume of the Truth Seeker Tracts, as soon as I can spare the money, and put them in circulation. I think that whoever reads them will get their eyes opened. I have been doing all I could to introduce your paper in other towns where it is not known, by mailing copies to liberal-minded persons. I think that a great amount of good can be done in this way. You will think so too when I tell you how I became acquainted with your paper. I don't believe that more than one-fourth of the Freethinkers in the United States ever heard tell of a Freethought paper, and I know I am right if all the towns are like Barnesville. The first Freethought publication of any kind, that I ever saw or heard tell of (except Paine's "Age of Reason," and it was so much misrepresented by the orthodox, that I thought it was not to be read) was a copy of your glorious little paper. It was sent here from the far off shores of the Pacific—from Forest Grove, Oregon, by a friend of mine, Mr. J. J. Parker, who now resides here. I am twenty-two years of age, and unlike some, I have been a Freethinker ever since I was old enough to think, with the exception of a short period when I was about sixteen years old, when during a Methodist revival and excitement, the preacher very nearly induced me "to come to Jesus," and I would have done so if I had had my own way. But I soon afterwards saw that something was wrong in the machinery, and I have been thinking ever since, that your paper should be read by every man, woman and child in the land. I intend to do all in my power to extend its circulation. Wishing you success in your glorious enterprise, I remain your true friend.

Special Notices.

HEALTH TO THE AFFLICTED.—Every form of disease permanently and radically cured without drugs. Terms liberal. Send for circular. Address A. G. HUMPHREY, M. D., Galesburg, Ill.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular, 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk, no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

THE EVOLUTION. No. 10.

Contains Essays on The Religion of Shakspeare, Some American Poets, Rip Van Winkle; a Sun-Myth, concluded, Education in Science, Medical Assistance as a social Function, Ethics of the Positive Philosophy, iv; Scientific Notes, one page; Bacchus the Prophet-God; the Origin of Christianity, first paper; Equality; Review of Morgan's "Ancient Society"; and six other articles of interest.

The Evolution, No. 11, Just Out.

Contains, Municipal Reform; Utah; Social Ethnology; Protestantism and Science; Opium and Opium-Eaters; Review of Spencer's Sociology; Offer of Prizes for Essays on the Labor Question; and a dozen other interesting articles. Terms of The Evolution, $3 per year (26 numbers) $1.50 for 13 numbers, 15 cents a single copy. Address ASA K. BUTTS, Publisher 34 Day Street, New York. 2127

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN, Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. CRAYEN.

Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his Theological Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Thomas's Bust.	Frithingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Poster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greely.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slender.
L. Colby.	Susan E. Wilson.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker	Asa K. Butts.
(full figure).	W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar. Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St. New York.

E. H. HEYWOOD'S BOOKS,

LABOR REFORM, FREE-LOVE, ANTI-TAXATION.

YOURS OR MINE: Explaining the True Basis of Property and the Causes of its Inequitable Distribution. Fortieth Thousand. Price 1 cent.

CUPID'S YOKES: On the Moral and Physiological Aspects of Conjugal Life and Child Production, explaining the Principles and Purposes of the Free Love Movement. Twentieth thousand. Price 15 cents.

HARD CASH: Treats of the Greenback Delusion and demands the Abolition of Usury as the Right of Labor and the Duty of Capital. Twentieth Thousand. Price 15 cents.

UNCIVIL LIBERTY: or the Social Heism opposed to Woman Suffrage, the Political Usurpation of Men over Women. Eightieth Thousand. Price 15 cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by Co-operative Publishing Co., Princeton, Mass.

THE WORD.

A Monthly Journal of Reform.

E. H. HEYWOOD, Editor.

The Word, regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service, favors the abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of Speculative Income, and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth at the expense of useful people. It seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends, and profit, except as they represent work done, and the repudiation of all so-called debts, the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

Terms, 75 cents annually, in advance. Address THE WORD, Princeton, Mass.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.

To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife. 2. Best age for Bearing Children. 3. Shall sickly people become Parents? 4. Small Families. 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife. 6. Celibacy. 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring. 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring. 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child. 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work? 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring. 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain." God's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and, we are fully convinced, reliable. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greeley, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune, is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 18 Eliot street, Boston Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, $2.00 annum; three months, 50 cents. 6t24

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|--------|
| Sexual Physiology..... | $2 00 |
| Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book..... | 1 00 |
| Health and Diseases of Women..... | 25 |
| Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses..... | 50 |

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. Trall, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York. 1f

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - -	$3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - -	4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - -	4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y.

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d St., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $5 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples to Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

Gems of Thought.

THERE have been fewer friends on earth than kings.—Cowley.

THEY are generally better satisfied whom Fortune has never favored than those whom she has forsaken.—Seneca.

AS LONG as love prevails in a house space of the breadth of a sword is satisfactory. As soon as it disappears sixty hand-breadths are not sufficient.—Talmud.

WITH virtue, capacity and good conduct one can still be unsupportable. The manners, which are neglected as small things, are often those which decide men for or against you.—Brugere.

LIFE, whether in this world or any other, is the sum of our entertainment, our existence, our character. The conditions are secondary. In what other world shall we be more surely than we are here?—Chapin.

WHAT is this life but the circulation of little mean actions? We lie down and rise again, dress and redress, feed and grow hungry, work or play, and are weary; and then we lie down again and the circle returns.—Bishop Burnet.

WHOEVER says to me, "Think as I do, or God will damn you," will soon say, "Think as I do, or I will kill you." Let us beseech God to soften these savage hearts, and inspire in all his children sentiments of brotherhood.—Voltaire.

THERE is sanctity in suffering when meekly borne. Our duty, though set about by thorns, may still be made a staff, supporting even while it tortures. Cast it away, and like the prophet's wand, it changes to a snake.—Douglass Jerrold.

EVIL is easily discovered, there is an infinite variety. Good is almost unique. But some kinds of evil are almost as difficult to discover as that which we call good; and often particular evil of this class passes for good. It needs even a certain greatness of soul to attain this, as to that which is good.—Pascal.

WE are born to an inheritance of opinions, right and wrong, and, right or wrong—we cling to them with a pertinacity exceeded by nothing but our attachment to life. The seeds of error, as well as of truth, are planted by the stupid parent in the minds of his unfortunate children, and lucky is the child in whose mind the tares do not choke the wheat before he is able to distinguish one from the other.—Voltaire.

AGAINST slander there is no defense. Hell cannot boast so foul a fiend nor man deplore so fell a foe. It stabs with a word, with a nod, with a shrug, with a look, with a smile. It is the pestilence walking in darkness, spreading contagion far and wide, which the most wary traveler cannot avoid. It is the heart-searching dagger of the assassin. It is the poisoned arrow whose wound is incurable. It is as mortal as the sting of the deadly arrow; murder is its employment, innocence its prey, and ruin its sport.—Sawyer.

LET us plant in our hearts the precious flowers of love, charity and forgiveness, and make the light of a beautiful spirit to shine out radiantly from our countenance; let us each day pluck some flower of thought from the great tree of knowledge, and twine it in the garland of our minds, that it may be an amaranth unfading in hue and undying in sweetness. Let us plant the seeds of beauty everywhere through the windings and avenues of our lives, and make beautiful by our souls' rejoicing the hours of our daily labor and our Sabbaths of rest. Strive always for the good, the true, and beautiful, and life shall be to us a song of joy and bliss, garlanded everywhere with the brightness of beauty.—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

MODERN civilization rests upon physical science; take away her gifts to our country, and our position among the leading nations of the world is gone to-morrow; for it is physical science that makes intelligence and moral energy stronger than brute force. The whole of moral thought is steeped in science, it has made its way into the works of our best poets, and even the mere man of letters who affects to ignore and despise science is unconsciously impregnated with her spirit, and indebted for his best products to her methods. She is teaching the world that the ultimate court of appeal is observation and experience, and not authority. She is creating a firm and living faith in the existence of immutable, moral and physical laws, perfect obedience to which is the highest possible aim of an intelligent being.—Huxley.

POETRY is the record of the best and happiest moments of the happiest and best minds. It makes immortal all that is best and most beautiful in the world; it arrests the vanishing apparitions which haunt the interlunations of life, and veiling them, or in language or in form, sends them forth among mankind, bearing sweet news of kindred joy to those with whom their sisters abide—abide, because there is no portal of expression from the caverns of the spirit which they inhabit into the universe of things. Poetry redeems from decay the visitations of the divinity in man. Poetry turns all things to loveliness; it exalts the beauty of that which is most deformed; it marries exultation and horror, grief and pleasure, eternity and change; it subdues to union, under its light yoke, all irreconcilable things. It transmutes all that it touches, and every form moving within the radiance of its presence is changed by wondrous sympathy to an incarnation of the spirit which it breathes; its secret alchemy turns to potable gold the poisonous waters which flow from death through life; it strips the veil of familiarity from the world, and lays bare the naked and sleeping beauty, which is the spirit of its forms.—Shelley.

Odds and Ends.

WATERMELONS have come in. Watermelon-cholic piece of news!

A KISS on the forehead means reverence. But there is no fun in it worth mentioning.

If you intend carrying women to Salt Lake, the Prophet says: "Bring 'em Young."

"Don't you think, husband, that you are apt to believe everything you hear?" "No, madam, not when you talk."

THE Methodist Conference has sent Rev. Mr. Kittell to Brooklyn—which is appropriate when we consider that they are always having a stew there.

THEY have found the arms of the Venus of Milo. They were wrapped around the Roman policeman's neck, and Mr. Milo is awful mad about it.

"SHALL I have your hand?" said an exquisite to a belle, as the dance was about to commence. "With all my heart," was the soft response.

DEVIL'S SLIDE, Devil's Gate, Devil's Back and Devil's Knee are historic spots on the Union Pacific road. They think a good deal of him out there.

"How Ministers are Killed," is the caption of an article circulating through the papers. You may not have one to kill, but it is well to know how it is done.

A PAPER, speaking of a family who made a fortune out of whiskey, says: "They live on Twenty-third street, in a perfect delirium-tremens of splendor."

A VIRGINIAN accidentally stumbled and fell. A lady, thinking to commiserate with the mishap, observed that she regretted his unlucky fauz-pas. "I didn't hurt my fore-paws," he replied, "it was my knee."

A FRENCHMAN brought two mugs to the milkman in place of one, as usual, and on being asked the meaning of it, replied: "Dis vor te milce, and dis vor te water; an' I vill mix them so as to soot myself."

"You'd better knock the door down! What do you want?" "My dear sir, don't let me wake any of your family; I'm just using your knocker to wake the people next door. I'm locked out, you see; and they've no knocker." Rap! rap! rap!

"THERE's our Jeremiah," said Mr. Shelton, "he went off to make his own living by his wits." "Well, did he succeed?" inquired a friend. "No," said the old man with a sigh, and significantly tapping his head, he failed for want of capital."

CURBAN being angry in a debate one day, put his hand on his heart, saying, "I'm the trusty guardian of my own honor." "Then," said Sir Boyle Roach, "I congratulate my honorable friend on the sang sineure to which he has appointed himself."

HERE's another warning. A man down town refused to stay home after an early supper and help his wife whitewash the back-yard fence, and his black hair turned white in less than a minute. His wife's painful awkwardness with the whitewash brush caused the sudden change.

A LADY was examining some infants' apparel in a dry-goods store on Main street and evidently at a loss to make the selections, when the clerk thought to assist her by inquiring: "Is your baby a boy or girl?" The lady flushed hotly, but replied with ingenuous frankness; "I don't know yet." She was suffered to make her selections without further interruption.

A WILD-LOOKING old man, with a contused nose and an ugly-looking scratch down his left cheek, went into a drug store on Main street last Friday and said to the clerk: "I am going to get set up to-day—cuss me if I don't! Gimme somethin' that'll make me ugly as Satan—whisky, kerosene, anything, so's I can get up courage enough to perfect myself from my wife. Great Scott! I would like ter chaw giant powder, Vulcan powder, rend-rook powder, dynamite, or suthin'! I'd like ter be strong as a steam engine, and I'd make things different in my house. She's wus'n a pirrit!" Said the clerk: "Will you take your oath that you will never tell, if I give you something strong enough to rend the ramparts of the world?" The old man bowed his head and solemnly made the promise. The clerk then gave him a glass of soda, and the man went out to chaw up things.

BILL'S COMPOSITION ON THE WHALE.—A whale is a fish story; a live oil tank 80 feet long, or as big as a meeting house; a graceless animal glutton, with no business in the sea, not being a fish, and his proper place in nature would be at the bottom of a derrier. His jaws are the size of a grocery store, while his gullet is only two inches wide, or no bigger than an alderman's. Of course, he fights nothing of his size, but grazes upon helpless shell-fish and animalcules. You can get the following articles out of him: From his blubber, one hundred barrels of oil; from his bile, fifty pounds of ambergris; knock a hole in his skull and you can dip twenty-four barrels of sperm out of his head. His gums are good to eat, and in the roof of his mouth are fifty hoopskirts and an umbrella shop. He oils himself to slip through the water. The whale is the most selfish of men, and when the female whale wants to speak her mind, she jumps clear out of the water. The whale is not only a coward and a glutton but a great spouter. His eye is no bigger than knot-hole in a barn. Nature made a preposterous thing in making the most useful one, and if she had only built a fire under his tail, Jonah would have had the first steamboat ride.

Truth Seeker Tracts

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	2
2.	Oration on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snoda. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. O. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	5
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	2
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	1
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	1
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	3
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	3
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	1
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	3
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. B. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	2
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	3
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	1
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: Is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	5
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution: from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	5
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10
12.	Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent. off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent. off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent. off; on ten dollars' worth 50 per cent. off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.
Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth.	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Ambery. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccolit.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization; 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diogenes.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records, Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	50
" " Radical Rhymes.	1 50
" " Who are Christians, Deluge, Themselves, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 25
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" " Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	50 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach, 40 and	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" " Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" " Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" " Safest Creed.	1 50
" " Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" " Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Grayes' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" " Biography of Satan.	80
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" " Creeds of Christendom, 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" " Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" " Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation, 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures, 30 and	50
" " etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions, 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" " Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe, 2 Vols.	4 00
" " History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard, p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" " Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" " Principles, 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoble's All Around the World.	2 50
" " Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion, 30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" " Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" " Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" " Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " paper.	1 00
" " Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" " Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, &	4 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
" " Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" " Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" " Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" " New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, 2 Vols., 8vo.,	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers.
Bennett. $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett.	4 50
" " $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions. Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and
IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	25
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
& HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 29. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, July 21, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

GEN. GRANT has been to Homberg, and the Hombergers Homberged him genteelly.

Pur me down as one who fears God, and luv's to ketch trout, pla whist, and ride at a three-minnit gait. —Josh Billings.

MR. BEECHER recently lectured on "Happiness." He said that not one man in a thousand "in an effectual sense," believes in God.

"It is not loud praying which counts with the Lord so much as giving four full quarts to the gallon." —The Rev. John Wise, of Little Rock.

THE Methodist Church at Saratoga Springs is $40,000 in debt, with no prospect of being able to pay. Some of its wealthy men have failed.

NINETEEN times within the last hundred years the Russian forces have crossed the Danube with hostile intent, without including the present crossing.

I FULLY believe in predestination; if a man will drink whisky, and won't work, he is predestined to become ragged, and go to the devil. —Josh Billings.

LATE reports from the seat of our Indian war with the Nez Percés in Idaho are to the effect that there are not troops enough to meet Joseph and his brethren.

PLYMOUTH Congregational Church in Philadelphia is ill. Pastor Whiting resigns. The disease is principally debt, with a complication of minor disorders.

ALL of the thirteen churches which were destroyed in the St. John fire had parsonages either adjoining or near them. In each case the minister's library was totally destroyed.

ONE of our dailies, in speaking of our most fashionable churches being closed on account of their pastors' going off on a lark, says that "the Devil never takes a vacation in the Summer."

THERE is a rumor floating around that one of the most prominent shepherds of Boston will be invited to step down and out on account of some very irregular conduct with one of his ewe lambs.

TERESA WILLIAMS, who was recently baptized and admitted to a church in Hartford, proves to be a thoroughly trained thief from this city. She says: "I whooped in on religion as a matter of biz."

Is it the genuine article of Christianity which they have up in Montreal where they kill each other for dissimilarity of opinion? It must be so, for the only Christian Church followed the same practices five hundred years ago.

THOMAS PAINE and the historic associations connected with his name are called to mind at New Rochelle, his former home, by the fact that a portion of the farm he once owned there is about to fall under the auctioneer's hammer. Sic transit gloria mundi.

A MORNING paper suggests that Potiphar's wife be sent out to Idaho to catch Chief Joseph. Alas! she would not even find a coat to lay hold of, unless it be a coat of paint of many colors. It might be well to tan his jacket, but nature has pretty effectually tanned that herself.

THE Methodist Church in North Adams, Mass., owes $50,000, and the debt threatens to swamp it. A collection was taken up, but was principally in pledges, $30,000 of it being promised by brethren who meant to pay, but who have since failed and are unable to settle. The Church is now worse off than before the collection. There is always some shrinkage of collections that are made up of pledges, but in this case the collection is nearly all shrinkage.

THE Newark Presbytery has practically requested the Rev. Isaac M. See, pastor of the Wickliffe Street Presbyterian Church, to "step down and out." They have "Resolved" that the interests of the Church and of the cause of Christ demand that the clergyman shall separate himself from his charge. His original offense was allowing women to speak in his pulpit, and besides this he claims to have reached perfection, or a high degree of holiness.

"COMPLICATING the accounts," is what they call the offense Brother Baird, of the Southern Presbyterian Publishing Concern, in appropriating to himself $20,000 of the funds designed for the publication of pious books. Baird had a patent for making washing-machines, an interest in a buttonhole factory, and drives other things that had no particular relation to the publication of religious truth than to absorb the money that should have gone in that direction. His resignation was thankfully accepted by the Publication people, who are, under the circumstances, so glad to get rid of him that they let him depart in peace.

A COMPLIMENT TO BEECHER.—When Henry Ward Beecher, at the White House, besought Hayes to retain the Collector of Internal Revenue in Brooklyn, there was present in the Executive office an ex-Congressman from North Carolina named Smith. The President presented the somewhat uncouth statesman to Beecher. "Beecher, Beecher," said Smith, "not Henry Ward Beecher?" "The self-same," replied the ecclesiastical Henry. "Well, I do declare," exclaimed Smith, "I am glad to see you. I never saw you before, but I've read all about you. I appreciate you. Why, sir, do you know that I named my most promising Jersey bull after you."

A REMARKABLE book has appeared in Germany written by one Herr Cobhausen, entitled, "Of the Rare Art of Prolonging Life till 115 Years by the Breath of Young Maidens upon One." The method recommended is based upon the inscription on a monument said to have been discovered at Rome by a Bolonese antiquary, Gommarus. The inscription runs, "To Esculapius and Health, L. Clodius Hermippus, who lived 115 years and 5 days through the breath of young maidens, erects this monument." Hermippus seems to have been a teacher of girls in Rome, who attributed his unusual length of life to the breath of those with whom he was daily associated. And now his hypothesis is revived after the lapse of centuries.

THE wife of a Pennsylvania physician had or imagined a vision, in which she was told that she possessed a miraculous power of finding gold. The husband believed the revelation was from friendly spirits, and they went together to Arizona, where they prospected diligently. At length they disappeared from their hotel, and were away four days. An exploring party was formed, and the couple were found sitting under the pines in the mountains, nearly starved to death. They had deliberately gone out to die of starvation. The man had taken with him into the retreat where they expected to meet death only a four-ounce vial of water, with which he now and then wet his wife's parched lips to ease her famishing pangs. Food was forced on them, and on regaining sufficient strength they explained that, being disappointed in their search for gold, and having no money, they had decided to die.

A DISASTROUS YOUNG WOMAN.—As an instance of what hot temper and rash action can accomplish to ruin a life, an affair that occurred at Sharon, Pa., on the 5th, is one of the best illustrations. A young lady, Miss Kate McGilvery, was out driving alone, and when on State street she desired to get ahead of a wagon. She called out to the driver to turn aside so that she could pass. He was a deaf, infirm old man named Bell, and at first did not hear what she said, but after a second or third call did as requested. Misunderstanding Mr. Bell's delay, the young lady on her arrival at home told her father that the old man had tried to frighten her horse. Mr. McGilvery is very impetuous, and this made him so angry that he started down town to find Mr. Bell. He met him in front of a store, and, without warning, knocked him through the window, cutting his head badly, though not seriously. Mr. Bell was removed to his residence, and his son Richard was so maddened by his father's condition that he determined to punish his assailant. He found him in front of the very store where the first assault was made, and picking up a two-pound brass weight, he hurled it at Mr. McGilvery's head, fracturing the skull. The wounded man died in a few hours. Miss Kate, the innocent cause of all the trouble, has lost her reason, and is now a raving maniac, though her physician has slight hopes that she may recover from the shock. Young Bell is now in custody.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

FOUR women have secured very high prizes in the Cambridge University of London for proficiency in very recondite studies. One of these was won by the daughter of Prof. Huxley, and is for artistic merit. A noteworthy fact is that Prof. Clifford, the well-known Atheist, had the giving of one of these prizes. In obliviousness to all religious distinctions, the colleges in England are beginning to assimilate to those on the Continent. There is not, however, a college in the United States in which Prof. Clifford could receive an appointment. Cornell University would be more likely than any other to accept a man of his advanced views.

INTERESTING FACTS.—Suppose your age to be 15 years or thereabouts, we can figure you up to a dot. You have 150 bones and weigh 125 lbs.; your heart is 5 inches long and 3 inches broad; it beats 70 times per minute, 4,200 per hour, 100,800 per day, and 26,725,200 per year. At each beat a little over 2 ounces of blood is thrown out of it, and each day it receives and discharges over 7 tons of that wonderful fluid. Your lungs will contain a gallon of air, and you inhale 24,000 gallons a day. The aggregate surface of the air cells of your lungs, supposing them to be stretched out, exceeds 20,000 square inches. The weight of your brain is 3 pounds; when you are a man it will weigh 3 ounces more. Your nerves exceed 10,000,000 in number; your skin is composed of 3 layers, and varies from $\frac{1}{16}$ to $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch in thickness. The area of your skin is about 1,700 square inches, and you are subject to an atmospheric pressure of 15 pound to the square inch. Each square inch of your skin contains 3,000 sweating tubes, or perspiratory pore, each of which may be likened to a little drain tube $\frac{1}{16}$ of an inch long, making the aggregate length over the entire surface of your body of 201,366 feet, or a little ditch for draining the body almost 40 miles long.

THERE is more good sense than the old gentleman of foggy trustee boards are willing to admit, in the practice on the part of some of our churches of giving shows and entertainments. The ministers generally tell the young people that they must not go to the theatres or other places of worldly amusement, but that in seeking pastimes they should look particularly for those which can be engaged in without lowering the mind from the contemplation of heavenly things. It is but right that the church provide such entertainments, in order that the young people may patronize them, and thus be kept out of mischief and bad company. The church show business helps, too, in the case of many an exhausted treasury, and yield funds which could not be gained in any other way. It is true that some of these shows are very poor. But they often have a very happy effect in bringing the more genial people of the church together, and if they do no other good, they are worth encouraging on this account alone. The churches which engage to a moderate extent in the show and sociable entertainment business are generally more prosperous than those where the tone of the society is so stately that the people do not know each other.

JOHN SMITH.—Disguised the name may sometimes be, but it is the commonest name throughout all European countries. It does sometimes affect a spelling above the common, and appears as Smyth, Smythe, or De Smythe. It also in England assumes a Latin guise (from ferum), and becomes Ferrier and Ferrys, one of the noble names of England, associate also with a tragedy not noble either in its character or its consequences. In Germany we have the Schmidt; in Italy, the Fabri, Fabricia, of Fabbroni; in France, the Le Febres or Lefevres. Although most of the European languages adhere more closely to old Northern names, even in Latin we have volumes in our library by Johannes Smithus, and we have seen in Italy Giovanni Smithi. The Spanish of John Smith is Juan Smithus; the Dutchmen adopt it as Hans Schmidt; the French soften it into Jean Smets; the Russians roughen it into Jouloff Smittowski. John Smith goes into the tea trade with China, and then he becomes Jahon Schimmit. Among the Icelanders he is Janne Smiteson; among the Tuscaroras he is Som Qu Smittia; in Poland, Ivan Schmittiawski; among the Welsh we are told they talk of Jihom Schmidt; in Mexico he is written down as Jouthif Smirti; among the classical ruins of Greece he becomes Ion Simhton; in Turkey he is almost lost sight of as Yoo Seef.

Events of the Week.

THE weather waxes warmer, and even makes the wax to melt.

EX-CHIEF OF POLICE, GEO. W. MATSELL, formerly Liberal book publisher, has been very sick, and it was feared he could not live.

CHIEF JOSEPH's band killed thirty-one Chinamen. The savages seem to be working in concert with the hoodlums of San Francisco. That was a bad act of Joseph's.

THE police arrested one hundred nude bathers among our docks on Sunday last. There are free baths for the public, and there is where they ought to go to bathe.

THE Russian-Turkish war has not progressed as rapidly for the last week as was looked for. The Russians are evidently preparing to strike a heavy blow and to press on to Constantinople.

LARGE numbers of the people of this city, who had money enough to get away, have left town, many to Europe, many to Saratoga, the Catskills, the Adirondacks, Niagara, Newport, Long Branch, and other points in all directions.

THE mania for suiciding seems to remain unabated. Life becomes a burden to many, and they cannot wait for Nature to perform the process of death, but take the job into their own hands. Nearly a score of suicides have been enacted within a week.

THE Methodist church at Fairburg, Ill., was unfinished, but a sudden gale of wind came along the other day and completely finished it. Total loss, $7,000, and no insurance against gales. Did the brethren take this little visitation as one of friendship?

EX-BROTHER PATTERSON, who some time ago stepped down and out from the pastorate of the Second Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, N. J., has now been finally deposed from the ministry by the Presbytery of Elizabeth, on his own confession of irregularities and his waiver of a right to trial.

THE riot which threatened to break out in Montreal, on the occasion of the Orange procession on the 12th, did not break out to the extent that was feared. But one man was killed. Prudence or intimidation restrained the bad passions of the mob to some extent. The excitement, however, for several days ran very high, and much bad blood was inflamed.

A WAR WITH MEXICO BECOMING MORE AND MORE PROBABLE.—Washington, July 15.—Official reports from Gen. Ord state that the Mexican General, Trevino, by direction of his government, has withdrawn from the agreement entered into between them in regard to co-operative movements against Mexican cattle raiders. The effect of this withdrawal will be to give force to the previous instructions to Trevino to resist any attempt on the part of the American commander to pursue raiders across the border by force. The subject will be a matter of immediate consideration. There will be no change in the policy of the Government, however. The Mexicans will either have to see that these raiders are prevented from crossing the border, or take the responsibility of any attempt to oppose the United States forces in carrying out the instructions given to General Ord.—Tribune.

THE REV. MR. WRIGHT'S UNSUCCESSFUL SUIT.—The examination of H. F. Luce, George M. Terry, and George Wardle, Trustees of the Congregational Church in Northville, charged by the Rev. H. N. Wright, before Justice Benjamin, at Riverhead, with assault and battery committed when Mr. Wright, with family, goods, and chattels, was ejected from the church parsonage, resulted in the discharge of the defendants. Wright swore that they used him roughly, pushing him violently out at the front door; that they seized his wife while she was partially disrobed, with a babe in her arms, and put her out after him, and then threw his furniture out so roughly that it was damaged considerably. All the these allegations were denied by the defendants, and their denials were sustained by witnesses. Mr. Wright threatens other suits. It is understood that there is to be a further investigation concerning the burning of the church, which was charged upon the parson.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. VIII.

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I see it is hard for you to give up the convention which framed our National Constitution, and which was so very pious and Christian, that that instrument utterly ignores God, Jesus Christ and the Bible. A Convention which, in the words of Ingersoll, "knew that to put God in the Constitution was to put man out. They knew that the recognition of a Deity would be seized upon by fanatics and zealots as a pretext for destroying the liberty of thought. They knew the terrible history of the Church too well to place in her keeping, or in the keeping of her God, the sacred rights of man. They intended that all should have the right to worship or not to worship; that our laws should make no distinction on account of creed. They intended to found and frame a government for man, and for man alone. They wished to preserve the individuality and liberty of all; to prevent the few from governing the many, and the many from persecuting and destroying the few." So while the Convention and the Constitution please you highly as genuine Christianity, they suit me very well as practical Infidelity. I would simply ask the question, "if, as Judge Story insists, that the Constitution is a Christian instrument, why is it that our most zealous Christians are so anxious to insert their God, their Christ and their Bible into it? If it is a first-class Christian document as it is, why not let it remain so? Why seek to change it?"

I regret that you deem it necessary to say: "You show several individuals in a false light. What authority have you for saying James Smithson was a Freethinker?" I said nothing of the kind, and you should not so charge me until I have done it. My words were, "You need have no doubt about the religious status of James Smithson when you are aware that the matter of introducing and championing the bill for the establishment of the Smithsonian Institute was placed in the hands of the Infidel Owen, who ably engineered it through Congress." I added, in substance, that had there been good grounds for claiming Smithson as a Christian the claim would have been made in all the Encyclopædias of the country. I think the inference fair and correct. When a great man is not claimed by such Christians as yourself, it is highly probable he is an unbeliever. But I did not say Smithson was a Freethinker, and you should not have charged me with having said it. "There is nothing like being accurate," Mr. Humphrey. Why do you ask for my proof that Smithson was "a lying hypocrite" when I intimated nothing of the kind, thought nothing of the kind? Accuracy! accuracy! Mr. Humphrey.

You express doubts about Mr. Owen having much to do with the establishment of the Smithsonian Institute. By referring to the Congressional Globe of the time your doubts may be removed. He not only introduced the bill and urged it through Congress, but he was one of the first regents of the institution.

showed several people in a false light," you ought to have named them. I certainly only want to show the truth and will thank you to point out my errors.

Peter Cooper is one of my kind, so far as being unsectarian, an unbeliever in the marvelous efficacy of the blood of a man who was put to death over eighteen hundred years ago, and that the man who was so executed was the God of heaven and earth. He is not a believer in miracles, myths, and fables, and does not take much stock in the Bible as being a revelation from heaven. It looks very inconsistent for you to hug to your bosom and claim as a brother in the faith a man who believes precisely as did he whom your leader and patron saint, John Calvin, condemned to a cruel death by fire, on account of his unbelief. Peter Cooper belongs to a class of unbelievers whom orthodox Christians have a thousand times denounced as Infidels and deserving of hell. I remember distinctly a case where a Presbyterian clergyman said the Unitarian Church did more harm than all the rum-holes, theatres, and houses of prostitution in the city. Verily, my friend, you are evolving very far from where your brethren of the Church stood but a very few years ago.

You have no authority for saying "Peter Cooper would scorn the idea of being a disciple of Tom Paine." I did not say he was such a disciple, but he is an honest man, and he doubts not that Paine was an honest man, who had the independence and candor to say what he thought, whether it made him popular or not. Mr. Cooper neither scorns Paine nor his disciples. I presume in speaking of him he would be gentlemanly enough to speak of him as Mr. Paine or Thomas Paine. I do not think he would follow the suit of pious Christians and call him by the nickname, "Tom Paine." In many points Mr. Cooper believes as Thomas Paine did. If Mr. Cooper gave the use of his hall to the Evangelical Alliance, he at the same time took occasion to give expression to his views, which were far from being orthodox. You ask if Mr. Cooper ever gave the use of his hall for an Infidel convention. For a very good reason he has not. No large Infidel convention has been held here to whom he could offer it. As regards his offering the use of his hall to the Evangelical Alliance, Mr. Cooper said to a friend that his object in doing so was to be able to present some of his own heterodox views before them, and he playfully alluded to the fact that he was invited upon the platform and seated beside the President, as being a good joke that a heretic like himself should be thus honored in the Evangelical Alliance. He has often styled himself a heretic.

I said nothing about the founder of Cornell University. You say he was a Quaker. Good enough. The Quakers are largely good Infidels so far as a majority of the doctrinal points are concerned. Elias Hicks was of this class, and also many intelligent Quakers of my own personal acquaintance. The ceremony of prayer is very likely kept up in the college, but the assertion I made about the skepticism and freethinking of the professors was from a gentleman who had gone through a course of instruction there, and knew precisely what he was talking about. I have it also from a personal friend of President White that the latter is entirely an unbeliever in Christian dogmas. The letters he has recently written from Europe, where he has been traveling give clear indications as to where he stands. In a letter from Sicily he said in substance, when looking over the countries where the heavy hand of the Church had in past centuries crushed out human liberty, and almost human incentives: "I see in all these countries where the ecclesiastical powers have triumphed that the right of opinion and the right of liberty have been suppressed;" and more in the same line. Prof. W. C. Russell, acting President of Cornell University, is a stock-holder in The Index, an Infidel paper of Boston, owning two shares of $100 each. He pays The Index an installment of $20 per year besides his subscription, and is one of the firmest supporters of that paper. President White has also taken The Index from its commencement, and is strongly in sympathy with it. Prof. Adler was not turned out of the Institution. He left there not because he was not wanted, but because he was wanted elsewhere more.

As to the London University, I simply claim that it is unsectarian, and that ecclesiasticism and theological dogmas are not admitted there, and have not been for fifty years. I think this is true. That is as good Infidelity as I ask for. Alexander Bain filled one of its important chairs, and he is one of the strongest Materialists in England.

You seem greatly dissatisfied with Stephen Girard because he stipulated that the clergy should not have admittance into his college. He did that, not in a spirit of illiberality, but because he well knew and wished to avoid the designing, grasping, Jesuitical priesthood, and for the express reason that he wanted the college to be free and liberal did he forbid the admission of priests. But with all the old man's precautions and all the safeguards he aimed to throw around the college, his wishes have been nearly subverted, and the clergy have gained more influence there than he intended.

Ah! you have at length caught me in an error! I said that that word of marvelous power, upon which the Christian world depends for happiness and salvation from hell through an endless eternity—faith—appeared but once in the Old Testament or Bible proper. It is used there twice. I acknowledge the mistake. I overlooked it in Habbakuk; but as I have "standing on the other side of the ledger nine hundred and ninety harp-strings which you gracefully acknowledge as an error, I will offset this last "faith" against one of them, and that leaves me nine hundred and eighty-nine ahead still.

You still wish to make a difference between "faith" and "credulity" when there really is none. Credulity, like credence, credit, etc., is from credens. Webster defines credence as that which gives a claim to credit, belief, confidence; and illustrates it with this quotation from Trench: "To give credence to the Scripture miracles." Credulity is "easiness of belief; a disposition to believe on slight evidence." Faith is "belief; the assent of the mind to what is declared by another; resting solely and implicitly on his authority and veracity; reliance on testimony," etc. There is no real difference. The Christian is called upon to have faith in a great deal which is told him, and of which he has no proof. He must have credulity to have the necessary faith, and they are both blind enough for all practical purposes. The more credulity a trusting Christian has to believe what the Bible and the priests say, the more faith he has and the better Christian he is considered. It takes credulity to believe impossibilities and monstrosities, and one cannot believe them unless he has credulity, and that belief is faith—they are the same, and both as blind as need be.

It appears to me you have not told the whole truth about the Alexandrian Library. If a portion of it was burnt when Julius Caesar besieged the city, a century before Christianity had an existence, it was by accident or as an incident of war. It proves, at least, that the learning and science which the library contained was not in any way dependent upon Christianity. It is unfair to represent that Julius Caesar burned it with the same motive that influenced Theodosius and Bishop Theophilus four hundred years later. Caesar was a lover of books and learning. He was the author of several works, and did not burn the library from any hatred of literature. He established libraries in several instances, and purposely destroyed none as did the Christian Spaniards when they conquered Mexico, or the Christian Crusaders who are charged with having burnt a very extensive library at Tripoli.

You do wrong to call Caesar and Omar Infidels, in the accepted meaning of the word. Of course neither were Christians, but both were believers in religion. Caesar had his gods and his creed, and Omar was as much of a zealot and as devout as a Christian, but accepted Mohammed as the prophet of Allah. When he ordered the destruction of what remained of the library, in 642, it is said to have been done upon the grounds that if the books agreed with the Koran—the word of God—they were useless, and need not be preserved, and if they did not agree with it, they were pernicious, and should be destroyed. This motive was so like the Christian sentiment it is hard to discern much difference between them. The great trouble between Christians and Mohammedans was not because neither had faith, but because they had too much faith, and had different systems and accepted different leaders. These contests led to the death of many millions of people.

You evidently dislike to own up that Palestine affords no proofs of an ancient Hebrew civilization, and characterize the friend from whom I obtained facts upon the subject as the "Great Unknown." You are as wide of the truth here as in many other cases. The gentleman is modest, but is not unknown. He is not a "myth," Prof. A. L. Rawson has been honored by the colleges of Europe and America with the honorary degrees of Master of Arts, Doctor of Divinity, and Doctor of Laws, has made four journeys to Palestine, has edited a History of all Religions, History of the Roman Catholic Church in America, Statistics of Protestantism, Antiquities of the Orient, Introductions to the Holy Bible, etc., etc.; as an artist, illustrated Beecher's Life of Jesus, Howard Crosby's Jesus, his Life and Work, Dr. Deems' Jesus, Commentaries by several authors, Youthful Explorers in Bible Lands, Free Masonry in the Holy Lands, Bible Lands Illustrated, Pronouncing and Comprehensive Bible Dictionaries, and is now engaged on a large work on the chronography, geology, climate, antiquities, and natural history of animals and plants of Palestine, with maps and engravings soon to appear by one of the leading publishing houses in this city. You will find him at almost any hour of the day at his residence, 34 Bond st. You will find him affable and disposed to give you any information he possesses in reference to Palestine. He will take pleasure in showing you drawings and photographs of ruins, etc., taken in various parts of Palestine, Syria, and the adjacent countries, and he will assure you that every piece of ruins that is found in Palestine is traceable to the Grecians, the Romans, the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the Arabs, or the Saracens. He will repeat to you the assurances I have already given you that he found not a stone nor a vestige of anything traceable to the ancient Hebrews, and that Dr. Robinson admitted as much, unless exception be made of the lower part of the foundation of the Temple, which, of course, cannot be accurately determined. Let me add here that Captain Wilson and Captain Warren who were sent out to Palestine by the London Palestine Exploration Society, and who also spent four years in that country, in Recovery of Jerusalem, p. 313, make this statement: "Looking through the series of photographs taken for the Palestine Exploration Fund, we recognized two distinct styles of work; the one rich but debased Roman work, the other Greek or Byzantine." But they found none of ancient Hebrew. Let me also make a quotation from Dr. Paley in his Evidences of Christianity: "Our Savior assumes the divine origin of the Mosaic Institution. I conceive it very difficult to assign any other cause for the commencement or existence of the institution, especially from the singular circumstance of the Jews adhering to the Unity when every other people slid into polytheism, for their being men in religion and children in every thing else; behind other nations in the arts of peace and of war; but superior to the most improved in their sentiments and doctrines relating to the Deity." While I think I can show that to the Jewish God were assigned attributes and qualities more abhorrent than to any other gods, Dr. Paley's admission that the Jews were behind other nations in the arts is an important one. There are few things more certain than that the ancient Jews were a semi-barbarous people, and that there are not now any proofs to show that they ever, as a nation, attained to any high degree of civilization.

I think you are mistaken in supposing that the belief that the past ages were replete with myths is being lessened. There was never a time when the general opinion was stronger than now that a great share of the ancient history of the world is mythical, and this is especially true of Jewish history. The belief that there ever were such persons as Adam, Methuselah, Noah, David, Solomon, etc., is being wonderfully weakened by the investigations that are being made. There is no earthly proof of them except the crazy, improbable Jewish stories in the Bible, and they could have been easily fabricated at the time of Ezra and Nehemiah, or as late, even, as the time of the Maccabees. It is a very suspicious circumstance that the name of Moses was not used by any of the older prophets. If he really was the captain, lawgiver, and savior which the Bible makes him; if he and God were in each other's company daily for forty years; if Moses advised God, restrained him, and controlled him, as the Bible represents, it would seem as though he at least would have been mentioned by all succeeding prophets. The entire Jewish history rests under a dark cloud of doubt. There are no corroborating proofs in existence. Of course, the hills and rivers of Palestine still remain, but the entire country never was capable of sustaining a population able to raise two millions of fighting men, nor able so soon after emerging from the pastoral, semi-barbarous condition it was in at the time David was made king, to acquire the enormous amount of gold and wealth said to have been used by his son Solomon. The story is nearly as extravagant as some of the tales of The Arabian Nights, though not nearly as well written. There is about as much proof of the existence of Sinbad the Sailor, Aladdin, Gulliver, Robinson Crusoe, and Baron Munchausen, as of the Bible myths. It is quite probable that, a few centuries before the Christian era, feeling that a natural history was necessary, some cunning and capable writers got up what is called the Bible History; and as but a limited number of copies were written, and a limited number of people had access to it, or could read it if they had, and they the priests only, it attracted but slight attention for a long time. As time wore away, a veneration grew up for it, which is so easy for superstitious people to bestow upon that which has great age, or is supposed to have. This may be a matter of mere speculation, but one thing is certain, such a thing could have been very possible. There is nothing in those old stories that a man or men of fair talent could not write, and it is more probable that it was so written than that many of the statements made in it were true. If the Jews were such a powerful nation as the Bible makes them; if David and Solomon were such mighty monarchs, and reigned midst such regal magnificence, it is singular that other nations and contemporaneous historians knew nothing of it. As I said in my last, Herodotus, the celebrated Greek historian, made two journeys through Syria five centuries after Solomon was said to have reigned, and when his magnificent Temple ought to have been standing, but he makes not the slightest mention of Solomon, of the Temple, nor even of the Jewish nation. If they existed at all then it was as a race of rude nomadic people, semi-barbarians not worthy of his attention. Their numbers, their wealth, and their splendor were doubtless matters of subsequent invention.

You will have it that Thomas Paine is as much a myth as Moses. I have seen several men who have seen and conversed with Paine. I have seen the grave where his body was buried. I have seen men who saw the wagon conveying his remains from the grave under the direction of Wm. Cobbett. I have seen men who saw the bones of Paine exposed in Cobbett's bookstore in Fleet street, London. I had it from a trustworthy party that those bones were taken to one of the large potteries of England, ground to a powder, mixed with fine clay and made into ornaments and trinkets for keepsakes. I have read Paine's writings. They are characteristic of the man, clear, simple, forcible, logical and unambiguous, such only as Paine was able to pen. But what does the world know about Moses? What did it ever know about him? The place of his burial was never known, and it is a matter of grave doubt whether as a living man he was ever known. It is probable he was like Menes of Egypt, and Minos of Greece, a copy or plagiarism of the Menu of India. It is claimed that he wrote the first five books of the Bible, but there is not the slightest authority for the claim. An assertion that he was the writer is not made in any one of the books credited to him. In all probability he had no more to do with the writing of those books than you or I. They relate incidents and allude to events which occurred hundreds of years after he was said to have lived. As smart as he may be supposed to have been; able as he was to advise and control Jehovah, he was hardly capable of narrating minutely what took place a thousand years before he was born or two hundred years after he was buried. To say two thousand years after he was dead that he was the author of certain writings is much easier than to show that it is true.

One thing may be set down as the truth: what is called the Mosaic writings are not the oldest records in the world, nor could they have been written till after a certain period. The world has had three systems of writing. The oldest known is the "arrowheads," or cuneiform inscriptions of the Chaldeans and Babylonians. These were not written with an alphabet of letters representing sounds, but characters to represent syllables and words. After this system, came into vogue the Egyptian hieroglyphics, or picture-writing. These were used many centuries, and numerous inscriptions on the temples and pyramids of Egypt in hieroglyphics remain to this day. It is not known how long the systems of cuneiform inscriptions and hieroglyphics were used, but probably thousands of years. Not till long after these was an alphabet formed. Letters representing separate sounds are comparatively a modern invention, and as Hebrew was only written with an alphabet, whatever was so written in that language was long subsequent to the use of the other two systems. From this it is clear that the Hebrew is far from being the oldest language in the world, and alphabetic writing far from the most ancient.

You make out a very weak apology for David and Solomon for their licentiousness. There is not the slightest proof that David wrote the Psalms you pointed out, nor the slightest proof that in those Psalms his adultery with Bathsheba, or his having Uriah put to death, was meant at all. His confessions of sins committed are general and indefinite. The condemnation in Nehemiah in regard to Solomon are far from emphatic, for notwithstanding his gross sensuality with his 700 wives and 300 concubines in one of the verses you named it says: "There was no king like him beloved of God." Thus, notwithstanding David's lechery and murder, he was a special favorite with God, and though Solomon was the greatest libertine who ever lived, God loved him above all other kings. My assertion stands good, that Solomon was condemned for his idolatry and not for his licentiousness.

For a friend of science you speak disrespectfully of it, I must say. Such epithets as "poor stuff," "bran," "shorts," "chaff," "cockle," "thistle," "smut and all," sound singular coming from a professed friend. An enemy would hardly undertake to heap more obloquy upon it. How is it with your scientific book, the Bible? Does it have any "bran," "shorts," "chaff," "cockle," "thistle," and particularly smut. I fancy I find much of all of these diffused through its science. For the latter quality, "smut" (if you will not tell Comstock), I will refer you to the beautiful Song of the favorite king, Solomon, to the story of Lot and his daughters, of Dinah and Schechem, of Reuben and Bilhah, of Judah and Tamar, of Onan by himself, of Joseph and Mrs. Potiphar, of Zimri and Cozbi, of the Levite and his concubine, of Ruth and Boaz, of David and Bathsheba, of Amnon and Tamar, of Absalom and his father's concubine, and many other choice bits too numerous to mention. Are there any books published, save a few that are justly tabooed by law, that contain so much "smut"? I prefer the friendship that Professor Huxley evinces for science to yours. Hear him: "Modern civilization rests upon physical science; take away her gifts to our country, and our position among the leading nations of the world is gone to-morrow; for it is physical science that makes intelligence and moral energy stronger than brute force. The whole of moral thought is steeped in science. It has made its way into the works of our best poets, and even the mere man of letters, who affects to ignore and despise science, is unconsciously impregnated with her spirit, and indebted for his best products to her methods. She is teaching the world that the ultimate court of appeal is observation and experience, and not authority. She is creating a firm and living faith in the existence of immutable moral and physical laws, perfect obedience to which is the highest possible aim of an intelligent being."

You magnanimously admit that the putting of Hypatia to death was "a disgraceful affair." I should think it was—just about as disgraceful as millions of other acts of the same character committed by the Christian Church. Do you imagine, however, that it makes the crime less offensive to every instinct of ennobled human nature to throw an insinuation over the memory of the murdered woman that possibly she had been intimate with Orestes? If it was true—which by no means is made at all clear—would that justify the knocking down of a defenseless woman upon the streets, dragging her into a church, stripping her naked, beating her with clubs till dead and then finishing the very Christian proceeding by scraping the flesh from her bones? Was that slight impropriety "more an error of the head than the heart"?

In your brief allusion to "the reign of terror" in France, you commit the same mistake which your Christian brethren have done in hundreds of instances, that is to charge upon Freethinkers the blame for the excesses that were committed at that time. I will not say that you are dishonest in insinuating this, but you ought to be better informed. The excesses so committed were wholly of a political character, and neither religious or anti-religious. The extravagant conduct of those who become invested with power was a natural reaction or rebound of a mercenary people from the rule of a corrupt monarchy, a corrupt aristocracy, and a corrupt priesthood which for a long time had ruled the country. It is a law in human nature that where a nation or a community emerges from a state of oppression before an equilibrium can be gained, a rebound to the opposite extreme is inevitable.

The causes which led to the excesses under consideration were some of them remote. Under the reign of Louis XIV. corruption, extravagance and licentiousness reached a great extreme, no less on the part of the monarch and the nobility than the ecclesiastical authorities. The king wasted the revenues of the government in the grossest extravagance in building useless palaces, reclaiming waste places, etc., etc. The treasury was also sadly depleted by the licentious clergy and aristocracy. Rioting, revelry, court carnivals, mistresses, royal favorites and debauchery were the order of the day until the wealth of the nation was exhausted. This state of things was followed in 1788 by a devastating hail-storm, which cut off the crops over a large portion of the kingdom and brought the people to starvation. The cry was "Bread or blood." The enemies of Marie Antoinette excited the prejudices of the hungry mobs against "the Austrian." The issue came between the starving masses on the one hand and the oppressive aristocracy on the other—between monarchy and mobocracy. The heavy exactions of a lordly priesthood had much to do in leading to the bloody result. The noted Infidels of Paris so far as they meddled with the terrible transactions of the times, sought to stay the threatening storm. Count Mirabeau, an Atheist, and the most powerful man in France, both with the people and the nobility, sought to reconcile the frantic factions, and probably would have succeeded to a great extent had he lived; but at this critical moment he suddenly died, while negotiating between the mob and the monarch; and the saturnalia of blood succeeded. The throne of the Bourbons was dashed to pieces. So the "reign of terror," I repeat, was simply a reaction against the twin-oppressors, kingcraft and priestcraft, by a long suffering, starving people.

Paine, the Infidel and the Republican, hazarded his own life in attempting to save the dethroned king and to avert the frenzied storm he saw in the near future. He was thrown into prison and his life was saved by the merest fortuitous circumstances.

The Infidels were really the conservatives all through the bloody period when madness was the ruling power, and many of them lost their lives as a sacrifice to the principles of liberty and peace. Yes, the people did set up the Goddess of Reason, and it was high time that they did, when they saw that the altar and throne leaned together, and so foully sustained each other.

To show what was the status of Robespierre, who became for a time the ruling spirit of the mad hour, it should be stated that he caused God to be recognized in the new constitution that was framed. His memorable remark before the convention was: "If it is true that there is no God it behooves us to invent one." His suggestion was carried out. This is the truth about "the reign of terror," and shows how untrue is the charge so often made by Christians that it was the work of Infidels or Atheists. It was strictly of a political character, and with the impulsive French people was a natural reaction from the oppressions they had so long endured.

But let us get right down to the question of science and the patronage which it derives from the Bible and Christianity. We have already seen how Bible science and real science compare. The explorations which scientists have made, such as the antiquities of the stone age, the finding under immense deposits of alluvial soil and drift the bones of man side by side with the bones of animals which long since became extinct, human bones found under the stalagmitic formations which by accurate computations were found to be the accretions of scores of thousands of years, fossils pertaining to the human race found in the tertiary rocks, convince the wisest and most observing that the human race has existed on the earth fully 100,000 years. The Bible makes it less than 6,000. Scientists know most positively that the Bible cosmogony is wholly untrue. But, without stopping to enumerate the many instances where the Bible is in direct opposition to science, I will make the assertion as true, that in scarcely the slightest particular is there an agreement between the Bible and science; and it seems the wildest vagary a man can be guilty of to seriously undertake to show that the teachings of science harmonize with the unnatural and impossible Bible stories. I notice, too, that you pass over those monstrosities just as easily as possible. I cannot wonder that you do not wish to give Bible cosmogony and archeology an examination. They will not bear it in the light of science. Christian faith and credulity is all that can make them seem truthful.

Christianity is very little more in unison with science than is the Bible. How can it be, when it is founded upon those old unscientific Bible stories? The genius of Christianity—if it may be said to have a genius—is diametrically opposed to the spirit of science. The latter depends upon investigation, study, testing, digging, smelting, assaying, melting, burning, distilling, analyzing, accepting and condemning, as the case requires, while Christianity says it has a revelation from an unknown God in the sky, which we must accept without proof, and without question. The voice of science says "Study, examine, and learn." The voice of Christianity is "Believe or be damned." Science tells us we must not believe without proof; that we must look into the causes of existences as we find them, and learn more and more as we extend our observations and investigations. Christianity tells us that its revelation contains all that man needs to know, that coming from God it is perfect and cannot improve. It provides for no change or progress, so far as its revelation is concerned. Science says: "Press forward, men; be not satisfied with old discoveries and old opinions; increase your investigations; dig deeper; climb higher; know more; believe less; learn all that is possible for you to know." Christianity says: "I have given you the ultimate of truth, the sum of all knowledge; it cannot be improved upon; it cannot be revoked; it cannot be excelled; you must look no farther, you must search no higher." Science commands in sonorous tones: "Doubt everything until you have proof upon which to found an opinion; believe nothing except upon evidence; insist upon the facts in every instance; take nothing on tick." In thundering and authoritative voice Christianity vociferates: "Accept what I give you; believe without a question; have faith, FAITH, FAITH! that is all you need." Science says: "Distrust even what I say, until you know it is correct; always be convinced before you accept; learn ever, more and more, and thus be happy." Christianity replies: "Doubt nothing I declare unto you; accept, and live in glory in the city with golden streets, with a crown of diamonds upon your head; but if you presume to doubt you shall be thrust down into the regions of darkness and subjected to fires of inconceivable intensity and for interminable ages." Science has its teachers, but they make no onerous demands upon its votaries; it imposes no burdens upon its followers, and kindly invites all to follow its peaceful lead. Christianity has its priests, and they place heavy loads upon the necks of their dupes; it imposes such burdens upon the people that they become wearied with life, and are dragged down almost to penury and exhaustion. Science sits lightly and wears a smiling and cheerful face for all. Christianity is sombre and forbidding, and while it points to the beautiful city of gold for the few that have faith, it ever exposes the horrid, yawning gulf of hell to the many who have not faith. The rule of science in the world has been peaceful, elevating, and happyfying. It has not drawn the sword; it has not deluged the earth with blood. It has made the world better, wiser, and happier. Christianity has ruled with an iron hand. It has savagely used the sword, the scaffold, the stake, the rack, and the dungeon. It has caused millions to groan in terror, sorrow and anguish. It has blighted the happiness of mankind. Science has not purposely caused the death of a single individual in the world. Christianity has been most cruel and relentless; it has pursued its victims with hate; it has tortured them without mercy; it has laughed at the wretchedness it has caused. It has drenched the earth with the blood of the millions of the hapless victims it has slain.

Science has been the leading element in the progress that man has made. It has given him knowledge, usefulness and power. It has been the great factor in the civilization of the world. It has been the real Savior of man. Take from the earth what science has done, and in the language of Ingersoll, "we would go back to chaos and old night. Philosophy would be branded as infamous, Science would again press its pale and thoughtful face against the prison bars, and round the limbs of Liberty would climb the bigot's flame." Take from the world what Christianity has done, and I insist the world would be the better for it. Fully seventy-five millions of hapless mortals would be restored to life: desolate lands would be restored to plenty and happiness; the heavy rule of popes, prelates and priests would be set aside and humanity would become its own ruler. Centuries of ignorance would be wiped out, and the reign of darkening creeds would seek the shades of oblivion.

Friend Humphrey, in your argument you exhibit much ingenuity and flippancy, but you cannot successfully deny the great facts pertaining to the subject under discussion. Science is classified knowledge, Christianity is a bundle of theological dogmas derived from Judaism and Paganism. The world had a respectable share of learning, science and philosophy before the birth of Christianity. Christianity originated with the unlearned. In its infancy it was embraced by the uneducated. At that time it did not foster and encourage the learning which had previously existed in the world. It destroyed books and discouraged literature. It insisted that the wisdom of this world was a damage to mankind, and that the knowledge how to escape the regions of sulphurous flames was all that man needed to know. When Christianity became a political power and gained supreme control over several countries, it did not seek to elevate learning and science, but within its domain the people gradually sank into ignorance and degradation. At the very time when in Moslem countries education was fostered, science was encouraged and schools of philosophy flourished, in Christendom these were all neglected, and numerous councils were convened to decide whether a son could be as old as the father; whether a ghost could beget a child; whether the God-nature or man-nature predominated in Jesus; whether they became one, or remained separate; whether God had a mother; whether she had an immaculate conception; whether women have souls; whether bread and wine were absolutely transubstantiated into the real body and blood of Christ; whether this miraculous diet should be partaken of by the priests when unmixed, and whether the wafer combined of the two should only be dispensed to the laity, and whether certain manuscripts written by unknown authors, should or should not be regarded as sent from heaven. Over these and other similar questions bishops and priests quarreled and fought, and science and mental liberty gradually lessened as theological dogmas became the ruling principle in Europe. The more the dogmas of Christianity triumphed the faster did science and human freedom go to the wall. After a few centuries of Christian supremacy the whole mass of the people were so ignorant that not one in a thousand could read or write, and even a large portion of the priests were unable to write their own names.

During this benign and heavenly reign of theological ignorance the Christian Institution par excellence, the "Holy" Inquisition, was established, and for nearly five hundred years this engine of cruelty was a terrible scourge to Southern Europe. Hundreds of thousands of hapless men and women, of all ages and of all conditions in society, were dragged before it, at all hours of the day and night, for the simple crime of daring to think for themselves and for not bending the knee with acceptable suppliancy to the rule of ecclesiastical power. Here the poor wretches were arraigned and put upon the torture rack without knowing who were their accusers or what were the offenses with which they were charged. Ecclesiastical demons presided over these diabolical institutions and submitted the wretched victims to the cruellest tortures their ingenuity was capable of inventing until they would confess to the satisfaction of the "Holy Inquisitor." The victims were put upon the rack and the wheel; the crank turned a little more and a little more until the joints were torn asunder and the bones of the body broken one after another, and at intervals the hapless victim was again called upon to confess. A millionth part of the suffering thus damnably inflicted can never be known to the world. According to Victor Hugo five millions of human beings were thus murdered by the Christian Church in cold blood. Of the stake I need not speak. The horrors of the auto de fe are too well known to need description here.

Let me introduce an appropriate quotation from Mark Twain's Innocents Abroad: "We look out upon many objects of interest from the dome of St. Peter's; and last of all, almost at our feet, our eyes rest upon the building which was once the Inquisition. How times changed between the older ages and the new! Some seventeen or eighteen centuries ago the ignorant men of Rome were wont to put Christians in the arena of the Coliseum yonder, and turn the wild beasts in upon them for a show. It was for a lesson as well. It was to teach the people to abhor and fear the new doctrine the followers of Christ were teaching. The beasts tore the victims limb from limb, and made poor mangled corpses of them in the twinkling of an eye. But when the Christians came into power, when the Holy Mother Church became mistress of the barbarians, she taught them the error of their ways by no such means.

"No; she put them in this pleasant Inquisition and pointed to the Blessed Redeemer, who was so gentle and merciful to all men, and urged the barbarians to love him; and she did all she could to persuade them to love and honor him—first by twisting their thumbs out of joint with a screw; then by nipping their flesh with pincers—red-hot ones, because they are the most comfortable in cold weather; then by skinning them alive a little; and finally by roasting them in public.

"She always convinced those barbarians. The true religion properly administered, as the good Mother Church used to administer it, is very, very soothing. It is wonderfully persuasive, also. There is a great difference between throwing parties to wild beasts and stirring up their fiercer feelings in an Inquisition. One is the system of degraded barbarians; the other of enlightened, civilized people. It is a great pity the Inquisition is no more."

These terrors and inhumanities are the special science of Christianity. Here it showed its invention and its art. During the long night of religious darkness a man of learning was a rare exception. Duns Scotus, in the 13th century, was one, but where, for five hundred years before or two hundred years after, will you point out another like him? True, schools were kept up to a certain extent all through the dark ages, but what kind of schools were they? Not schools of science, but Christian schools, where dogmas, ecclesiasticism, and theological mysteries only were taught. The common branches of education were denounced by the magnates of the Church as being "profane" and ungodly. Gregory the Great sharply blamed St. Dizier for teaching grammar, and said: "It is not fit that a mouth sacred to the praises of God should be opened to the praises of Jupiter." The highest authorities, including Mosheim, Hallam, Guizot, Lecky, Draper, and others can be abundantly quoted to show the truth of the statements I have made, but my letter is already too long, and I must forego the pleasure at this time of bringing these writers to my support.

I am aware it is unpleasant to you to acknowledge and approve all the acts and persecutions of the Catholic Church, but I cannot see how you can get by it. It looks bad for a man to deny his own mother and accuse her of base conduct. When a person "goes back" on his maternal parent he is regarded as being in a depraved condition. That the Romish Church is the parent of the Protestant Church is too patent to be questioned for a moment. As much as you are disposed to condemn her for her murders and persecutions, she is still your mother. Every dogma, every point of faith is retained by you; you have added nothing to the old system.

You would have it appear that the Greek Church has not been inimical to science. If she has not taken as much pains to fight it as the Romish division has done, her friendship for science has not been of such an ardent character as to induce her to make any special advance in its pursuit. To this day I believe the Greek Church has not distinguished herself in scientific education.

I freely admit that many Christians in the last two centuries have been friendly to learning and science, and that many have done much to increase the facilities of popular education; but this did not come from their ardent Christianity or their love for ecclesiasticism. It arose from their Liberalism and the spirit of progress and the genuine love of humanity inherent in their natures. Despite the selfishness and intolerance of the dogmas of Christianity, which causes its votaries to believe they are going to heaven with a select few to sing the joyful song of Moses and the Lamb through a blessed eternity while countless millions, by nature as good as themselves will be doomed to roast for countless ages. Numerous Christians who from lack of knowing better, have accepted the creed in which they were born and educated, have evinced the grand characteristics of love of their kind which have actuated good men in all ages of the world and in all systems of religion. It is no more Christianity than other forms of creed that cause men to feel these impulses or to act upon them, but it is the grand spirit of Liberalism which has shown itself in spite of religions and creeds—Christianity as well as others.

I think no charge can be brought against you for not claiming enough for your pet system. Like your brethren, you claim for it not only all the advancement science has made, but civilization, free government, etc., as well. Our government is often called a Christian government, and our popular institutions are called Christian institutions. These claims are untenable. Civilization is not dependent upon any creed or upon any form of religion. Buckle and Draper have consistently shown that climate, meteorology, soil, and formation of country have had much to do with modifying civilization. Race and customs are also important factors in the process. The more the different races of men are brought into contact, the more the mind is stimulated and rendered active by other minds, the more general intelligence and civilization are promoted. Some races are more disposed to savagism and barbarism than others, and per contra it is the same with civilization; certain nations and races take more kindly to it than others. Some races are better mechanics than others, and some will gain a higher altitude in learning and science than others. The more intercourse is promoted, the more nearly all nations become one nation or one family, the better for all.

Are our laws Christian laws? By no means. The better part of them are from the Romans, while our most cherished institutions, as trial by jury, voting by ballot, etc., etc., are of ancient Teutonic, Saxon, and Pagan origin, probably handed down from the Druids of Northern Europe. In the extreme Christian countries in Southern Europe, trial by jury is hardly known even at the present day. It is as unjust for Christianity to claim the paternity of our civilization as for modern science. Moslemism is quite as much entitled to the honor as is Christianity, but neither that nor any system of religion is the source of civilization and science. They come not from creeds, religions, nor mythologies. They come not from a belief in mysticisms, superstitions, or supernaturalism. They are the legitimate heritage of man, despite of ecclesiasticism, priestcraft, and faith. It is a weighty question whether religions have not greatly retarded the progress of civilization, science, and mental liberty. So far as they have cramped and bound the mind of man, so far as they have curtailed the right of opinion and freedom of thought they have doubtless done it. You and many others think that religion is the great panacea, the great savior of the world. I do not. The world has had far too much of religion. It has been the blighting curse of thirty centuries. I turn lovingly and confidently to science, mental freedom, and civilization. These liberate the human intellect, loosen the mental fetters, and render mankind blessed and free.

Does it please you that scientific men have their little differences, and that they are sometimes impatient with each other? Unlike theologians, their contests are bloodless. They do not take life. How different the contests of scientists and ecclesiastics! The former are usually bound together by the ties of fraternal regard, while the wars of the latter have literally deluged the earth with blood. From seventy-five to one hundred millions of men, women, and children have been deprived of life by Christian wars. Science has never demanded a single human life. Christianity made slaughter, murder, and torture her principal business for more than a thousand years. You do injustice to Prof. Huxley. I think he has not been badly out of humor with any brother scientist. He is a gentleman of an equable mind, and not liable to fly into a passion.

You speak of the icebergs of science as they come slowly floating down from the great Northern Ocean, cold, creaking, and massive, but gently melting in the warm southern sun. You deem them unfit places upon which to erect habitations. You say they are bright with borrowed light; but you are again evidently mistaken. Astronomy, geology, natural philosophy, chemistry, and mathematics do not shine with borrowed or false light. Nor are they icebergs. They are rather luminares which shine with the steady brilliance of the sun. Neither are they lessening in size, nor melting away. On the contrary, they are growing and spreading, attracting more and more attention, and doing more and more good.

I fancy the iceberg that crossed your vision was the huge body of ecclesiasticism, mysticism, and theological fiction. This miserable iceberg has, for thousands of years, been floating around in the great sea of humanity, and for many centuries the old giant mass grew and spread in every direction, but thanks to the glorious orbs of science, intelligence, and truth, that great body of ice is steadily melting away. Its days are numbered. In comparatively a few decades it will be so reduced in size that it will neither obstruct our view of the horizon and the heavenly bodies, nor be a hindrance to the free navigation of the teeming waters of life.

I am glad to see you quoting so freely from Prof. Draper. Let me urge you as a friend to quote him often, and read him closely. You can hardly find a safer authority. I would gladly have quoted him more fully in this letter, but I have been so diffuse that I have allowed myself very little space for the purpose. I cannot, however, forego the temptation to make a single quotation from the last paragraph of his Conflict between Religion and Science: "As to the issue of the coming conflict, can any one doubt? Whatever is resting on fiction and fraud will be overthrown. Institutions that organize impostures and spread delusions must show what right they have to exist. Faith must render an account of herself to Reason. Mysteries must give place to facts. Religion must relinquish that imperious, that domineering position which she has so long maintained against science. There must be absolute freedom for thought. The ecclesiastic must learn to keep himself within the domain he has chosen, and cease to tyrannize over the philosopher, who, conscious of his own strength and the purity of his motives, will bear such interference no longer."

Pardon me once more for writing so long a letter. I have endeavored to confine myself to the points you raised; and to correct your numerous errors has necessarily taken a good deal of space. Like yourself, I am willing to leave it with our readers as to which has the truth on his side. I have endeavored to show that the Scripture theory of cosmogony on which Judaism and Christianity are founded and the many impossible stories which form parts of the same book are utterly opposed to the plainest teachings of science and common sense. You have studiously avoided trying to reconcile the discrepancy, and, as I believe, because you fully realize the impossibility of doing so. If the Bible can be made to harmonize with the clear inculcations of science, I call upon you to perform the task. If you fail to attempt this work our readers may fairly infer that you shrink from the undertaking.

I have attempted to show that Christianity has not been the friend and foster-parent of science; that Christianity absolutely dragged the civilized world from a state where learning, science, and philosophy had long held sway down to ignorance, faith and degradation; that when Christianity had the supreme control in a large portion of the world it did nothing for science and education, but bound the heavy ecclesiastical collar of mental servitude and faith upon the necks of the people; that while Christianity had effectually suppressed learning and science in its own domain, their enemies, the Mohammedans, were establishing schools, fostering learning, and proving themselves the fast friends of education and culture; that it was this class of people that preserved science, and then generously bestowed it upon the Christian world. While many Christians of late have become to some extent disciples of science and are now friendly to it, they can only be looked upon as adopted sons, and in embracing science they have to that extent proved recreant to the original precepts and practices of Christianity. I am sincerely yours, D. M. BENNETT.

JOHN A. LANT, who was sent to the Penitentiary for publishing his Toledo Sun, has been out several months, and has now started a new paper called Labor. It is devoted to the interests of the working classes. Published weekly after August 1, at $1.00 per year.

Last Sunday at Liberal Grove.

We had a very pleasant meeting last Sunday with our Liberal friends at Hyatt's Liberal Grove in Merrick on Long Island. The day was very pleasant and the country delightful. It was the first time we have been out into the country this season. Nature never seemed more charming. Bro. A. B. Brown of Worcester, Mass., accompanied us, and we were agreeably entertained by our kind friends. We addressed an assemblage of intelligent, attentive men and women for about an hour and a half, upon the Religions of the World. Mr. Brown followed with very appropriate remarks on the Duties of Life. He is an impressive speaker and produces a good effect upon his audience. We are pleased to learn that he proposes to devote a portion of his time to the delivering of a course of Liberal and progressive lectures, and hope the Liberals of the country will extend the hand of welcome to him.

On next Sunday, the 23d, Prof. A. L. Rawson will address the friends at Hyatt's Liberal Grove, on "The Evolution of Thought."

The Three Days' Grove-Meeting at Wolcott.

Judging from the letters we receive, and from all indications that come under our observation, the three days' Liberal meeting to be held at Wolcott, Wayne Co., New York, on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of August, will be the largest Liberal gathering ever assembled in this country. Friends from all parts of the country are making arrangements to be there. Arrangements will be made by Bro. J. M. Cosad, of Wolcott, for furnishing the great numbers with eatables, etc., at a moderate expense. It will be well for friends to take with them such accommodations as will enable them to "camp out," for, doubtless, the crowd will be so large that all cannot obtain lodgings at the village.

Some ten or more good speakers will attend the meeting, so there will be no lack of good discourses. Prof. P. O. Hudson, of Indianapolis, the Liberal "Sankey" of the West, has promised to be on hand to cheer the assembled multitude with his splendid singing, and many other vocalists will, of course, "jine in." We shall doubtless have lots of good speaking and good singing. We hope every Liberal will be there who can possibly make it convenient to do so. Let it be a grand reunion of the Lovers of Truth and Mental Freedom. Let us meet together and strengthen the bonds of fraternal love, and renew our zeal in the cause so dear to our hearts.

We shall give ourselves the pleasure of meeting our friends there, and shall be glad to take thousands by the hand. We have also promised our friends at Van Ettenville, an adjacent town, to call upon and talk to them an hour or so.

The "New Faith."—Concluded.

BY J. L. STODDARD.

Now the "New Faith," being the result of the deepest thinking and the most critical study of the past half-century, and arising from a necessary elimination of old dogmas and effete superstitions incorporated in the Old Faith, must naturally seem, when compared with Christianity, to be negative rather than positive. So great always is the mental distress consequent upon the loss of intense and positive beliefs, however narrow they may be, that the mind thus bereft of them is at first much more keenly alive to its loss than to its gain. To the believer in the highly poetical polytheism of the Greeks, the rude dispelling of his illusions must have been attended with great mental pain. So also to one who held the crude conceptions of the Universe which prevailed before Copernicus, the great change effected by telescopic discovery must have brought with it a kind of terror. The sudden expansion of his notions of the distance and nature of the celestial bodies, and the consequent insignificance of this earth, thus shown to be one of the smallest objects in the stellar universe, must have at first produced despondency and sorrow. Lecky cites a touching story of an old monk who considered God as altogether human, and whom he was wont to address in most familiar language. When he was convinced by a brother monk that he was wrong in holding such anthropomorphic views of the Deity, he clasped his hands in agony and said, while the tears streamed down his cheeks, "You have taken away my God! You have taken away my God!"

It is true that the "New Faith" seems largely negative, as compared with Christianity, for the very reason that, while taking much from that religious system which is good, it also rejects much with which it can have nothing in common, and this is so distressing to the holder of the Old Faith that at first it seems to him as if everything good in his religion was denied by us. Let us look first at the most prominent features of the old system which have been discarded by the "New Faith."

With the discovery of the immense age of our earth, and the enormous length of time (compared with our historical accounts) during which man has been an inhabitant of the globe, and with the knowledge that man's origin is almost without doubt to be derived from a lower order of the animal kingdom, and certainly from very primitive and savage ancestors, the old account of the first pair, the fall, the curse of the race, the "scheme of salvation" as indicated in the prophesied "seed of the woman" that should "bruise the serpent's head"—all this, upon which is built up the lofty structure of "justification by faith" and "redemption through the blood of the Lamb," crumbles away, and the vast system falls to the ground. By careful investigation into the origin of the biblical canon, and by the results of historical criticism, the Bible is shown to be a book of human composition, and, with all its many excellences, not a divinely-inspired and infallible authority. By a careful comparison of religions—by the clear light of science, and by the Zeit-Geist, which does not favor anything miraculous,—we are led to disbelieve the legendary stories in the Old Testament, and the miracles and myths of the New. By similar studies the deified Jesus becomes a pure teacher, of exalted moral character, born of Joseph and Mary, around whom, when dead, the magnified stories inseparable from such an age and people gradually clustered—gathering credence by repetition, and strength by transmission from one generation to another. By the study of the rise and development of many church doctrines, as affected by the influence of the pagan religion and the prevailing philosophy, we are convinced of their decidedly human origin, as well as of their unsoundness. We are compelled, likewise, to modify greatly the anthropomorphic conceptions of the Deity which are inherent in Christianity, since Jesus, being in reality the God of the Christians, gives to them as an object of worship little more than a magnified man, to whom they address petitions for rain, success in business, victory in war, and the like.

Finally, in view of the origin and present low condition of the majority of the human family, and the insignificant part which an individual life plays in this boundless Universe, the "New Faith" cannot pronounce certainly and dogmatically upon a future existence, but leaves it in solemn hope.

Thus far is the "New Faith" surely negative; but it does not stop there. Although it cannot affirm on the ground of ignorant traditions and ill-supported authority many things which the Christian creed so unhesitatingly proclaims as truth, yet it is not wanting in positive faith.

The spirit of love to our fellow-men and kindness even to our enemies, which it has been the peculiar glory of the religion of Jesus to inculcate (however imperfectly its adherents may have carried it out), is the key-note of the anthem of the "New Faith." Emphatically it calls itself the "Religion of Humanity." The place which the spirit of asceticism occupied in the early centuries, and which the enthusiasm of the Crusades claimed in the Middle Ages, is in our day held by the wide-spread spirit of philanthropy and universal benevolence, of which we may say:—

"Nor bounds, nor clime, nor creed thou knowest; Wide as our need thy favors fall!"

The "New Faith" holds that man is progressing steadily and surely towards that perfection of society unto which it is our aim to attain. From low beginnings the race has thus painfully worked itself upward on its way; not groveling downwards from a primitive state of purity and excellence, to be rescued only by a partial system of salvation, but steadily advancing, learning by bitter experience, throwing up about its way safeguards of law and morality, and ever progressing in civilization, enlightenment, and general culture. No good word was ever uttered by ancient bard or prophet, no noble maxim was ever enunciated by sage or priest, no moral precept was ever spoken by the lips of Jesus, that is not cherished as part of the inheritance of the "New Faith," which thus draws to itself the treasures of the ages. The "New Faith" entertains, it is true, no limited and anthropomorphic ideas of the Deity, but for that very reason it inculcates greater awe and reverence for that unknown and unknowable Power in whose all-quicken presence we have our being.

Above all, it upholds and teaches the necessity of RIGHT LIVING! "To the soul weakly resting in effeminate security on the merits of a victim who once paid the penalty of his sins, and who will forgive him as often as he does wrong and cries 'I repent,' the 'New Faith' says, 'Live a true, pure, noble life! Lurk behind no covering of other men's virtues. Show yourself what you are! Be pure, be unselfish, be upright! Do not be content to be reckoned so on the heavenly register by virtue of the blood of a man crucified nineteen hundred years ago!' To the man basely acting from expectation of a reward in a future life, the 'New Faith' exclaims: 'Scorn to act from such low motives! Cease meanly to balance your visionary heavenly gains by your earthly losses, and to chuckle over a credit-mark on the recording angel's book when you have performed a good action here! Act rightly, because it is noble to act so; because it benefits your fellow-men and purifies and strengthens your own soul!' The 'New Faith' pleads also for the prompt and efficient administration of justice here on this earth—knowing nothing of a 'judgment to come.' By this means, and not by threatenings of unknown tortures, would it restrain those men from crime who are insensible to higher appeals to right action. This, then, is the aim of the 'New Faith': to promote the welfare and to aid the progress of the race; to inculcate purity and honesty of life; to diffuse everywhere the spirit of charity and love; to stimulate in every way, by music, sculpture, painting, literature, and poetry, the growing culture of the race; to place before men constantly higher models of excellence; and to cheer and comfort drooping, saddened hearts. For the time when these blessings shall be widely diffused must all disciples of the 'New Faith' toil. The time has come to emerge from politic concealment and to declare our views. Already the air is full of the tremor of a hastening change. The mists are lifting. The ugly forms of once potent superstitions are growing fainter and fainter, and are fading steadily from view. The promise of a brighter day is dawning on the race. We may not see its glory, but we can help its advance. In the noble words of the poet—

"Hail to the coming singers!
Hail to the brave light-bringers!
Forward I reach, and share
All that they do and dare!"

"What matter, I, or they.
Mine or another's day,
So the right word be said
And life the sweeter made?"

"I feel the light move sunward,
I join the great march onward,
And take by faith, while living,
My freehold of thanksgiving!"

—Index.

NOTHING is so dangerous as error—nothing so safe as truth.

My certainty that I am a man is before my certainty that there is a God.—Becker.

THERE is nothing that binds heart to heart so quickly and so safely as to trust and be trusted.

FRIENDSHIP is a vase, which, if once flawed, may as well be broken; it can never be trusted after.

WHATEVER pain there may be in the performance of a duty, there will be more in the neglect of it.

It is better to sow a good heart with kindness than a field with corn, for the heart's harvest is perpetual.

To say "I can forgive, but I cannot forget," is only a rather ungracious way of refusing forgiveness.

NATURE has neither language nor discourse; but she creates tongues and hearts, by which she feels and speaks.

THE best inheritance from your father is poverty and a good name. If you have both of these you are unusually fortunate, and your prospects in life are of the brightest sort.

IDLENESS is the nursery of crime. It is that prolific germ of which all rank and poisonous vices are the fruits. It is the field where "the enemy sows tares while men sleep." Could we trace the history of a large class of vices, we should find that they originate from the want of employment, and are brought in to supply its place.

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.—Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAINE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

Modern civilization then, we see, has had many sources, many causes. Christianity has not produced it, nor does it give its best efforts to promote civilization. The inevitable decline of theological influences, the surest and brightest sign of progress, has been brought about by evolutionary forces, of which the clergy have been wholly unconscious.

Is there an irrepressible conflict between Christianity and civilization? It seems pretty clear to even an ordinary observer that there is an antagonism between faith and common sense.

Is not the creed a barrier in the way of progress? If I pledge myself to maintain certain doctrines, am I not pledged to reject new truth if it should come to me?

The creed is perfect, the infallible truth, hence if I maintain it I already possess the highest and best truths possible. With such a belief in such a creed I do not need to make the discovery of higher truths. It becomes impossible.

The creed is the best statement of the best truths. "It was good enough for my father, and it is good enough for me."

With these convictions, the sectarian feels impelled to make all things testify to the truth of the dogma. The Bible is read for proofs of the doctrine. Every sectarian finds his theology proved beyond the shadow of a doubt by the Scriptures.

An Irishman who set up in the business of wood-turning, put up over his door this sign: "All sorts of turning and twisting done here." This sign could be put over most of the pulpits of the land. When we see how they torture Bible language to sustain unreasonable doctrines, we are impelled to say of them "All sorts of turning and twisting done here."

This is nothing less than systematic culture of prejudice, which, when fully intensified, is bigotry.

Truth is not the objective point which such a mind seeks, but proselyters and followers.

Growth, expansion and progress are incompatible with a belief in the creed.

The outcome of faith in dogma is not only bigotry, but also hypocrisy. Many and many a Christian will say, "I do not believe in a hell or a devil, or total depravity," yet by their accepting the creed they profess to believe these things. Is not this hypocrisy, to think one thing and profess another?

"Who dares think one thing, and another tell.

My heart detests him as the gates of hell."

—Homer's Iliad, book ix.

Thus we see that faith becomes hostile to civilization. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." There is no question but that the object of faith consists of things never seen, and all the probabilities, if not certainties, are that they never will be seen.

Faith is the conservative force which represses, suppresses and oppresses human nature, and science is the quickening force upon the mind to awaken it to inquiry and investigation and progress.

We have an illustration of Jewish faith in an instance where a rabbi is appealed to as an umpire to settle a disputed point of theology between God and the angels, and Rabbi Solomon Jarchi declares that, "if a Rabbi should teach that the left hand is the right, and the right the left, we are bound to believe him."

And as an illustration of Christian faith, we have only to recollect what we have all heard Christians declare, "I believe the Bible, and if it says that the whale swallowed Jonah, or that Jonah swallowed the whale, I believe it."

Common sense and faith have no union—they conflict.

Faith is the abandonment of reason, the sepulchre of the unresurrected intellect.

Faith is demoralizing in its influence. "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Belief is not a meritorious act. We believe as we are compelled to, from evidence.

Belief is a result—an effect and not a voluntary act.

We inherit prepossessions for certain forms of belief. One born of Jewish parents will be a Jew, and one born of Catholic parentage will become a Catholic, and one born of Protestant parents will become a Protestant. But Protestantism is closely related to Liberalism, and it therefore happens that now and then a few Protestants become Liberals.

Our surroundings have much to do in the modification of our inheritance.

Our own manhood and courage have something to do in bringing about our characters.

Christianity has dwarfed humanity by its mysticism. Every attempt of man to reconcile the things that are not seen with those which are, has been thwarted by the "mystery of divine things." He was told that it was not designed for him to know the "hidden mysteries." It was blasphemous for him to attempt to look into the oracles of God. In short, it was sinful to seek explanations and insist upon evidence and the reasonableness of things. "Reasonableness had nothing to do with the sacred mysteries."

With such galling chains it was impossible for human nature to rise into nobler manhood, or emerge into greater light, only by long and bitter experience.

How was the human mind employed during these times of repression?

There were two methods of mental activity which were, for the most part, in perfect harmony with theology, namely, Art and Metaphysics. There was little or no danger to Christian institutions from either of these sources.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Christian Charity.

NEW YORK, July 12, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: As impolite and impolitic as it is for a man to lose his temper in an argument, I must confess that it would be impossible for me to preserve mine unruffled were I in your place. I do not see how Mr. Humphrey can imagine the cause of his Master is being forwarded by the use of such shallow arguments as he used in his last letter. His reasoning is worthy a Tomb's shyster, but not of a Christian debater. The belief in the Bible and a future life is to many inseparably joined to their weal or woe, and trifling by one of its recognized exponents is almost unpardonable. If Mr. Humphrey is correct, Christianity has to answer for converting a man into a monster, and he is the opposite of what I supposed him to be—a gentleman of refinement and worthy the respect alike of Infidel and Christian. This may seem harsh, but there are "extenuating circumstances." Allow me to quote him:

"You [Mr. B.] stick to what Dr. Smith, Classical Examiner in the University of London, calls 'the vulgar objection' in regard to the Hebrews 'borrowing' from their Egyptian masters. Dr. Smith adds: 'The word borrow should be ask. There was no promise or intention of repayment.' Perhaps the word 'stripped,' employed in the Douay Version, corresponds with the original better than 'spoiled,' in the present sense of that word."

"It was to be expected that you would also go over the story of Hypatia and Cyril. I will admit that her treatment was most disgraceful."

"Catholic opposition to science was more an error of the head than of the heart."

"There were circumstances that, to some extent, extenuated her [the Church's] faults and crimes."

According to Mr. H. it is right at the command of God, to strip your neighbors "without intention of repayment"; a foul murder for Christ's sake, is only "disgraceful" and wholesome termination in the interests of the Church is "more an error of the head than of the heart." If it was not in black and white I would never have believed that an American could ever have given utterance to such sentiments. Knocking a woman down, dragging her into a church, stripping her clothes from her, beating her with a club until she is dead, and then, hyena-like, scraping her flesh from her bones, is only a "disgraceful affair"! A religion that could commit, and a God that would permit such a crime are worthy only the loathing and detestation of all men; and no matter how "men of God" may slur it, as long as man has memory that outrage can be thought of only with horror, and its perpetrators remembered only to be reviled.

Does God need to be told by "Dr. Smith, Classical Examiner," what his word should be? If he meant to write "ask," why, in the name of common sense, didn't he write "ask," and not some hieroglyphic which would disgrace a Choctaw Indian, and which can be distorted into meaning anything a "Classical Examiner," who thinks he knows more than God, wishes to have it?

I think I can see John Calvin watching the slow burning of Servetus. As the flames crackle and crawl around his withered and aged body until the flesh cracks and drops from his bones, I hear Calvin, who was still fired with the Catholic spirit, say, as he spreads his thin hands out to warm them by the blaze, "My heart is right; my heart is right." Perhaps Mr. Humphrey will say it was a "most disgraceful" affair, but was only an "error of the head."

I can hear Torquemada say, as he stands by the side of the rack watching the quivering form of his victim as the levers break joint after joint, and the glowing iron sears his eyeballs, and the priestly fiends with red-hot pincers, tear out pieces of flesh and replace them with a hellish mixture of salt and pepper, when the head of the wretched sufferer sinks and he breathes no more, "My heart is right." And the Reverend Mr. Humphrey will read and say, "It was a 'most disgraceful' affair," but there were "extenuating circumstances."

The massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day was an "error of the head," but it was an error that cost forty thousand people their lives. Perhaps the persecutions in England were "disgraceful," but I am sure the extermination of the Waldenses and Albigenses had "circumstances that to some extent extenuated the fault and crime." Five million human corpses turn their seared and sightless eyes to an un pitying heaven, and point with their fleshless fingers to the Church of Christ as their murderer. Their butchery may have been "disgraceful," but it must have had "circumstances that to some extent extenuated" it.

Shades of the unknown dead! will Christian persecution never cease! Must crimes be slighted and memories slandered that the Church may preserve her power over the growing mind of man! Must an American minister prostitute his pen to the glorification of fiends incarnate, and serve the Church at the expense of truth, even though he drags into the mud and filth of Christian criticism the names of men and women as pure as snow, and who will live in the hearts of men when the Christian religion shall be as dead as the millions it has murdered? In the first century Nero, with his many little gods, sat on one of the Seven Hills and fiddled while Rome burned; in the nineteenth, Christian ministers, with one big duplex attachment God, mock at the assassination of women, and scornfully cry "courtesan" when called to account. Is Christianity better or worse than Paganism?

There is surely a time coming when the men who think will be the ones who are honored, and not those who unquestioningly accept the balderdash and nonsense written by Christian biographers who entrench themselves behind barriers of books written solely and only in their interest. Theirs is truly an "error of the head," and if their hearts be right they have yet to show it by their deeds. Murders committed for Christ's sake may, to a Christian, be only "disgraceful," but to an Infidel, unused to impressing his opinion upon others in that manner, they are crimes that can never be forgotten, and only forgiven when the Great Assassin shall sleep in the grave with her Christ-slain victims.

EUGENE MACDONALD.

Paine Hall.

This noble edifice erected in the name of Thomas Paine, and for the benefit of the Liberal cause, has been transferred to a board of Trustees chosen at a legal meeting of the donors; and now there is no reasonable objection why the Liberals of the country should not come forward and wipe off the indebtedness upon it, and secure it for all time to come as the Temple of Mental Freedom. The Christian churches may have on them mortgages upon mortgages, but in most cases the religious people clear them of indebtedness. This is done in hundreds, thousands, and tens of thousands of cases, and it does seem reasonable, therefore, to think that this one temple of Free thought, and the only one in the land of such a creditable character to the cause, should have friends enough to help it in this critical time. All that is now needed is that every one should feel enough interested in the cause to do something towards lifting the present mortgage. And I am fully persuaded that there are enough liberal-hearted and liberal-handed people in the United States and Canada to do this work if rightly appealed to and informed on the subject. We have men of wealth, who are as true as the needle to the pole in their adherence to Liberalism, and here is an opportunity where they may bestow a part of their means with a good prospect of successful returns to humanity.

W. S. BELL.

New Bedford, Mass.

Going to the Wolcott Meeting.

BRO. BENNETT: Since I announced the Wolcott Grove Meeting I am getting many interesting letters, which prove that the people are prepared for a forward movement all along the Liberal lines. Yesterday I sent an interesting letter to the Investigator, and I send you the following, which I hope you will find a place for in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

H. L. G.

CORRY, PA., July 8, 1877.
FRIEND GREEN: I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and of course read your letters to friend Bennett about the three-days' meeting at Wolcott. Now I desire to know where that place is, how far from Salamanca, and on what road, for I want to attend that meeting if there is nothing to prevent. I think several more from here will attend. We ought to hold more such meetings. It would be good for the soul's growth. We should meet together often and become acquainted with each other and know who our Liberal friends are. I think friend Bennett is doing a great work, and ought to be sustained by all means by our sympathy and money—especially our money, for, as the saying is, "Money makes the mare go." That is what keeps up the churches.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is all the Bible I have now. I look for it every week as I would for my dinner.

I will tell you something of myself. I am a carpenter on the Atlantic and Great Western railroad. I work all along from Salamanca to Meadville, have a wife and child—a son twenty years old, just graduated from the high school in this place. He will be with us at the meeting. I desire he should hear all he can from the Liberal minds of the times. He is very Liberal as it is.

The first time I am in your place I shall take the time to hunt you up, and will close this by hoping that you will answer at your earliest convenience. I remain your friend and co-worker in the cause of truth.

GILBERT ARNOLD,

P. O. Box 1055, Corry, Pa.

[Wolcott is in Wayne county, N. Y., a few miles north of Clyde, which is on the N. Y. Central R. R., forty miles east of Rochester. —Ed. T. S.]

Is Man only an Improved Monkey?

THE LINK BETWEEN ANIMAL CHATTER AND HUMAN SPEECH.

LONDON, June 23.

This week Prof. Garrod held a reception in the Monkey House at the Zoological Gardens, and discoursed to the people about the Anthropoid Apes. As professor of the Zoological Society, the Professor stated that he had dissected seventy apes out of the anthropoid class, and not one of them exhibited the vermiform appendage of the cecum or blindgut which is characteristic of man. But the anthropoids have it quite humanly developed. The hands and feet of an orang recently dead were exhibited along with those of a man, and exhibited the same structure. The manners and customs of gorillas were described from authentic observations, and their domestic arrangements, their sleeping hammocks and use of stones in cracking nuts increased the impression that this animal is very human-like indeed.

Prof. Garrod showed that the structural resemblances between the anthropoid apes and man are so close that the reason for the mental and moral differences remains still an unsolved problem. Perhaps the most striking and important portion of his discussion was that in which he proved that the vocal organs of man are present also in the anthropoid ape. The ape does not converse, and yet the difference between his vocal apparatus and that of man is so infinitesimal as to defy observation.

Prof. Huxley declares that, to his mind, the only thing that promises to explain the mental difference between the anthropoid ape and man is the phenomenon of language. Language implies consultation, comparison of experience, necessarily embodies itself in the written form, becomes the storehouse of facts, results in inferences, and in the wisdom which can control and modify nature where the dumb creature is controlled and modified by nature. By the power of an intelligent and purposed election and combination so secured by the ability to talk, the animal so endowed might gradually build up a better brain on the same structure as that possessed by an animal that could not talk. If it should be ultimately determined by physiologists that there is absolutely no difference between the vocal organs of the anthropoid and man, refuge would have to be taken in the hypothesis that there is some point in the animal brain corresponding to the vocal power, which does not rhyme with the latter in the anthropoid, but does rhyme with it in the man. This on assumption of the truth of Prof. Huxley's view of the enormous powers set in motion by the attainment of speech. A little reflection will show that the probabilities are on the side of Prof. Huxley's view; and, although Carlyle has decided that "perhaps there is not in nature a more distracted phantasm than your so-called eloquent speaker," it is not unlikely to turn out that "talkee-talkie" is the sceptre of man on this planet. The difference between the vocal chords in ordinary animals and in men may be compared to that between a plain tube and the mouth-piece of a flageolet. In proportion as one end of the tube is made smaller you may whistle louder through it, and when it is almost closed, as in the flageolet, you get a musical voice. The vocal chords, which run parallel in animals, converge until they almost come in contact in man; and Prof. Garrod showed a similar convergence in the anthropoid ape. But the whole organism is a region of the utmost delicacy and fineness, and since the experiments of Helmholtz one may understand that a difference of a hair's breadth—a difference unobservable to the eye—might be represented by an entirely new set of vibrations and these might be the very series which bridge the chasm between the animal chatter and articulate speech.

It is possible that Mr. Darwin in his forthcoming "Biography of an Infant," may throw some light on this general subject. Ever since that careful investigator and powerful reasoner published his "Descent of Man," many, who before had supposed that all embryonic changes ceased at birth, have been closely observing the physical progress of their babies. Mr. Darwin's attention was drawn some years ago to some carefully kept observations of the varying sounds and cries which preceded the child's attainment of speech—the coo, the whine, the hiss, and so on—and that the great evolutionist then thought the subject of importance and a comparison of similar observations desirable. —Omni-Commercial.

Revivalism.

The desperate efforts being made to revive a falling system of religion will fail. Its antiquity is no plea. I have seen ancient church-buildings (old as the Church herself) covered with moss and ivy, crumbling with age and tottering to their fall—emblems of the church system, but their age is by no means proof of stability. You might try to revive these old ruins, but they are gone past revival. So is the Church system of belief without knowledge, of faith without works, gone past redemption.

You invite comment like this by thrusting your opinions and doctrines on the world until they become wearisome. Enjoy your own opinions and let others do the same. This is enlightened toleration. But if amid so much noise and demonstration in revivalism you thrust your peculiar doctrines forward conspicuously, you may expect dissent from them, and to express dissent is not intolerance.

A church member suggested to me lately: "Why do you not join the church and be better?" I stand on dignity, and unless a sordid and ignorant Church reform itself, I would by no means let myself down to belong thereto.

The Church says: "Believe and examine not." The age of faith is passing away. Knowledge and deeds are a better test in life than mere faith and words.

The arrogant assumption of the Church is insufferable. They are exemplifying the prayer of the Jewish Pharisee, "God, I thank thee I am not even as this publican." Intolerance and bigotry exist as in former days. If as the Spiritualists say, the departed revisit this earth, shades of John Calvin and Servetus, I invoke you to come back and tell us if intolerance prevails less now in this our day than it did in yours.

We value ourselves above the brute creation for the possession and exercise of reason. Yet by repression of reason—viz., by faith—by the hope of heaven, a heaven not desirable for a rational being—by threats of an angry God—of future woe, etc., you deprive many persons of that very qualification, reason, and drive them to the lunatic asylums reduced below the brute creation. This is not imagination (or faith) but stern fact. A mind not well balanced should not thus by revivalism be trifled with and imposed on. Your efforts are grievously misdirected and your victims inside and out of the asylums may not only "get religion," but the pity or contempt of rational beings.

Religion is every day duty. You may dip or dive or sprinkle—pray or sing—weep or laugh—be miserable or "get happy"—blessings or anathemas—faith or doctrines—all, all are of no avail, if a mean, ignorant, intolerant, or dishonest daily life outside of the church is the crown to performance inside.

The Church in ages past has borne a dark record for ignorance, intolerance, persecution, bloodshed; and she has ever been the opponent to enlightened progress. Her action is modified somewhat by her surroundings at the present day, but her principles are essentially the same. The mentally and morally progressive man must keep out of church. Mere business progress and policy sometimes put him in or keep him there. —F. J. Emery in Osceola (Iowa) Beacon.

Friendly Correspondence.

ABRAM BRONSON, Nordhoff, Cal., writes: For goodness sake do not let your friend Humphrey make all of us out Christians, especially me, in my seventieth year. Yes, I, who over forty years ago dared to beard the priests in their dens, and their dupes in their domiciles, asking them to tell me who God and the Devil were, what the soul of men, and to give me the latitude and longitude of heaven and hell, when the answer came, euphonious and clear, "you cursed Infidel!" Yes, I, who have passed through all the phases, from a believing Christian to the firm belief that I have no living part about me that is immortal, and therefore no necessity for a vindictive God or a just Devil to take care of it. Even I, who believe that matter is eternal truth, and does everything that is done; that designing and lying priests got up the Bible, and have made the mythical Jesus a liar. I, that believe Christianity has ever been a curse to the world, and will continue to be so long as it exists, because it is false in fact and unjust in sequel, while I loathe its pretensions and pity its dupes. You can let him make me out a fool, but for goodness sake! I say with emphasis, do not let him make me out a Christian, for I know by sad experience that cursed condition.

J. A. RUTHERFORD, Honey Grove, Tex., writes: I yet breathe and think, and I also hope you have not yet passed "That River." I purpose in this to send you the copy of one out of many letters which I have lately received. You may publish it if you think it best for the interest of our cause. You are at liberty to give the place, date, name, etc. Neither the writer nor myself cringe on the score of Mrs. Grundy. You recollect that not long since, through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I requested anybody who believed that the Bible told more nasty tales or stories on the God than it did on the Devil to drop me a postal card to that effect. The following letter is an answer to that request, but you see the writer has transcended the limits of the P. C. It reads as follows:

COSHOCTON, O., Apr. 22, 1877.

"J. A. RUTHERFORD, My Dear Sir: I have just read your request in THE TRUTH SEEKER which, by the way, is a grand, good paper, and I hasten to place myself upon your list of those who think 'the Bible tells more nasty stories of the God than it does of the Devil.' If we take that old book for authority, in fact, the Devil is by far the greater gentleman, moralist, and philanthropist of the two! For it is not often recorded of him that he did a downright mean or dishonorable act. But in tracing the history of God, as recorded by his agents and inspired at-torneys, we find him doing many things that would positively make a Digger Indian blush with shame and remorse, saying nothing of the downright nastiness, vulgarity, obscenity promulgated by his command and inspiration. He showed himself to be heartless, cruel, and brutal, as well as 'smutty.' And yet an enlightened class of people pay homage to the God of the Bible and admire the smut and vulgarity of his record. We point to the Hindoos and heathens as idolaters; yet there is no Christian nation that is not quite as ridiculous in its idolatry as the most benighted heathen. But I am thankful that the world is merging from this darkness of the past, and here and there, often than fifty years ago, we find a J. A. Rutherford who has pluck enough to let it be known that he does his own thinking. It is growing in that way everywhere. There are fifty people in this little town, who think just as you do about these things, but I am the only one among them who dares to face Mrs. Grundy, and I tell you, just now, there will be more in five years, and still more in ten years; because the forces of Nature are stirring up the elements into a hurricane, a cyclone, that is bound to sweep away the rubbish and the garbage of the present, and purify the atmosphere, sooner or later. I was born in 1818, and, like you, have been thinking. And I feel thankful that my lot was cast in this age of the world, when one can see and realize that the world does move. I have no doubt that you feel the same degree of gratitude as you near the end of your mission in the body. What is also gratifying to me is that tangible proof of life and immortality has been brought to light in this age, in the spiritual phenomena; proofs brought to the comprehension of the senses, that now are becoming so prevalent in teaching the philosophy of life. Of course, you will understand that I refer to what is known as Modern Spiritualism. Misrepresented, slandered, and hated worse than any other child ever born, yet it is growing to a vigorous manhood, going through the experience of persecution, that all useful children have ever had to encounter in fighting their way. It is possible you may not agree with me in this—that you are a materialist. But if you do not, I can clasp your hand just as warmly, as a Liberal without the chains of bondage upon his mental faculties. Spiritualism, like anything else, requires proof to confirm it. Those who have not had the proof are not to blame for not believing. I fought it long and zealously in the interests of popularity and prejudice. But when it came home to me, how could I reject it? You may be a Deist. I judge you are, as you quote Tom Paine's religion, and he believed in one God. I reject all gods as personal entities, reject all of a God-creation of the earth at a given time, or the creation of anything else by a creating hand. This peculiarity of my infidelity, however, is not characteristic of most Spiritualists, many of whom cling to the trimmings of old theology. I will hope to meet and exchange views with you in the next condition of existence, if not before. Very truly your brother,

"W. S. Wood."

Special Notices.

HEALTH INSTITUTE, Galesburg, Ill. New arrangement. A. G. Humphrey, M. D., and Mrs. S. F. Summers, M. D., Physicians; Ewing Summers, proprietor. All diseases treated hygienically. No medicines given. Liberal table set. Send for Circular. 3mo29

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygeine Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON. Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12t19

Spermatorrhœa.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N.Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN, Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL, AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed. Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

CRITICISM ON THE

Theological Idea of Deity,

Containing the views entertained of a Supreme Being by the Ancient Grecian Sages, with those of Moses and the Hebrew writers, and blending ancient Judaism, Paganism, and Christianity into a Common Original. By M. B. BENNETT. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplied by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type, 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his Theological Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard, 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," "EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will reprieve the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty.—Martin Luther. First published in the Canadian Monthly. Price 10 cents, by mail. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Poster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Ered Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Monlton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greely.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holvoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slanker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker.	Asa K. Butts.
(full figure).	W. F. J. J. J. J.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc., at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar. Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos, 80 cts., to hold 60, $1. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.

141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

PARTURITION WITHOUT PAIN.

EDITED BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M. D.

Editor of the Herald of Health.

CONTENTS:

1. Healthfulness of Child-Bearing.
2. Dangers of Preventions.
3. Medical Opinions as to escaping Pain.
4. Preparation for Maternity.
5. Exercise during Pregnancy.
6. The Sitz Bathing and Bathing generally.
7. What Food to Eat and what to Avoid.
8. The Mind during Pregnancy.
9. The Ailments of Pregnancy and their Remedies.
10. Female Physician, Anæsthetics.

To which are added:
1. The Husband's Duty to his Wife. 2. Best age for Bearing Children. 3. Shall sickly people become Parents? 4. Small Families. 5. Importance of Physiological Adaptation of Husband and Wife. 6. Celibacy. 7. Effects of Tobacco on Offspring. 8. Latest Discoveries as to the determining the sex of Offspring. 9. Father's vs. Mother's Influence on the Child. 10. Shall Pregnant Women Work? 11. Effects of Intellectual Activity on number of offspring. 12. Size of Pelvis, and its relation to healthful Parturition, etc., etc.

What is said about "Parturition without Pain,"

Godey's Lady's Book says: "We give our cordial approbation to this work, and would like to see it in the hands of every mother in the land. The information it contains is most important, and we are fully convinced, reliable. Price, by mail, $1.00. Address

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N.Y.

Love, Marriage, and Divorce,

AND

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

A discussion by Henry James, Horace Greely, and Stephen Pearl Andrews, including the final replies of Mr. Andrews, rejected by the Tribune, first published some twenty-five years ago in the N. Y. Tribune, is now being republished in

HULL'S CRUCIBLE,

Moses Hull, Editor, 18 Elliot street, Boston Three months, weekly, will complete it. Price, 20¢ annu; three months, 50 cents. 6t24

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

- | | |
|--------------------------------------|--------|
| Sexual Physiology..... | $2 00 |
| Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book..... | 1 00 |
| Health and Diseases of Women..... | 25 |
| Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses..... | 50 |

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 103 E. 22d St., New York. 1t

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT, Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - -	$3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges, - - -	4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band, - - -	4.50

Address, D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth street, N. Y.

Sexual Physiology.

BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With sixty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnancy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published.

Price, by mail, $2. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First. "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second. "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d St., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you, $3 a day to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 68 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples of publications, worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1760

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1760

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

Gems of Thought.

THE day of days—the great day of the feast of Life—is that in which the inward eye opens to the unity of all things and the omnipresence of law.—R. W. Emerson.

LET it be impressed upon your minds, let it be instilled into your children that the liberty of the press is the palladium of all our civil, political, and religious rights.—Junius.

OUR deepest gratitude is due, not to the pure and sinless, but to the greatly-daring and the strongly-doing; not to the monk in his convent or the ascetic on his pillar, but to the warrior in a good cause, to the adventurer in a grand enterprise, to the laborer in a noble work.—W. R. Greg.

REAL, practical doers are what the world most needs in these days of so much office-seeking, so much leading, ruling and governing. We cannot all be guides, rulers, and speakers, but we can and should be earnest, consistent, practical lovers of the faith we propose to hold. Every one who loves a cause should live out in daily deeds the little and seemingly unimportant minutia of that cause.—Anon.

THAT day has gone by in which it was thought to be the very quintessence of goodness, a proof of the supremest piety and devotion, to mortify the body and crucify all natural desires, pleasures, and enjoyments, so that thereby the soul might be the better fitted to enjoy endless happiness in some imagined future state of existence, the whereabouts of which no one could tell, or even give tangible evidence that it ever had an existence.—Mrs. Slenker.

NO SOONER is the little Turk brought into the world than the prophet drops a curtain before his eyes, beyond which he may not inquire—the little Indian, from the moment of his birth, is taught to fix his eyes on the ear of Juggernaut, red with the blood of man, in order that he may see nothing else; and the blessed little Christian must crucify his reason on that cross in whose name thousands have been slaughtered and roasted, and on which God himself was nailed by his chosen people, the Jews.—Voltaire.

YOU touch me on a very tender point, when you say, that my friends on your side the water cannot be reconciled to the idea of my abandoning America even for my native England. They are right. I had rather see my horse, Button, eating the grass of Bordentown or Morrisania, than see all the pomp and show of Europe. When we contemplate the fall of empires, and the extinction of the nations of the ancient world, we see but little more to excite our regret than the mouldering ruins of pompous palaces, magnificent monuments, lofty pyramids, and walls and towers of the most costly workmanship; but when the empire of America shall fall, the subject for contemplative sorrow will be infinitely greater than crumbling brass or marble can inspire. It will not then be said, Here stood a temple of vast antiquity, here rose a Babel of invisible height, or there a palace of sumptuous extravagance; but here, ah painful thought! the noblest work of human wisdom, the greatest scene of human glory, the fair cause of freedom rose and fell. Read this, and then ask if I forget America.—Thomas Paine.

FOR good or evil, right or wrong, the necessity of the Church required that she should put herself forth as the possessor of all knowledge within the reach of human intellect—the infallible arbitress of every question that could arise among men. Doubtless it was a splendid imposture, capable for a time of yielding great results, but sooner or later certain to be unmasked. Early discovering the antagonism of science, which could not fail, in due season, to subject her pretensions to investigation, she lent herself to a systematic delusion of the illiterate, and thereby tried to put off that fatal day when creeds engendered in the darkness would have to be examined in the light, enforcing her attempt with an unsparing, often a bloody hand. It was for this reason, that, when the inevitable time of trial came, no intellectual defense could be made in her behalf, and hence there only remained a recourse to physical and political compulsion. But such a compulsion under such circumstances, is not a testimony to the intrinsic weakness of that only for which it is invoked, but it is also a token that they who resort to it have lost all faith in any inherent power of the system they are supporting, and that, in truth, it is fast coming to an end.—Prof. Draper.

ON the chart of the careful navigator are marked the banks of fog and vapor, which caused him to divert his helm from the course which he ought to have pursued, and which inspired him with vain hopes or with groundless terror; inducing him to believe in the existence of happy islands in climates where there is naught but the waste bosom of the ocean, or to dread the craggy rocks and the dangerous shoals, though the billows roll on in unbroken flow. And the delineation of these unreal lands will prove as useful to the future sailor as the bearings of the firmest shores, for they apprise him of the deceit to which he may be exposed. Our vessel is built with greater science than the gorgeous though artificial galliot of ancient days. The loadstone guides us unerringly when the load-star is lost in clouds, yet still we are destined to be tossed upon the waters, and to wander from the harbor which fruitlessly we strive to gain. Doubt ought still to be our companion, even though we flatter ourselves that we have attained to certainty, because we have not yet learned to know ourselves, or to distrust our inborn frailty. Though neither cheered by the apparition of protecting spirits, nor fearing the enmity of the goblin or the demon, we are still liable as of old, to be seduced by our own delusions.—London Quarterly Review.

Odds and Ends.

THERE is something in a name. Whisky is now called "stagger-juice."

WHEN did Abraham sleep five in a bed. When he slept with his fore-fathers.

THE latest design for a wedding ring is a spider's web with a fly entrapped.

A MAN in Georgia has been twice struck by lightning, and still lives. His latest misfortune was matrimony.

FROM a boy's composition on hens: "I cut my uncle William's hen's neck off with a hatchet, and it scared her to death."

AN exchange says: "There isn't much difference between a grasshopper and a grass widow after all. Either will jump at the first chance."

"How many daughters have you?" said one gentleman to another. "Six; and every daughter has a brother." How many children had he? Seven.

AN English female witness promptly defines courtship to be, "Looking at each other, taking hold of each other's hands, and all that sort of thing."

A WESTERN editor publishes a poem which "was written by an esteemed friend, who has lain the grave many years merely for his own amusement."

A GROCER in Washington advertises that he has "whisky for sale that has been drank by all the Presidents, from Gen. Jackson down to the present time."

JONES got down on his knees hastily to his girl, the other night, and was about to pour forth his soul in poetry when she said: "I see you tumble to it."

"NO MAN can do anything against his will," said a metaphysician. "Faith," said Pat, "I had a brother that went to prison against his will. Bedad he did!"

A YOUNG lady named Viola whose father don't like young men remarked the other evening: "I don't see why my father gave me such a name, if he didn't want me to have a bow."

AN Irish gentleman, hearing of a friend having a stone coffin made for himself, exclaimed: "By me sowl an' that's a good idea! Shure an' a shtone coffin 'ud last a man his life-time."

A SALOON-KEEPER named his resort "No-where," so that when his married customers went home late, and their wives wanted to know where they had been, they could safely tell the truth.

THERE seems to be a general feeling that when there is no light in the entry a man ought to be excused for kissing his wife when she lets him in, provided he thinks it is the chamber-maid.

A COUNTRY dealer sent to Indianapolis for a little book called "Happy Husbands." The work not being procurable, the dealer received a note saying there were no happy husbands in Indianapolis.

IT doesn't follow that because the knees of a man's black trousers are shiny and threadbare he is a devout praying man—not at all. They may have become so by friction against the legs of a billiard table.

YOU can always tell when a buzz-saw is going or not by simply feeling of it, but it generally takes as long to find the ends of your fingers as it would to have gone and asked the foreman if the thing was in motion.

SAYS a Philadelphia paper: "Those auburn-haired young ladies with noses suggestive of a cold morning, who missed fire during the leap year just past, now sadly sing: 'It may be four years, and it may be forever.'"

A COUNTRY paper, in an obituary notice of a subscriber's son, says: "He was an uncommon smart boy. He had a little too much curiosity, perhaps, or he wouldn't have peeped into the muzzle of his father's shot-gun."

THE ways of Providence are dark and hidden. In the burning of the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, it is a noticeable fact that two preachers were burned to death, while Kate Claxton the actress and several gamblers escaped unharmed. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

A PITTSBURG paper speaks of a young man who shot himself in the West End one evening last week. The young man is severely but not fatally wounded; but if he had shot himself in the southwest end, and a little northerly, veering southeasterly, there would have been no hopes of his recovery.

A PENNSYLVANIA Dutchman, who married his second wife unbecomingly soon after the funeral of the first, was visited with a two-hour serenade in token of disapproval. He expostulated thus: "I say, poyes, you ought to be ashamed of yourself, to be making all dis noise, ven dar vas a funeral here so soon."

"BETTER believe it will keep time," said Nipper, as the correctness of his watch was doubted. "I set that timer fifteen years ago at eleven o'clock, and it hasn't varied a second since. Yes, sir, it is always eleven o'clock by that watch. I take my 'tod' at eleven, and at no other hour. You see its precisely eleven now. Let's take something."

OCCASIONALLY barbers get hold of a poor quality of bay rum, which when applied to the face of a man just shaved makes the skin smart like fire for a few moments. A case of this kind occurred in one of our barber-shops the other day. "Whoop, holy Moses!" yelled the man, springing wildly from the chair, and clasping his burning cheeks with both hands. "You may skin me—that's all right—but I'll be essentially cussed if I'm going to have pepper-sauce rubbed on afterwards. Now, do you hear me?"

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Orations on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heresies and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	2
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	1
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	3
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	3
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	2
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Fishbite.	1
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	2
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	1
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	3
52.	Marple's Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Pades.	10
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due. Ellis. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	5
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vigilant Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	2
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	5
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	5
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps. London.	72
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	10
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	3
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	2
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	1
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	6
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	1
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	1
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	10
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	2
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	1
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	2
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	1
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10
12.	Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth 20 per cent off; on five dollars' worth 40 per cent off; on ten dollars' worth 50 per cent off.	10
13.	As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " Cloth.	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Beliefs. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50.	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccolitt.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80.	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Blagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future. Christianity before Christ. Craven.	4 00
Chapters from the Bible of the Ages.	25
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 50
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and 60.	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diogenes.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records, Future Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
Radical Rhymes.	1 25
Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and 80.	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frithingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50.	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard, p 50; cl.	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each.	1 50
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Manks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples' All Around the World.	2 50
" Seeds of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth.	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth.	80
" Theological Works, with portrait.	1 50
" paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, & 4.50.	4 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen.	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
" Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius VII.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
" The Christ of Paul.	2 00
" The Chase against the Church.	75
" The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
" The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
" The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and 4 50.	4 50
" The Champions of the Church. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and 4 50.	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00.	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I, II, III, and IV, by the lot, 50 & 75.	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	50

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 30. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, July 28, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE is no church on Coney Island.

THERE are three less Baptist churches in Boston than there were a year ago.

THE Rev. Jos. Boone got drunk, and the Presbytery of Brazos deposed him from the ministry.

A CHURCHMAN writes to protest against the term crucifix being given to a horse. What better use can be made of it?

A MAN who is said to be 103 years of age signed the temperance pledge at Round Lake. He has never been drunk in his life, but wants to be safe against falling into bad habits.

THE Indian war is reported ended. The camp of Chief Joseph has been sacked, and the fugitive Indians are making rapid strides for Montana.

A DESPATCH SAYS, Col. B. G. Ingersoll delivered the Fourth of July oration at Oakland, Cal., to 7,000 persons. Although it would be well for the parsons could double that number be compelled to listen to his matchless efforts, there is undoubtedly a typographical error in the despatch.

A PENNSYLVANIA zealot alludes with alarming explicitness to "the ears of a just God tingling with prayers for bread and vengeance." There is now a splendid opportunity for God to improve the condition of affairs in our distracted country if he has the slightest disposition to do so, and if the prayers offered up by millions of earnest souls are of the smallest use.

A FEW evenings ago Beecher told his congregation what God is. If he has definite information on the subject he has a monopoly of the article, as nobody else knows anything about it. Some eighteen years ago in a letter to Theodore Parker, the Plymouth pastor defined God "a dim and indefinite effluence"; and he has been getting dimmer and thinner ever since.

IN Holland the churches are becoming very "liberal" indeed. The Independent asserts that some Dutch pastors have been administering baptism in the name of Faith, Hope, and Charity, instead of using the usual formula; and that "one of them proposes to administer it in the name of Christianity transcendental, Christianity historical, and Christianity experimental."

FORTY-EIGHT varieties of Presbyterians were represented in the council of Edinburgh. The shades of difference between some of these varieties are so slight as to be almost imperceptible to an outsider; and yet so determined are some of the brethren in their own way, that some of the Presbyterian bodies will not commune with any other Christians than those who belong to their own sect. In the early Christian centuries the feuds between the various sects, on more doctrinal points, were so bitter as to lead to fighting and bloodshed.

GEN. McDOWELL has been talking with a San Francisco reporter about our new Indian war. With time, and patience, and untiring pursuit, he says, Joseph and his warriors can be "suppressed"; there is no doubt about that. We must expect to lose six soldiers for one Indian; and of course there will be a pretty bill to pay. The irritating part of it is—though General McDowell of course does not say so—that this war, which promises to be so tedious, costly and bloody, was wholly unnecessary. A little honesty, justice and forbearance in dealing with these savages would have averted it.

OLEOPATRA'S Needle, soon to go to England, was originally erected at Baal, in Syria, and dedicated to the worship of the Sun. The city was afterwards styled Heliopolis by the Greeks, and is still celebrated for its ruins as Baalbec. The monolith, with another, was brought to Egypt by the Romans in the reign of Tiberius. It is of red granite, sometimes called Thebaic stone, and was given to England by Mohammed Ali when Pasha of Egypt. There are not less than eleven Egyptian obelisks in Rome, which were brought from Egypt by successive Roman Emperors as memorials of their triumphs.

JAMIESON-CRAFT DEBATE.—We clip the following from the Lanesville Leader of July 18: The intellectual war of words now going on between

W. F. Jamieson and A. N. Craft is in all respects a first-class debate. There is no wrangling nor jangling, but an earnest, straightforward interchange of ideas. Mr. Craft seems to be in earnest, while Mr. Jamieson is one of the most accomplished gentlemen that we ever saw on the rostrum. The debate will continue several days yet, with sessions each day—morning session at 9:30 and in the evening at 7:30. Quite a number are here from a distance to hear the discussion, including some twelve or fifteen clergymen.

THE Methodists give on an average thirty-four cents each every year to foreign missions and the Rev. Dr. Fowler of the Christian Advocate says: "We submit that thirty-four cents is no exponent of the agony of soul that sees within easy hand-reach, 700,000,000 of brothers and sisters wading chin-deep through torment to eternal death." If there is any doubt about thirty-four cents a year's saving those 700,000,000 poor souls from the imaginary eternal bath of boiling sulphur—through the medium of well-fed and fat-salaried missionaries—it would doubtless be advisable to make it thirty-five or forty, even though thousands of our other brothers and sisters at our doors are wading chin-deep through the torment of hunger to real death by starvation.

THERE is a difference of opinion in some of the Lutheran churches concerning the sort of bread that shall be used in communion. Some want loaf bread, while others insist that it ought to be served in wafer form, as in the Catholic Church. In a few of the churches both kinds of bread are put on the plates, and members may take which kind they prefer. This brings to mind the disturbance in a Missouri Baptist church on a kindred question. The trouble there was as to whether the bread should be cut with a knife or broken with the fingers, and the fight split the church. The bitter contests that have been waged as to whether the bread was really converted into the body of Christ, and the sacramental wine into his blood, or were only symbols, are enough to incite the wish that there had been no such body to quarrel about.

THE Free Church of Scotland is exercised over the increasing practice of "hunkering." This is a singular word to be used in ecclesiastical proceedings, yet "hunkering" has been made the subject of a deliverance to the General Assembly. It means sitting in prayer, instead of standing. The old practice was to stand. The renowned Rev. Dr. Begg says if "hunkering" is permitted, the fall will be speedy to a state of things in which organs and liturgies and bishops and all that sort of thing will become prevalent, and the Free Church will be as bad as some of the rest of the churches. If remaining on the knees for an hour or two arrests more attention from the being to whom the prayers are addressed, why are not the pious brethren willing to endure the mild torture for the great good that is accomplished?

THE Rev. George R. Kramer was a Methodist and had charge of the Ashbury church in Wilmington, Del. He is now preaching in a tent, and has organized a new Church which he calls "the Church of the Believers." His new notions are to the effect "that the soul is only the breath of the body, and at death returns to God who gave it, loses its personality, and becomes absorbed in the divinity. At the resurrection of the body God will breathe into it a new soul. Christ will reign on earth with his saints, and the resurrected wicked will be cast into hell, not to suffer forever, but to be destroyed as quickly as possible, or, in other words, to be annihilated." The "Church of the Believers" is not attracting many. If there are any possible notions relating to these godly mysteries and absurdities not yet concocted, some creed-maker will doubtless bring them out.

IN the course of his evidence in the trial of Mr. Bradlaugh for publishing an alleged obscene book, Dr. Drysdale, senior physician to the Free Hospital, said that his hospital life had led him to see a great deal of the poor, and he had often been shocked at the degree of poverty and misery which prevailed among them, and he should say a great deal of it was caused by large families and the excessive rapidity with which poor women bore children, who came into the world showing symptoms of disease in consequence of it. Sir W. Jenner first drew his attention to it, and he had often observed how the first child was very well, and the second pretty well, while the third and fourth were weak and rickety in consequence of insufficient nutriment, and died off rapidly. The mortality among the children of the poor was rather higher now than twenty years ago. They died three times as fast as the children of the rich. In summing up the Chief Justice said that "a more ill-advised and injudicious prosecution had never been instituted."

A CLERICAL BEAST.—Mauston, Wis., April 17.—The case of the State of Wisconsin against the Rev. A. B. Doolittle, charged with adultery and incest, was this day brought to a close in the Circuit Court of Juneau County, Hon. G. L. Park presiding. The witnesses on the part of the State swore to the fact of criminal intimacy and the defendant admitted his guilt in that respect, but claimed that he was insane on that subject. The defendant is an old man of sixty-five or seventy years, and heretofore has been a public teacher and preacher among the denomination of United Brethren, and while acting in that capacity, and also as a trustee of the Seminary of Elroy, Wis., induced a young girl of about nineteen or twenty years, his niece, to have criminal intercourse with him. The jury found him guilty, and the judge this morning sentenced him to the State prison at Waupun for the term of six years, all agreeing that if the old man was insane on that subject, it was high time that he was shut up, and about the only regrets that I hear expressed in reference to the matter is that the old sinner did not have manhood enough left to plead guilty to the charge and thereby save the District-attorney and witnesses on the part of the State the disagreeable task of proving him such. He has, without doubt, passed his day of usefulness as a public preacher, and will, for a time at least, serve the public in his proper place. It is curious to observe how a life-long service in the cause of Jesus makes saints and angels of these faithful laborers for poor lost souls.—Waupun Sentinel.

ANOTHER VENERABLE CLERGYMAN FALLEN.—We are pained to see, by the Troy (Kansas) Chief, that a shepherd of a flock who has grown gray with years in the service of his Master, has been so influenced by the Devil, or his own lustful propensities, as to be guilty of great improprieties with one of the lovely and gentle ewe-lambs of his flock. The name of this revered seducer is T. J. Leak, of the Methodist church, and his flock attended upon his ministrations in Troy, the seat of Doniphan county, Kan. It appears that the charms of the young lady were too much for the old saint and his life-long sanctity, and the grace of God which had carried him through many a sore trial was not sufficient to protect him from the fascinating graces of the young sister, who weekly listened to the honied words that fell from his lips. Since the young female has given birth to a child a church investigation has been held over the matter, and it was found that the lecherous pastor had written her a great number of love-letters, in which he declared his passion for her in the most glowing and seductive language. He wrote her that his former life had been devoid of the essence of pure delight, and that not until he met his "dear Ollie" had he conceived how much of joy and happiness was visible to the naked eye. He said he could only be happy with his "Ollie," and that away from her, darkness and fever and ague reigned supreme. "Fly with me," said the gay gospeling, "and we will make a Paradise of our own." He pictured a cottage home in England, beside a lake like Como, where every murmur would be a tale of love, and every passing cloud a dream of heavenly bliss. He labored to entice the young girl to go with him to England, "where the rude eyes of curiosity could never find them out." In the defense a claim was set up that he was not the father of the little newcomer of which the young woman was the mother, but the clerical judges sitting in trial had such convictions of his guilt that they at once deposed him from his charge. This is an additional sad reminder that being a minister of "the Gospel," all one's life, all the "sacratification," "grace," and "holy unction" which a life-long service in the cause of Jesus may be supposed to impart, are really no security against the charms and fascinations of a pretty, bright-eyed damsel.

Events of the Week.

EIGHT miners lost their lives in a mine disaster at Walesville, Pa.

WARM Summer weather is the order of the week, with occasional showers—almost too often to make good haying weather.

THOMAS PLACIDE, the favorite comedian, committed suicide by shooting himself in the temple. Cause, an incurable and extremely painful cancer.

THE Russo-Turkish war has not made any very special advance since our last. Reports have come in of decided advantages gained by the Turks, but the reports need confirmation.

NOTWITHSTANDING several proclamations by the President and the governors of several States, the strike riots seem to be spreading in every direction. How useless to destroy valuable property to merely gratify a morbid spirit of lawlessness.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Witness has discovered the cause of the railroad riots. It is a just judgment of God visited upon the companies for their desecration of the Sabbath in running their trains on Sunday. That fellow deserves a leather medal for his remarkable discovery.

MARY MUNCKE, a little girl five years old, took her father a can of coffee on the Bremen steamship dock, Hoboken. The child stood on the end of the pier, and called: "Papa, here's your coffee," and at the same instant she was caught in the machinery of the hoisting apparatus and crushed to death.

THE volcano of Cotapaxi, in Central America, has been on a rampage lately. Its eruptions have spread destruction over the fine valleys of Ohillo and Gumbaco. On June 28th a loud explosion was heard in Latuacanzo, which was followed by an immense stream of turbid water that bore away houses, cattle and people in great numbers.

THE great event of the week has been the railroad strikes in West Virginia, Maryland, and Western Pennsylvania, and which have extended to Ohio, New York, New Jersey, and other States. It began at Martinsburg, W. Va., on account of a reduction of ten per cent. in the wages of the employees. The sympathy of the people for the strikers emboldened them and incited them to destroy property belonging to the railroad company. U. S. troops were sent in, and order was restored. The strike next broke out in Baltimore. Troops were soon on hand. The mob threw volleys of stones at them and they fired upon the mob, killing some ten and wounding twice the number. Pittsburgh has seen the most bloody work. The strike spread rapidly until it became a mad, ungoverned riot. 1,500 troops were sent there from Philadelphia and upon being pressed and stoned by the mob they returned fire, but were compelled to take shelter in the round-house of the railroad company. They were fired upon by the rioters and several of them were killed, and cars loaded with coke were soaked with crude petroleum, set on fire, and run down to the round-house. The troops—who were nearly starved—were forced to vacate, which they did mid great peril. The large Union Depot, two hotels, and many other buildings, 3,500 cars and 176 locomotives were destroyed, and some 200 persons were killed. The value of the property destroyed is estimated at $5,000,000. The troops were badly handled, and by being ordered to fire upon the crowd, which they did indiscriminately, excited the deepest indignation of the people, and greatly increased the loss of life and the destruction of property. Experience in this case would seem to advise that no troops at all be sent in, unless enough are sent to fully overpower the mob. Large numbers of the people all over the country are in sympathy with the strikers. Threatening demonstrations have been made in various portions of the country, and gravest fears of a general insurrection are entertained. Government and State troops have been extensively called out. In Washington great excitement has prevailed, and the heads of the Government have been forced to give earnest attention to the alarming state of affairs. Meetings of sympathizers with the strikers have been held in various places.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

PART III.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER. NO. IX.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As the vigilant farmer walks around his fields after a wind-storm has passed over them, to replace here a fallen board, and to readjust there a leaning post, so I will have to glance over my last letter; after the gust of your "Reply" has swept over it, to put things back where they properly belong.

It appears by the number of THE TRUTH SEEKER that brings your last letter, that you have an assistant. So, some of your friends thought what your humble opponent did not suspect, far less insinuate—that you are not able, unaided, to defend your cause.

I am very sorry your Allied Power misunderstood and misrepresented me. By reverting to my last letter he will find that I did not justify the murder of Hypatia. I only endeavored to give all the facts of the case. In saying that most persecutors were sincere, though deluded, I was only repeating the testimony of such men as Hallam, Huxley, Buckle, White, in short, almost everybody who has written on the subject.

It is very easy to call an antagonist "a monster" and "no gentleman"; but it is quite another thing to refute his reasoning. Unkind insinuations are sometimes used as substitutes for arguments. No doubt the Philistines were ready to call David "a monster" when he slew their Goliath; and a well known individual was probably ready to say Jesus was "no gentleman" when he named him very correctly "a liar, and the father of it." I am determined, however, that no prudery, mock-modesty, or false charity shall keep me from telling the truth, to the best of my ability.

Since you have asked the question, I will explain why some religious people wish to insert a recognition of God in the Constitution of the United States: It is to protect it from misunderstanding and perversion, in the face of recent Atheistic claims in regard to it. The Christians of eighty years ago did not think of such an insertion, although they were more particular about such matters than the Christians of to-day. This shows that in their time the Constitution was not viewed by anybody as an Infidel document. Perversion of a law often necessitates an amendment, not to change its character, but to bring it back to its original scope and meaning.

You failed to strengthen your claim to Peter Cooper. I will only add that there is not a copy of Paine's works in the Cooper Institute, while there are plenty of Bibles on the tables of the reading-room. Does this look as if he were "one of your kind?"

All you have said of Cornell University can be disproved from the pen of President White himself. Referring to it, he says: "I might picture to you the strategy which has been used to keep earnest young men from an institution which, it is declared, cannot be Christian because it is not sectarian. . . . I might show how it has been denounced by the friends and agents of denominational colleges and in many sectarian journals; how the most preposterous charges have been made and believed by good men; how the epithets of 'godless,' 'infidel,' 'irreligious,' 'unreligious,' 'atheistic' have been hurled against a body of Christian trustees, professors, and students" (Warfare of Science, p. 144).

The silence of Herodotus about Jerusalem does not prove that that metropolis was insignificant. It might be shown in the same way precisely that Rome was an obscure, "semi-barbarous" town. Herodotus did not visit it, neither did he say a word about it. Your argument is a specimen of proving nothing by proving too much.

It is pleasing to see you beginning to give the names of some of your informants. I say beginning; for you still attempt to establish some of your points by an appeal to the testimony of "a friend," "a gentleman," "a trustworthy party," and "a personal friend." I entertain no disrespect for your friends; but in a controversy like this everything should be above-board. Anonymous testimony is as worthless here as it would be in a civil court.

You still ignore the distinction between Protestantism and Catholicism. This is neither philosophical nor ingenuous. There is neither sympathy, connection, nor co-operation between the two. Would it be right to hold the Government of the United States responsible for all the past acts of Great Britain, even if the latter is in some sense our "mother country"? So it is a flagrant injustice to charge the two innocent sections of Christendom with the errors and iniquities of Romanism.

I did not, as you insinuate, say a disrespectful word of true science. I spoke lightly of only the adulterated and counterfeited article.

You still insist that the ancient Jews were "semi-barbarians." I have already produced such an array of facts as utterly disproved this. How could they be "semi-barbarians" after sojourning for centuries in Egypt, at that time the most civilized country in the world? How could they be "semi-barbarians" when they were among the first to possess and foster the art of writing? How could they be "semi-barbarians" and be familiar with "many books?" (Ecc. xii. 12.) How could they be "semi-barbarians" and possess such a collection of wit and wisdom as the book of Proverbs? How could they be "semi-barbarians" when they had among them, ever since the days of Jacob, an idea that has made Darwin famous? I refer to the "variation of species under domestication" (Gen. xxx. 37-43). How could they be "semi-barbarians" when a queen of Sheba "came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon"? How could they be "semi-barbarians" and have one of the grandest Temples on the face of the earth? The difficulty to believe in the real existence of such a Temple is entirely removed by the fact that we have the architectural plan of that Temple to-day in the Jewish Scriptures. As we would understand that the age of Pericles was famous for its Art, even if we had nothing to show it except the conceptions of Phidias expressed in plans, sketches, and drawings, so we know from the conception and plan of a magnificent Temple, still before us in the Sacred Scriptures, that Solomon's was a Golden Age. As to the remains of that edifice, antiquarians disagree somewhat. It is not claimed that many remains have been found. What deeper and wider excavations may discover, is yet to be seen. Hitherto, whatever was imagined to be a relic of the ancient civilization, has either been destroyed by prejudice or carried away by superstition. Still, Prof. Rawson stands almost alone among travelers in saying that there are no indications of an ancient civilization in Palestine.

Now as to the "mythical theory": it certainly is on the wane. Baur, Bauer and Strauss are falling into disrepute. The halls of Tübingen are emptier than of yore. Dr. Schliemann's "Troy and its Remains" is showing that much of what the world had consigned to Mythology may, after all, belong properly to History.

Were I disposed to taunt you, I would still insist that Paine was a "myth." Doubtless you saw what somebody said had been Paine's grave. How did your informant know that the person who carried the remains (?) away was Wm. Cobbett? How do you know that those men who said they had "conversed with Paine" were not deceived? Have you not seen men who thought as firmly that they had "conversed" with ghosts? The story of Paine's skeleton hanging in a book-store, and then taken into a pottery to be ground, and mixed with clay, to be "made into ornaments, trinkets and keepsakes," is at once horrible and incredible. Paine—if such a man ever existed—was treated about as disrespectfully and barbarously as Hypatia. I guess, Bro. Bennett, you will have to settle down in the conclusion that Thomas Paine was a "myth," since it is as difficult to find his "remains" as those of Solomon's Temple.

Your dialogue between "Christianity" and "Science" is an innocent little thing. I have only to say that "Christianity," in this case, as in many others, has either been incorrectly reported, or else it has been personated by an enemy. I repudiate your ventriloquous dialogue altogether.

Your attempt to wash the "damned spots" of blood from the hands of the French "Freethinkers" is, of course, an utter failure. Seas of sophistry and explanations can neither scrub them out nor cover them up. The "Reign of Terror" was nothing more than "Freethought" embodied in free deeds. Many of the leaders of that "Reign" were Atheists. Several of them, however, and notably Robespierre and Paine, believed in the existence of a God. But they were all Infidels of some description.

You affect great nausea over some of the plain narratives of the Bible. It is true the sacred writers were more anxious to give the whole truth than to accommodate deranged stomachs. But will you please explain why Infidels are so much given to placing their hands on their noses when they approach the Bible, while they regard greater stenches in their own authors as sweet bouquets. Rousseau's writings are full of the grossest indecencies. Some of Michelet's works seethe with sensuality. A great deal of Byron's poetry is saturated with impurity. Voltaire's Pucelle stinks with obscenity. Diderot's Bijoux Indiscrets is simply a literary dunghill. Some of Dumas' novels are unfit for the walls of a water-closet. As Theodore Parker said, "there was a tinge of lowness" about your Pope, Thomas Paine. Victoria Woodhull—another "Liberal" champion—has been delivering her tongue—I will not say mind—of such stuff as might well bring the blush to the cheeks of rakehells and strumpets. Yes, and "reform" journals like the Boston Investigator and THE TRUTH SEEKER contain weekly advertisements of "Marriage Guides," "Plain Talks," "Sexual Physiology," and "Spermatorrhea" doctors (!)! Even my esteemed friend Bennett has defended and lionized men like John A. Lant, George Francis Train, E. B. Foote and Charles Bradlaugh, who have been convicted of circulating obscene literature. All this shows that "Freethinkers" feign vomiting over the "indelicacy" of the Bible, not because they are of such exquisite refinement and dainty modesty, but because they want some excuse for opposing a book which they dislike for other reasons.

Our third proposition is as follows: THAT THERE IS A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THERE IS THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE.

1. I will base my first argument on Phrenology. I do this mainly because the teachers of that system persist in calling it a "science," and because many Infidels profess to accept it. We are taught that the "Moral and Religious Faculties" occupy the central and highest place in the brain. They constitute what is termed the "crown of the head." A symmetrical and "large" development of these faculties is indispensable to a perfect manhood (Fowler's Phrenology, pp. 123-159). How deformed a human being would be with the top of his head scooped out half way to his ears! But that is what a consistent Infidel would call a faultless cranium! This is not the only sense in which Infidelity would fain deprive man of his crown.

2. Infidelity is always flattering human nature. We hear a great deal about the nobleness of the natural heart, and about the "Oracle of reason." If we may take the Infidel's word for it, the average sentiment of mankind is perhaps the highest standard of Truth.

I am willing to decide our case in this court of appeals. There is an innate and indestructible conviction in the average mind that Godliness is better than Godlessness; that Piousness is better than Impiousness; that Religion is better than Irreligion; that Puritanism is better than Impuritanism; that Fidelity is better than Infidelity.

3. Infidelity cannot be true because it is not self-consistent. What can be more contradictory than Atheism and Pantheism? Materialism and Spiritualism? Positivism and Nihilism? These cardinal isms do not differ merely on the surface, and in non-essentials. They are antagonistic and irreconcilable in their heart of hearts. They cannot, therefore, all be right. But which is true? That is a question which can never be settled on the Infidel principle. A decision, declared by any one, would be "dogmatism"; and "dogmatism," we are told, has no place in the world of "Liberalism."

4. Infidelity is inferior to the Scriptures because that, from its very nature, it is disintegrating and disorganizing. You cannot constitute government of any kind without forming and adopting a code of laws. But the moment you do that you encroach on the "sovereignty of the individual." The citizen is not then permitted to follow his own inclination in all the affairs of life. In other words, a civil creed has been made for him; and that is unutterably repugnant to "liberal" notions. In the language of a modern Atheist, noted for his diarrhæa verborum, "Every creed is a rock in running water; humanity sweeps by it. Every creed cries to the Universe 'Halt!' A creed is the ignorant past bullying the enlightened present." As mankind is everywhere adopting not only religious but social and civil creeds—laws and constitutions—it is plain that Infidelity is an enemy to compacts and organizations of all kinds. If "Freethinkers" are law-abiding citizens, it is because they are inconsistent. They withhold from civil enactments the objections which they bring against every religious declaration of principles. Were the Infidel doctrine to be applied simultaneously to everything, the whole world would be in a state of hopeless anarchy in twenty-four hours!

But in spite of its inconsistencies and restraints, the dissolving and disorganizing character of Unbelief is very manifest. Pure infidelity has produced no "Orders," "Brotherhoods," or "Societies." It has created no institutions of charity or learning. Of course, it is doing its utmost to annihilate the Church. Its self-styled "advanced thinkers" are endeavoring to sever the golden bonds of the family. The most godless nation within the limits of civilization—the French—are the most seditious and ungovernable. The history and the teachings of Infidelity prove that its tendency is to universal disintegration and decomposition—that is, universal death, since death is only dissolution. But this is an evidence of its dangerous and destructive character. What can men accomplish merely as individuals? Where may man find joy and blessedness as he can within the sacred covenants of Friendship and Wedlock? What hour was more auspicious to the world than that in which "WE THE PEOPLE" took a solemn oath to honor, obey, and defend our National Confession of Faith—the Constitution of the United States?

The Bible encourages by precept and example the organizing Principle. It gives no uncertain sound as to the sanctity and inviolability of the Family. It teaches obedience to lawfully-constituted and righteously-administered government. It has created the Church to promote man's moral and spiritual well-being. It teaches that "in union there is strength."

In the proportion that an organizing and integrating, i. e. a vital Principle is superior to a disorganizing and disintegrating, i. e. a fatal Principle, the Holy Bible is superior to Infidelity.

5. The Bible inculcates and Christians exercise more Sincerity than Infidels practice. The words "sincere," "sincerely," and "sincerity" are found about sixteen times in King James' Version. The same idea is set forth by many equivalents in words and phrases. Insincerity is one of the things which the Sacred Writings condemn most unsparingly.

How the Apostles showed the depth of their convictions by their incessant labors! How subsequent believers have evinced their earnestness by their adherence to principle, even under persecution and in death! The myriad churches of Christendom attest the sincerity of those who erected them. Doubtless the wolf of hypocrisy has stolen oftentimes among the sheep. But notwithstanding all, the Christian Church exhibits far more Sincerity than her opponents.

A great many Infidels have betrayed their life-long hypocrisy by their death-bed misgivings and confessions. Others have shown either fear, duplicity, or both, by not announcing their views until the close of their lives. Dr. Johnson used to say that "Bolingbroke was a scoundrel and a coward; he loaded a blunderbuss against Christianity which he had not the courage to fire during his life-time, but left half a crown to a hungry Scotsman to draw the trigger after he was dead." And Thomas Paine, about whose "honest convictions" and "boldness" we hear so much, said he believed it would be best to postpone the publication of his Deistical thoughts "to the latter part of life." If these men really believed that the principles they had to disseminate would be a blessing to the world, was it not a crime to withhold them so long? and did their delay not prove either that they did not care about benefiting mankind, or that they did not themselves believe what they had to say?

The insincerity of Infidels is shown farther by the scantiness of their efforts to propagate their ideas. Avowedly Infidel journals are not well supported. "Freethought Lecturers" have to do a prodigious amount of advertising, drumming up, and indirect self-puffing, in order to squeeze out a sufficient number of engagements to keep them in motion. All the Infidels in America have not zeal enough to remove the debt-incubus ($70,000) from the only structure between the two oceans erected and dedicated to the memory of Paine! In the great city of New York, the Infidels have never founded a building for their own use. The most they have done was to "hire a hall." And even in that they have not exhibited much generosity. "SCIENCE HALL!" That sounds well a thousand miles away. But when the place is actually visited, it will be found to be a dingy little back room with neither scientist nor scientific apparatus near it. If it is so important that the world should know the doctrines of Deism, Atheism, Spiritualism, Materialism

Free-Love, etc., why is it that the Infidels of Europe and America do not keep a legion of home and foreign missionaries continually at work? It is true Mr. Ingersoll—having nothing else to do—has gone to the California heathen to tell them about his "Ghosts" and "Bob"-goblins. But alas! his glad tidings are not for the poor. There is an "ADMISSION FIFTY CENTS" between the masses and the "Free-thoughts" of the "Free-thinker." And then, Mr. Ingersoll is—I hope I give no offense—only one man. The laborers are indeed few on the Infidel field. All this goes to show how shallow and inactive is the conviction and sincerity of skeptics generally.

Other things being equal, the greater the sincerity, the greater the merit. But "other things" are equal, and more than equal on the side of the Bible and its believers. Hence, the superior Sincerity of Christians, as compared with Unbelievers, goes to establish the affirmative of our proposition.

6. There is another fact worthy of serious consideration: Immorality is consistent with Infidelity. I do not by this mean that all unbelievers are bad men; but that, if they were so, no one would feel that they were at variance with "Free-thought." It is quite true that many professors of religion have been guilty of unlawful practices. But everybody felt that they were acting contrary to their profession and principles. Everybody exclaimed, How inconsistent! Everybody thought they should be censured or excommunicated. And the Church is continually doing this. Little does the outside and fault-finding world know of her concern for her erring ones. But it ought to see that she does not permit sin to pass unnoticed. You and other Infidels seem to take ecstatic delight in recounting the vices and crimes of men who were once ministers. But we may show by these very men the infinite superiority of Christianity over Infidelity. Even suspicion will degrade the standing of a clergyman. Those who have been convicted of immorality have been deposed. They have ceased to be preachers; and it is improper to speak of them as such. This fact, backed by the public sentiment, proves that Immorality and Christianity are inconsistent.

But with Infidelity it is not so. An Infidel cannot injure his standing, as an Infidel, by anything he may do. No injustice or villainy on his part could bring mankind to feel that he had violated his principles. This can be shown from history. Bolingbroke could be a "notorious libertine"; Byron could be a scandalous debauchee; Shelley could leave his wife, even when she was with child, and break her heart by living with a "companion"; Girard could quarrel with his wife until she became insane; Chesterfield could advise his bastard son to be a whore-master; Rousseau could live in adultery, and send his illegitimate children to the Foundling Hospital; Voltaire could perjure himself, tamper with legal documents, spend years "platonically" (?) with a female that was never his wife; Collins, Ralph, and Keith could "greatly wrong" Franklin; John Stuart Mill could associate with a "lady friend" in a way that would have blasted the name of a clergyman; Auguste Comte could mislead a living woman, and worship a dead one; Paine could live with Mrs. Bonneville, and be "godfather" to her youngest son "who had been named after him"; Goethe could be himself the Mephistopheles who defiled and ruined many a poor Marguerite; Gen. Charles Lee could be unfaithful to his trust; Tweed could steal millions from the city of New York; S. S. Jones could seduce another man's wife; Dr. Dillingham could be indicted for practicing abortion; George Francis Train can act the fool to his heart's content; Victoria Woodhull can be the quintessence of nastiness—all these could be all this, and nobody thinks any the less of Infidelity! Nobody ever remarked that they were at all inconsistent with "Liberalism." They did the cause no harm.

You may array all the counter-charges you please. But the fact will still remain that Christianity condemns immorality, while Infidelity is consistent with it, and encouraging to it. This was the deliberate judgment of Franklin, when he said in his Autobiography that "immorality and injustice might have been expected from a want of religion," and when he asked in one of his letters: "If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it?"

The Bible, that prohibits "all appearance of evil," is certainly superior to Infidelity, which is both inviting to, and consistent with, every species of iniquity.

7. Infidels are full of all the short-comings with which they charge Christians. They are bigoted. It is said that the word "bigot" originated with Rollo, who, when he was required to kiss the foot of King Charles in return for the province of Neustria, replied, "Ne se, bi Got."—Not so, by G—d In this sense of using profane language, "Freethinkers" are generally the greatest bigots in the world. Col. Ingersoll is "matchless" at cursing and swearing. And they are bigoted in the sense of being "unreasonably devoted to a system or party, and illiberal toward the opinions of others." How many of them boast that they never go inside of a church! How few of them give the Christian side a candid and thorough study! Such books as I mentioned in my last letter are not examined by the mass of Infidels. Many of them heartily hate everything and everybody that is religious. All this is bigotry.

Infidels are illiberal. We have already shown that they are so with their money. They have endowed scarcely any institutions of learning. They support no charities. The best hospitals of Germany, France, England, and America are under religious auspices. I have before me a "Hand-book of the Benevolent Institutions and Charities of New York for 1877." The Jews, the Catholics, and all the Protestant denominations have a noble record. But it does not appear that the Infidels are supporting one hospital or benevolent institution.

Neither are they "liberal" even toward each other. There was a furious rumpus at one of the "Liberal Club" elections not many weeks ago. Do you not rather think the Investigator is trying to "freeze" out THE TRUTH SEEKER? Less than a century ago Infidels beheaded Infidels in Paris. Hume and Rousseau had a most violent quarrel. The "Liberal" Pike shot the "Liberal" Jones because the latter had been very "liberal" with Mrs. Pike.

They are extremely illiberal to professing Christians. When rumors are afloat about a minister or a church member, they always believe the worst, and that before there is proof of guilt. If they can help it, they will tolerate nothing that has the least savor of religion in it. Stephen Girard represented the character of their "Liberalism" when he made an imperative stipulation in his will that no minister should ever enter Girard College. Several of the originally orthodox Universities of Germany have permitted Rationalism to be taught in them; but there never was an institution under Rationalistic or Infidel control that would tolerate evangelical instruction within its walls.

Infidels are hypocritical. According to Infidel writers, they are very hypocritical. How often do we see and hear the assertion that there are ever so many that are Infidels at heart, who yet allow themselves to pass for orthodox in society, in the Church, yea, and in the pulpit. As far as this is false, it proves that those who say so are liars. As far as it is true, it proves that Infidels are craven and sneaking hypocrites. Toland professed to be a "Freethinker" and a "good churchman" alternately, as self-interest dictated. When Voltaire was over fifty years of age, he dedicated one of his plays to Pope Benedict XIV, wrote to him as his "Most Blessed Father," and "Head of the true religion," requesting his benediction, and closing with these words: "With the profoundest reverence, I kiss your sacred feet" (Voltaire's Works, trans. by Smollett and Franklin, London, 1763, Vol. xxv, p. 16). It is plain from this that Voltaire was either a Catholic in heart, and an Infidel dissembler, or else he was an Infidel in heart, and a Catholic dissembler. But have it as you will, he was a hypocrite. We have seen already that Thomas Paine pretended to be a believer in the Christian Religion during the period of the Revolution. It is on record that David Hume advised a friend to take false vows, and preach doctrines he did not believe, in order that he might get the emoluments. For myself, I have always been suspicious of the pretended respect of Materialistic editors for Spiritualism.

Infidels are superstitious. If anything is a greater exhibition of superstition than Spiritualism, I would like to know what it is. The majority of the "clairvoyants," and "astrologers," that disgrace our cities are "advanced" Spiritualists, or some nondescripts in that neighborhood. I am really surprised to find THE TRUTH SEEKER, that pretends to be so opposed to impostures of all kinds, advertising "astrologers." Quite recently a gentleman in Washington was offering for sale Thomas Paine's old spectacles and shoe-buckles (TRUTH SEEKER, March 3, 1877). Verily! some Infidels have come right down to venerating relics! I have heard that extremes meet; and lo! an instance—the Catholic and the Infidel meeting devoutly at the sacred shrine of the Relic, the one kneeling in the presence of Peter's sandal, and the other bowing before Paine's spectacles! O, what a spectacle!

Infidels exercise blind credulity. You will perhaps regard this as the keenest cut of all. But nothing can be more true. How many there are who believe everything they see in Infidel papers! They do not verify what they read. They simply sit down to swallow. Skeptics talk a great deal about the conclusions of science. But can they personally follow the astronomer through his computations? Can they personally accompany the geologist step by step until he arrives at his inferences? Can they personally comprehend and see all the intermediate "evidences" of Evolution? No; not one in ten thousand is able to do this. They merely accept by faith the conclusions of others. As far as they themselves are concerned, it is "going it blind."

Infidels are very much given to copying one another. How many have got into trouble because they quoted Voltaire, imagining that he was a reliable historian! Perhaps you will allow me to say that your own "World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers" is far from being trustworthy. Many of its claims, assertions, and implications are demonstrably incorrect. Now I do not impute this to dishonesty in my friend Mr. Bennett. I do not believe that he would intentionally play the Ananias with the gold of Truth. I ascribe it entirely to his unfortunate combination of credulity and incredulity. He believes too much evil and too little good about Christians, and he believes too much good and too little evil about Infidels. The action of incredulity always begets an equally great reaction of credulity.

Infidels are unprogressive. The Paine sect of unbelievers is producing very little that is new. Nearly a century has passed, and yet nothing better to offer a "thinker" than the "Age of Reason"! Too bad! Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is still kept in circulation, fraught with the ignorance and blunders of more than a hundred years ago! The Infidels of to-day are living on old hash, cold hash, and rehash.

All this goes to show that "Liberals" have every fault which they impute to Christians. They call themselves "Reformers," but they are not reformed. They imagine they are "advanced" and "progressive," when in reality they are only going ahead like the crab—backwards. And they are more hopeless than anybody because they fancy they are superior to everybody.

My article is already long, and I must break off right here. I trust that the reader has received some assistance to see that Infidelity cannot be true, 1. Because even Phenology condemns it. 2. Because the average sentiment of mankind is against it. 3. Because it is hopelessly self contradictory. 4. Because it is a disorganizing, fatal principle. 5. Because it is comparatively insincere. 6. Because it is consistent with immorality. And 7. Because Infidels, though they style themselves "Reformers," have all the imperfections of those whom they condemn and persecute.

I beg pardon, if occasionally I have been a little ironical or sarcastic. I want to close with a good feeling all around. I cherish the best wishes for my doubting friends. I would that, as searchers for Truth, they would take for their example some model man, like Sir Isaac Newton. In him met all the elements of complete manhood. He was as pure as the snow-flake, and as strong as the granite. He was as simple as a child, and as profound as Nature. He combined in his soul the critical and the devout, the manly and the godly. To be one such a man is better than to be a thousand kings.

Yours with respect, G. H. HUMPHREY.

The Reign of Terror.

For several days a fearful state of things has ruled in several States in our country. On Friday and Saturday of last week railroad employees in West Virginia, Maryland, and Western Pennsylvania inaugurated a very extensive strike, which has produced a sad loss of life and property in Pittsburgh and other places, and as this paper is about being sent to press it looks as though the disaffection is rapidly extending, and the principal railroads of the country and many other labor interests would become greatly involved. Already many millions' worth of property have been ruthlessly destroyed, and where it is to end no man can tell.

In divining the cause of this terrible condition of affairs, much of it must rest upon the great railroad monopolies. For the last fifteen years the managers of the leading lines of road have become more and more corrupt. Stocks have been watered to the tune of millions. By over issue and every species of fraud that the mind has been able to invent, millions upon millions have been literally stolen from the people and placed in the pockets of the railroad kings. To enable them to draw their usual princely salaries and perquisites, and to pay the stockholders their looked-for dividends during these financially dark times, the wages of the employees have been cut down to such an extent that in thousands of cases it has been nearly impossible for them to find food for their families. Hungry men, oppressed men, and maddened men will become desperate. Hence, they rush into strikes, outbreaks, and recklessly destroy property. These are a natural result of the exactions and oppressions alluded to, but it is a miserable remedy. The destruction of property can do no possible good. To let the incendiary flame run riot in any city, or to inaugurate the rule of anarchy, is the worst possible cure for any of the ills which the working classes are compelled to endure.

There is no questioning the fact that many railroads in the country have been running at an absolute loss of money, but it would have been better, nevertheless, to pay the employees reasonable wages, than, by a merciless reduction, to have inaugurated the present state of affairs. Before order is again restored enough property will have been destroyed to pay the wages of all the employees for a period of six months.

Strikes are unsatisfactory resorts for the ills that weigh upon the laboring classes, and they never fail to be attended with evil results, and it is a saddening prospect that the tendency is so alarmingly on the increase. Mob rule is the worst of all rule. In the frenzy of excitement exasperated men will perform acts they would never commit in their saner moments.

But what is to be done? Men will not famish and see their families starve when a favored few are getting enormously rich, and the working classes becoming poorer and poorer.

Our fair land is struggling under several forms of aristocracy. The aristocracy of wealth is probably the most exacting, and its power is increasing almost in geometrical proportion. The aristocracy of office-holders is another form and is being sustained by fraud and corruption of the darkest dye. The aristocracy of priestcraft is another onerous form, and it not only helps to keep down the toiling classes, but dooms their souls to eternal torture unless they acknowledge having a great amount of faith and give freely of their earnings for its support. The best feature in reference to this species of aristocracy is that it is gradually losing its hold. More and more people are becoming bold enough to shake off the persistent incubus and are feeling competent to do their own thinking.

What the country needs is a great increase in general intelligence and good old-fashioned honesty. The common people have the power in the ballot to remedy existing ills if they will only exercise the harmony and intelligence necessary to its use.

If every man will appoint himself a committee of one to see that an honest man is added to the number of honest men, a world of rascality will be expelled from the world.

May all classes learn prudence, moderation and justice.

Our studious and talented young friend, Dr. Henry R. Birdsall, is about to sail for Europe to add further to his medical education. He has already graduated from two of the first medical colleges of this city, having previously graduated from a literary college in Massachusetts, but he has purposed to spend a year or two in Europe and avail himself of the superior facilities for the medical student found in London and Edinburgh. He is an earnest Liberal and a warm friend to THE TRUTH SEEKER. We wish his sojourn on the other side of the ocean may be both pleasant and advantageous to him; that he will find congenial and appreciative friends, and that he will return to us with a large accession to the learning he has already acquired, and with the health and ability to pursue a long and successful practice.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 29.

Great Jehovah, if thou art the author of the great book called the Bible; if thou didst write it thyself, or causedst thy chosen servants to write it according to thy will and desire, are we not justified in looking for nought but purity and excellence in it?

If we find that which is sensual, vulgar, and obscene, are we not correct in concluding that such portions, at least, of the volume did not proceed from thy holy mind?

Even if the old patriarchs and those on whom thou wert pleased to bestow thy special favor, were guilty of vile and sensual conduct, didst thou take pleasure in transmitting the same or in causing it to be transmitted for succeeding generations?

Was the story of thy servant Lot getting drunk on different occasions and committing the crime of incest with his two daughters an affair worthy to be incorporated in thy holy word?

If it was true that Sarai, the wife of Abraham, induced her husband to hold sexual commerce with their servant-girl, Hagar, was it a matter required to form a part of thy revelation to mankind?

Is the story of the worse than beastly conduct of the Sodomites a pretty one for the young male and female members of thy family to read?

Is the detailed description of every time that old Jacob had intercourse with his two wives and his two concubines or hand-maids, with the effect thus produced, essential to be told in thy holy volume?

Could not the narrative about the process by which Jacob cheated his father-in-law, Laban, in procuring striped and speckled cattle with propriety have been omitted?

Is not the story of the amour between Schechem and Dinah, together with the sad loss of life which grew out of it, one of which the tenor is more corrupting to the young mind than purifying?

Is the lustful conduct of Reuben with his father's concubine, Bilhah, a nice story for little boys and girls?

Is the story about Judah's cohabiting with his son's wife, who arrayed herself as a harlot and laid in wait for him on the highway, such a kind of godliness as is delightful to hold up to the unexperienced as a guide and example?

Was the part that Onan played in the narrative such a one as should be explained to the comprehension of the rising generation?

Were the designs which Mrs. Potiphar had upon the saintly Joseph, when she asked him to lie with her of such a character as entitles them to be held up for other wives to study and practice?

Is the portion of thy holy law as given in Leviticus xv. well suited as lessons for Sunday-school children to study and ponder over?

Does Leviticus xviii., which gives full instruction as to the nakedness of which relatives he shall not uncover, make good reading lessons for the young of both sexes in our public schools?

Does Leviticus xx. treat of such pure and heavenly subjects that the youth of our country, both male and female, can profit by in carefully studying?

Are portions of Numbers v., giving instructions how a husband and the priest shall proceed with a wife when the husband is jealous of her, commendable literature for inexperienced minds?

Is the account in Numbers xxv., where Zimri held sinful connection with Cozbi in the sight of all the congregation of Israel, whereupon Phineas, the priest, run them both through the body, a suitable subject for thy children to meditate upon before they assemble to worship thee?

Is Numbers xxxi., wherein is related the killing of mothers and the male children of the Midianites and the keeping of the young girls for the use of the soldiers, and all by thy command, a study calculated to stimulate our admiration for thy mercy, kindness and purity?

Is it a matter of probability that in a nation of pagans or idolators, that thy servants could find thirty two thousand women who had never lain with man?

Were not the processes and tests necessary to be applied to ascertain the fact, of a highly interesting character, though possibly before the close a trifle monotonous?

Would it not have been interesting to know how many women passed through the necessary course of examination to find thirty-two thousand who had never lain with man?

As the statistics are not given, would not an estimate that the total number of women examined must at least have been one hundred thousand to find thirty-two thousand virgins, a very moderate one?

If one hundred thousand women of any Christian country to-day were submitted to such a test as the Midianite women were compelled by thy command to endure, would more than thirty-two thousand be found whom men had never approached?

Were the tokens of virginity which in Deuteronomy xxii thou didst prescribe to be observed of the same character as were used with the girls of Midian and also the same that were later used among the young females of Jabesh-gilead, as given in Judges xxi, 2-25?

Are the exactions thou laidst upon thy people when wounded in their private parts such as thou wishest them to observe to-day?

Was not thy judgment upon the bastards a very severe one? Is a bastard really to blame for being a bastard? Was that law in operation at the time of the Virgin and Child?

Is not the law in Deuteronomy xxxiii, 12-14, about paddles being carried for a certain purpose rather a curiosity? Wouldst thou really have been in danger of being defiled if this law had not been carried out?

Is not the law given in Deuteronomy xxv, 2, another curious one for a god to give?

Is the story of Sodomy and lust as detailed in Judges xix, 22-29, a beautiful one for youth to meditate upon?

Is the amorous story of thy servant David watching from his housetop to see his neighbor Bath-sheba when she was taking a bath a fit one to be carefully and frequently studied by young men and women?

Does not Psalms xxxviii, claimed to have been written by David, sound very much as though he had contracted a very offensive and loathsome disease?

Is the account of David's son Amnon committing a rape on his own sister the best kind of reading for children and youth?

Is the conduct of another of David's sons, Absalom, when he held sexual connection with the concubines of his father in the sight of all the people, the choicest kind of reading to impart pure thoughts?

Are the details of the lascivious Solomon, who is held up as a remarkable wise man and a favorite of thine, with his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, the best kind of mental pabulum for those in search of purity and heavenly-mindedness.

Is not the delectable and highly amorous composition called "The Song of Solomon," wherein the charms and fascinations of the male and female forms are described in glowing and passionate language, the most proper kind of reading matter for maturing boys and girls?

Are there not many passages in the writings attributed to thy holy prophets which are neither modest nor suitable for reading in schools or in a mixed company of ladies and gentlemen?

Is not Ezekiel xvi, with its sixty-three verses, a case in point? and are not parts of Ezekiel xxiii. of a similar character?

Are not the Jewish Scriptures more replete with broad and indelicate stories and allusions than the Bibles of the other ancient nations? Do these not teach morals as pure and as elevated, quite as worthy of belief and veneration?

In view of these portions of what is called thy "Holy word," with the many others not here referred to, is there not ample room for the gravest doubts of their being the productions of thy spotless mind, an emanation from thy immaculate spirit?

Do not these portions of the ancient Jewish writings sound far more like the productions of crude and partially developed minds who had made but slight advancement in the culture and refinement which pertains to the highest civilization?

Whatever may have been the origin of these old writings, containing as they do so much that is crude, coarse, indelicate, libidinous, obscene and wholly inadapted to the present condition and needs of mankind, are they not unfit for a reading book in our public schools, for a text-book for Sunday-schools, or as an object of special worship and veneration for millions of our partially progressed minds who feel that they want something mystical and miraculous to bear up, clasp to their bosoms, and like a fetish bow down to and worship?

Will not the world, when it has attained to a high degree of mental culture, and has become familiar with all departments of scientific truth, be able to dispense with all the relics of past mysticism, superstitions and absurdities, when men and women will love and revere that only which is pure and that only which is true?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Great Works of Thomas Paine, Complete.

We have recently published in one volume the Great Works of Paine. In speaking of it in the Investigator Mr. Mendum says: "The edition published lately in New York and advertised as Paine's Complete Works does not contain the whole of Paine's works." In writing to a mutual friend in this city in reference to the plates from which the work was printed, and touching a statement we had made in reference to them, he had the kindness to say (we quote from memory): "What is the word of a man worth who advertises the Complete Works of Paine, when he knows, and you know, they are no such thing?" We wish to state, for the information of Mr. Mendum and all others, that we have not have not advertised the publication of the "Complete Works of Paine," but the "Great Works of Paine, Complete."

The writings of Paine are properly divided into his Great Works and his Minor Works. The former consist of Common Sense, The Crisis, The Rights of Man, The Age of Reason, The Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop Llandaff, Letter to Mr. Erskine, An Essay on Dreams, Letter to Camille Jordan, A Letter to a Friend on the Publication of The Age of Reason, Private Thoughts on a Future State, A Discourse Delivered before the Society of Theophrastophiles, Remarks on Hall's Sermons, On the Word Religion, Of Cain and Abel, The Tower of Babel, Letter to Samuel Adams, Letter to Andrew A. Dean, etc. These are the Great Works of Paine, and we have published them Complete. We insist that we have not made the slightest misrepresentation in the matter.

The Minor Works are An Address to the Quakers, Public Good, Letter to Abbe Raynal, Dissertation on Government, Address to the Addressers, and other essays and letters, to which may be added his poems. These are not included in our volume, nor have we said they were. We have named those of his works which our book contains, and we have had no desire to mislead the public. We well know our volume does not contain all that Paine wrote. Neither does Mr. Mendum's. His Treatise on Excise is not in Mr. Mendum's edition, neither are many of his private letters. Ours contains the works most sought for. Those who wish the Great Works of Paine in one fine volume at $3.00 will doubtless avail themselves of the work we offer them. Those who prefer to give $4.00 for the essays, letters and poems we have omitted, and obtain his not complete works at $7.00, we presume will purchase Mr. Mendum's edition. There is no necessity for any ill will. The works of Paine are free to be published by any person who wishes to publish them, without infringing upon anybody's rights. We have simply exercised this right. In this case, as well as in others, we have endeavored to publish at the lowest possible prices.

As regards moral conduct, we hope to do nothing base, but it is possible we might do some things that Mr. M. would not do; and he possibly might do some things that we would not. "Let us have peace."

Liberty for Man, Woman and Child.

At the urgent request of many patrons to publish Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture on "Liberty," we cheerfully comply, believing its perusal will give our readers unbounded satisfaction. It was given in several cities of our country, but we use a report of its rendition in St. Louis. We shall issue it also in tract form at 5 cents per copy; 35 cents per dozen, or $2.50 per hundred. Sent, post-paid, by mail.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: There is no slavery but ignorance. Freedom is the child of intelligence. Allow me to assure you that in what I shall say to-night there will be no wish to wound the feelings of any one. For all who are trying to make this world better, and for all who express their honest thought, I have no feelings save those of genuine admiration and respect. Neither am I ignorant of the fact that my opinions are not endorsed by multitudes of most excellent and most learned people—people, too, who are giving their lives and their fortunes to improve, as they believe, the condition of their fellow-men. I shall give you my ideas on this subject, actuated only by what I consider a sacred obligation. I hope and believe that you will agree with me when I say that every person has the right to form an opinion upon any subject whatever, and the right to express that opinion when formed. I claim this right for you as earnestly as for myself. If somebody had not had the courage and goodness to speak his honest thought, progress would have been impossible; we should all be barbarians to-day; we should all be savages, with pictures of beasts tattooed upon our naked flesh, dancing round dried snake fetiches.

The history of man is simply the history of slavery, of injustice and cruelty, together with the means by which he has through the dead years slowly and painfully advanced. He has been the sport and prey of priest and king, the food of superstition and brute might. Crowned force has governed ignorance through fear. Hypocrisy and tyranny, two vultures, have fed on the flesh of mankind. From all these there has been, and is, but one means of escape—the intellectual development of man. Upon the back of industry has been the whip; upon the brain of the world has been the chain of superstition; nothing has been left undone by the enemies of freedom. Every art and artifice, every outrage and cruelty, has been practiced and perpetrated to destroy the liberty of man. In the great struggle every crime has been rewarded; every virtue has been punished; reading, writing, printing, and thinking have all been crimes. Every science has been an outcast. All the altars and all the thrones united to arrest the forward march of the human race. The king said, "The masses of mankind must not work for themselves." The priest said, "The masses of mankind must not think for themselves." One had chains for hands, and the other fetters for souls. Under this infamous régime, the eagle of the human intellect was for ages a bat of darkness. The human race was imprisoned. Through some of the prison bars came a few straggling rays of light. Against those doors science pressed its pale and thoughtful face. Moved by the holy dawn of human advance, bar after bar was broken away. A few grand men escaped and devoted their lives to the liberation of their fellows. It is now almost impossible to conceive of the ignorance and the cruelty of the ages gone.

Let me give you, for instance, a few ideas on this subject. There was in the world for ages no law except superstition; there was no way of arriving at the truth except by chance. If a man claimed he was innocent, and it was claimed by the government that he was guilty, he was tried by fire, or by water, the people of that time believing that some deity would interpose and save the life of the innocent. The last man tried by chance in Great Britain was a peer of the realm. Any man at that time charged with a capital offense had the right to appeal to what they called the corned. That was a little piece of bread about half an inch square, that had been consecrated by a priest, and if that man would appeal to the corned, and could swallow it without choking, he went acquit. Such was the idea of justice, or rather of the administration of justice, in the good old times. They tried men, as I said, by fire; they tried men by water, and in the history of the world I will show you that in many instances hundreds even of beasts have been used in courts of justice as witnesses. In medicine it was the same thing.

No matter what ailed a man, it was the belief that he had a devil in him—a bad spirit—and the science of medicine consisted in making the man's body so uncomfortable for the spirit that he would leave the premises. It was believed that the smoke produced by the burning of the liver of a fish or dried snake, the leg of a toad or the tongue of an adder, would cause one of those spirits to go away, and the science of medicine consisted for years and years in the practice of such follies and of such nonsense. So it was in everything that we call science. There was a belief simply in superstition. The natural was too common. No one ever took note of a natural occurrence unless there was something miraculous to them about it. All the grand things in nature they perfectly understood. They knew that the world was flat. They knew that the sun and stars revolved around it. These were questions with which they never bothered their heads, but it was the miraculous, the wonderful, that attracted the attention of mankind, and in those blessed days they had a convenient way of making people adopt their views; they had no confidence in education; they had no confidence in persuasion, in reason, in logic, in art, in anything that elevates mankind; they appeal simply to the one thing—brute force. That was all they knew.

About two years ago I saw models of all the old instruments of torture that were used by our ancestors for the purpose of convincing a man that he had made a mistake in his reasoning. I saw the old instruments of torture; I looked at them, and until I saw and examined them I never had really appreciated what had been done in this world. I saw there a little thing they called a thumb-screw—two little innocent-looking pieces of iron, with a screw at each end, and the inner surfaces of these pieces of iron were armed with protuberances to prevent their slipping from the thumb of the victim. Where a man had made a mistake in some religious conviction, where he was not entirely right upon the subject of infant baptism, they put upon his thumb this instrument of torture, and these people, in the name of religion, in the name of universal forgiveness, in the name of God, whom they claimed was the father of all mankind, would screw down this end and then that end, and ask him if he was not yet convinced. If he still persisted in his heresy they would screw it down still more, and say, "Examine your mind; haven't you made a mistake? haven't you left something out in your chain of reasoning?" and so they would keep turning and so they would keep asking, and finally, if he was not yet convinced, they would leave it to swell in order to convince him; or they would throw him into a cell, where in the silence of the throbbing darkness he endured this torture. That was done in the name of religion; that was done in the name of universal love and forgiveness; that was done by gentlemen who prayed for their enemies, and when smitten on one cheek pretended that they turned the other.

I saw at the same time an instrument called the Collar of Torture, an instrument of iron, to clasp around the neck of the sufferer. On the inside it was armed with a hundred points, as sharp as needles, and when this thing was put upon the neck the man couldn't lie down or sit down. He could do nothing. The slightest motion gave him pain, and after a little while the neck would be pierced by these needles, and then it would swell until it produced suffocation and death. This was done in the name of civilization.

Think of it; think of it! And let me say right here, every man in the city of St. Louis that says "I will not trade with that man because he differs with me about my religion, I will not vote with that man because he differs with me about my religion," that man has the hellish spirit of persecution in him yet.

I saw at the same time an instrument called the "Scavenger's Daughter." Well named! Imagine a pair of shears with handles at the points as well as where they now are and just above the pivot, fitting the blades, another circle of iron. Into the lower places the feet would be forced, into the upper the hands, and into the middle one the head. And when in that position, a man simply had to suffer. There was no ease, no rest. And this was done, I tell you, in the name of goodness, in the name of love; and they pretended they had the command of an Infinite Being. Think of it!

I saw also at the same time a rack. Imagine a wagon-bed with a windlass at each end; the windlass is armed with levers, and a ratchet to prevent slipping. The victim was laid in this bed, chains attached to his ankles and to his wrists, they going over these windlasses, and then those gentlemen who wished to convince a human soul of an error began turning these levers, and they would turn, and turn, and turn, until the ankles, the knees, the hips, the shoulders, the elbows, the wrists, were all disjoined, and the sufferer covered with the sweat of agony, while there bent above him the white hypocritical faces of fiendish priests. This was done in order to convert a man, in order to make a man change his mind, in order to make the eagle of the human intellect fold its pinions. I want to live to see that spirit, every particle of it, out of the hearts of men. I want to live, until every man will be willing to give to every other man every right that he claims for himself; and the man that will not do it is a scoundrel and a villain!

When I read the history of this world; when I read the history of liberty and of slavery; when I read what has been suffered by mankind; when I read of the prisons—the dread of all these horrors—it seems to me that I have suffered them all myself. It seems as though I had stood upon the shore of exile and looked with tear-filled eyes towards my country, towards my wife and my children, that I should never see again. It seems as though I had been in the cell of the Inquisition, and waited with dying ears to hear the footsteps of release that never came. It seems as though I had been upon the scaffold, and as though the glittering axe had fallen upon me; as though my nails had been torn from my hands, and into the bleeding quick needles had been thrust; as though I had been taken from my fireside to the public square, chained to the stake, fagots piled upon me, and as though the flames had twined around my limbs and scorched my eyes to blindness; as though I had been burned to dust and my ashes had been scattered to the four winds of heaven by the countless hands of hatred; and when I feel so, I swear that what little I can do in this short life for the liberty of man, woman and child, by the gods, I WILL do.

In those good old days the Church taught that man was totally depraved; and I might add, right here, that the actions of the Church furnished about the only evidence of the truth of that doctrine. I don't believe in the doctrine of total depravity, nor in that of perfection. I claim neither as far as I am concerned. The truth is, we are both good and bad, with a majority, probably, of the latter commodity. The bad are capable of good deeds, and the good are capable of bad. The lowest can rise, and the highest may fall. The division of mankind into two great classes, sinners and saints, is an utter falsehood. This great city is covered with the gloom of a frightful disaster. Men did deeds there brighter than the flames they fought. Called by the despairing voices of women, they rushed to death as to a festival. Such men are not depraved. Deeds were there done so filled with self-sacrifice and generous daring that millions have already paid to them the tribute of holy tears. Above all creeds, above all religions, is that divine thing, humanity; and now and then in shipwreck on the wide, wild sea, or 'mid the rocks and breakers of some cruel shore, or where the serpents of flame breathe, curl and hiss, some glorious heart, some chivalric soul, does a deed that glitters like a star and gives the lie to all the dogmas of superstition of the soul.

I have said to you that the race to which I belong has been guilty of almost countless crimes, but I have some excuse for them. In my judgment, this world is not very well adapted to raising good folks. In the first place, nearly all of it is water. It is much better adapted to fish culture than to the production of people. Of that which is land, not one-eighth has a suitable soil and climate to produce good men and women. You cannot raise good men or good women without a soil and climate, any more than you can raise corn on the field of the Arctic Ocean. You have got to have the surroundings. Man is a product of this rolling earth. You must have the soil, you must have the food, and nature must not be so powerful that man cannot to a certain degree overcome the obstacles by which he is surrounded. In this world there is only a narrow belt of land circling zig zag around the globe, upon which you can produce men and women of genius. In the Southern Hemisphere the real climate that man needs falls only upon the sea, and the result is that the Southern half of the world has never produced a man or woman of genius. Never. And when you go to the far North, no genius there. "In the far South, no genius there. You have got to have a climate, my friends, where there is a literally good winter. Not too much, but enough. In a country where man needs no coverlet but a cloud, revolution is the normal condition. You want a winter. That is the mother of industry, of prudence and of the fireside; and, more than that, it is the mother of the family relation. The winter makes the fireside. The winter gathers the father and mother and sweet children about it. The winter cultivates all the social virtues, and the sparks and the flames that go out and join the roaring blast simply join that which produces them. And I tell you, to-night, civilization, liberty, justice, charity, intellectual advancement are all flowers that bloom on the drifted snow. You must have a winter. Let me show you—let me illustrate—that the earth is not all fitted for raising good men, good women. Here is a valley. You go there, and in that valley the oak and the elm grow grandly, and toss their branches defiant to the storms, and, as you advance up the mountain side, the pine, the hemlock, the birch, the spruce, and so you go on until you come to little dwarfed trees, that look like other trees seen through a telescope reversed. Poor little things, that have attempted to get some sustenance from the miserly crevices of the rocks; and you go on and on until at last the highest rock is freckled with a kind of moss, and vegetation ends. It is exactly so upon earth in regard to mankind. That is one excuse I have got. Well, I will tell you another thing about this winter. I said it a while ago in a political speech, but I will say it now again. You recollect that we were talking about the annexation of Santa Domingo to this country. I was in Washington at the time. I said: "I am opposed to it; don't want it." "Why," they said, "it has a most delicious climate; the soil is so rich it just produces everything for the fun of it." Said I, "I don't want it. That isn't the right kind of a country to raise American citizens in." And I said to them: "You go there with five thousand New England Congregational preachers, five thousand ruling elders, five thousand professors in colleges, and take their families and settle in Santa Domingo, and you will see the second generation riding on a mule bare-backed, no shoes, twisted straw for a bridle, hair sticking out at tops of their hats, with a rooster under each arm, going to a cock-fight on Sunday." I have still another excuse.—I am not exactly orthodox, and what I am going now to say will not be exactly orthodox. I will be frank with you. I have never been offered a professorship in any theological seminary in the United States.—I believe that man came up from the lower animals. I will not say that as a fact, but I kind of believe that way. Upon that question I stand about eight to seven, which, for all practical purposes, is very near. When I first heard that doctrine I did not like it—I did not, and my heart is filled with sympathy for those people who have nothing to brag of except ancestors. I really sympathize with those dear little fellows that part their hair where it may please God, and who have to copy an epitaph and use it as a certificate of moral character. I then thought to myself, how terrific that would be upon the nobility of the old country. But after thinking it over, I came to the conclusion that I liked that doctrine. And I will tell you to-night that I had rather belong to a race that started at the oyster, that started at the skull from the skullless vertebrates of the silurian period, and has been advancing every day, and did advance until human intellect blossomed in such a man as Shakspeare—the man who found the human intellect dwelling in a hut, touched it with the wand of his genius, and it became a palace domed and turreted—I had rather belong to a race that has thus advanced, than to a race created perfect at the beginning, that has lost money every day from that time to this. If we did not come from the lower animals, how can we account for the actions of mankind? They have done so many things seemingly produced by a happy combination of tiger, snake and jackal, that I sometimes think it must be, and that this is the only way in which we can account for the infamies that have been recorded in the history of our poor world. Man has advanced just exactly in proportion as he has mingled his thought with his labor, and communities and classes have advanced just in proportion as they could govern, as it were, those things that give them success. The sailor, with no control of the wind, is superstitious; the agriculturist, whose prosperity depends on something he cannot control, is also superstitious. The mechanic, when a wheel won't turn, never thinks of dropping on his knees and asking the assistance of divine power—he knows there is something the matter, he knows something is too large or too small, that there is a catch in some place, and he goes to work to make it larger or smaller here and there until the thing will run. Now, just in proportion as man has gotten away from being, as it were, simply the slave of the elements—of the heat, the frost, the snow, and the lightning—just to the extent that he has been getting, as you may say, control of his own destiny; just to the extent that he has triumphed over his surroundings; just to that extent he has advanced intellectually, and also in his idea of freedom.

I saw, a few years ago, models of all the water craft that man has ever made, from a dug-out, a hollow log in which floated a naked savage, up to a man-of-war carrying a hundred guns and miles of canvas; I saw, too, all their offensive and defensive weapons, from a rude club that our ancestor, somewhere back in the dim past, armed himself with—our ancestor, with teeth several inches in length, with about a tablespoonful of brains in the back of his head, emerging from a cave hunting a snake for his dinner. I saw these weapons—to the sword, the blade of Damascus, to the coat of mail that defied the point of the spear. I saw these weapons up to the needle-gun and to the cannon made by Krupp. I saw all their defensive armor, from the skin of the porcupine with quills on, which they pulled over their heads to frighten the enemy, the shell of the turtle which they put upon their breasts, up to the iron and steel-clad ships of to-day. I saw, too, their paintings—paintings of mankind from a rude daub made with yellow mud up to a landscape of the present time; and their musical instruments from a tom-tom—that is to say, a string put across a hoop—up to the instruments we have now, that make the common air blossom with melody.

I saw, too, their sculpture—rude gods with eight or ten arms, a multitude of eyes, and several ears, but only one little head. I saw at the same time their agricultural implements, from a crooked stick with which they plowed, to the agricultural implements of to-day; and I tell you I saw something else at the same time. I saw models of human skulls, from the lowest skulls found, the Neanderthal skull, the skulls of the Aborigines of Australia, and skulls found in the interior of Africa, up to the best skulls of the last generation, and I want to say here to-night that there was the same difference between those skulls and the product of those skulls; there was the same difference between that skull that formed the club and the skull that made the needle-gun as between the club and the needle-gun. There was the same difference between the skull that made the dug-out and the skull that made the steamship that turns its brave prow to three thousand miles of waves and crosses the sea without losing a throb or beat of that mighty heart, with a compass like a conscience, the same difference that there is between a dug-out and such a ship. Recollect it. There is the same difference between that skull and this as between the tom-tom or the music of the tom-tom and the divine symphonies of Beethoven. It is just the same, just the same.

Now, I want to ask you something, and I want you to be honest with me. How did man come to improve this boat? how did he come to improve this club? how did he come to improve this musical instrument? how did he come to improve this statue? Every incentive was held out to him to improve them. Let me ask you what would have been the effect if when the dug-out was made the priests had said, "That is the best water craft that can be invented, the model of that came from heaven, and anybody who tries to make a better dug-out than that or to stick up a little pole with a sail on it, is a heretic, and we will burn him at the stake!" Be honest with me, what, in your judgment, would have been the effect upon the water craft of this world? Would we have circumnavigated the globe? Would we have crossed the billows? Would the whole world, as it were, become kindred? Suppose they had said of that crooked stick with which they had plowed the ground, tied to the horn of an ox by some twisted straw, "That plow was revealed to a farmer in a holy vision. Nothing can be better, and that straw rope is the ne plus ultra of all twisted things. Don't talk to us about plows of iron and steel." I ask you what effect would that have had upon the agricultural implements of the world? Be honest. And so I could go through the whole list. But they improved all these things, because the world said, "We want better; we want to raise more corn and more wheat; we want to go to distant countries; we want better boats; we want better plows; we want better weapons, offensive and defensive," and the world has welcomed every invention and every discovery, and every inventor and every discoverer of these things.

Let me apply this. That lower skull (pointing to an imaginary skull) had certain ideas about devils; gentlemen with hoofs, with strange dart-like tails; that man had a certain amount of superstition; that brain was a cave in which crawled the lower instincts and the baser impulses of humanity. That skull (again pointing), a palace in which science lived. That skull, full of hatred and malice and ignorance and fear; full of witches, hobgoblins, and driads and fauns; full of spooks, specters, and all other phantoms of the air. That skull was a temple in which lived love, liberty, and justice. The religious people of the world have not allowed the religion of this kind to be particularly improved upon. They have said, "We want better boats, but that religion is good enough for us; we want better weapons of war, but no better ideas than that man has given us." Now, what I ask for and what I plead for is that there shall be the same liberty in that direction as in every other.

I do not say what is or what is not true. I simply plead for light, for room, for opportunity for the human soul. Let everybody think, and let everybody have the courage to express that thought. While I live I am going to do my own thinking and to express that thought; whether popular or unpopular makes no difference to me. Before my time men had the goodness to talk in favor of the liberty of the human soul. I have reaped the benefit of every one of those courageous and divine acts—every one; and if I accept that benefit I want to hand the torch along to the next generation with a little intensity added to the flame. That is all I ask—liberty. If I have not the right to think, for what reason have I a thinker? I have feet, I walk. I have eyes, I see. I have lungs, I breathe. I have a brain, why not think? And if I am going to think anything, why not think my own thought? Have I a right to express it? Yes, if any other human being has a right to express it. Standing under the flag of nature, I am the equal of every other human being in that right. If I have not the right, who has? When did I lose my right, and when did that gentleman get his? If Mr. Smith has no right to think, and Mr. Brown has no right to think, and Mr. Thompson has no right to think, and they three get together and form a Church, what right have they to think? I claim no more for myself than I give to all others, cheerfully. It is too early in the history of this world, my friends, to write a creed. It is too early in the history of the world to tell what is true. Our fathers were slaves. Their fathers were intellectual serfs, and there has never yet been a free generation of men and women upon this globe. Wait until we have a few ages of liberty. It will be time enough then to say what is true. It will be time enough then to give a philosophy to the world.

Now, then, my friends, while men have been the slaves of men, while they have been trampled upon in every imaginable way, women have been the slaves of slaves. They have not even had half the rights that have been given to the men. In the olden time a man trampled upon by the iron feet of a king consoled himself because he was given the privilege to trample upon the woman he called his wife. Oh! I do hate a man who thinks he is the head of a family. It took thousands of years to advance from that grossest slavery up to the institution of marriage, the holiest and most sacred institution among men. And the woman to-day bears in another form the evidences of her former slavery. The charms you wear about your necks of gold were once iron. The bracelet now put upon your white arm by the thrilled and trembling hand of love, was transformed by the wand of civilization from iron to shining gold. You bear about you to-day the souvenirs of your once degraded condition. I believe the woman the equal of the man, and, from what little acquaintance I have had, a little more. The old theologians, the fathers of the Church who looked upon woman as a perpetual evil, and used to say what angels men could be if there were no women; they, you know, told us a story, and accounted for all the evil that has ever come upon this world by the sin of the first woman, and, if it is true, I am glad of it. I am willing to take all the evil there is in the world for the sake of getting one woman with it. Now, they tell a story—I will not say that it is true, I will not say that it is false, I don't know, but there is a story somewhere to this effect: that the Supreme Being made a man; that he made him out of dirt; that at the time he had no idea of making a woman; but after awhile the man—which seems to me extremely natural—got lonesome, and thereupon he thought he would make a woman. It was a second thought, and second thoughts are always the best. Now, mind you, I am not saying the story is not true. Thereupon they put the man to sleep, gave him some chloroform or ether, and took, I believe, what the French call a cutlet out of him. And of this scrap the woman was made, which, taking into consideration the raw material on hand, was the most wonderful piece of creation in the world. Then this woman was brought to this man to see, not how she liked him, but how he'd like her. Well, he liked her. And afterwards, I believe, some kind of fruit was eaten in the wrong season, in consequence of which they were turned away from the premises, and then commenced the weary struggle that we have had for bread and butter for six thousand years. But we have always had the woman to help us.

Now, I read in another book another story about the same occurrence. Mind you, I don't say that it is true. I don't know. This other book is one of the most sacred books of the Hindoos. I believe, according to their account, written some two thousand years ago, that the Supreme Brahma made man and woman; thought of them both at the same time, and never had any idea of making one and not the other; that he made a man and woman and put them upon the Island of Ceylon. O, it was a beautiful island. All the trees were filled with birds, and the branches of the trees were so arranged that when the breezes swept through them they were, it seemed, millions of Æolian harps in the sky. When the Supreme Brahma made them he introduced them to each other, and wanted them to get acquainted and to have a courtship. Can you imagine a more beautiful thing than that courtship? No prospective mothers-in-law, no gossiping neighbors, nobody to tell what they saw—nothing. And it is said they really got in love with each other there among the flowers, and the songs of birds, and the music of the trees. They really got in love with each other, for as that book says, the Supreme Brahma had decreed that love should precede marriage always. Now, do you know, I like that better than I do the other; and somehow, if I had my choice of which story should be true, I would take the latter one. Let me tell you some more about it. The Supreme Brahma said to this man and woman, "You must never leave this island, never." Well, after awhile this man got a little restless, and concluded he would walk about. He walked to the far side of the island. Over yonder was the main land, and there was a little strip of land running to it. The devil, who, you know, has always been up to some such thing, got up a mirage, and he looked over there. O, he never saw such a country—such mountains, such hills, such dells, such flowers—such a wonderful landscape he had never seen, and he went back and told Eva, his wife, "I am going to emigrate; and she told him, "Now, you stay where you are," just like a woman. "You let well enough alone," just exactly like a woman. It sounds as natural as though it were true. He insisted and he got her to go with him. He showed her this beautiful country, and finally took her on his back and went across this narrow strip of land; but, just as he got to the shore, the mirage was dispelled, and there was nothing but rocks and sand and desolation. He turned to go back, but the path had fallen into the sea. Then it was that the Supreme Brahma's voice was heard, cursing them both, and then the man, Adama, stepping up like a brave, chivalric fellow, said to the Supreme Brahma, "It was not her fault; I did it." That is the kind of a man to suit me. "Punish me, but do not punish her;" and the Supreme Brahma listened to his voice, and then she spoke, and she said, "Spare him, because I love him." And they were spared, and it was just like a woman to say it. To tell you the truth, I really wish from the bottom of my heart that the Brahminical story was the true one. During all these ages woman, I say, was the slave of man, and, to a certain extent, is to-day. How many men I have heard say that they were superior to any woman, they knew more than any woman; and when we talk about woman having a voice in the Government, everybody says "No." I say she has the same right to take a part in the Government, if she desires, as I have. She is a human being, and it is outrageous to say she shall live in the world, be subject to its burdens, subject to the laws, and have no voice in the destiny of the nation. It seems to me as if a good, brave, grand woman, the mother of sons and daughters, ought to have as much right to say whether there shall be peace or war, as some loafer that reels to the ballot-box to deposit his vote for war. She who has sons to lose, a heart to be wrung and torn, ought to have as much right to say whether there shall be peace or war as any man on earth. That is my idea of it. If they wish to vote I am too much of a gentleman to say they shall not. It is a question for them to decide; they are human beings—our equals, to say the least—and they have the right to do as they please upon that subject. Now, it seems to me if there is any heaven on this earth it is just where the right man marries just the right woman, and there is no way to be happy except with perfect liberty. I know many a man that will give his heart and his honor to a woman that he would not trust with a dollar bill, and when I see such a man I always think that he has a just estimate of the value of both. I hate a man who thinks a woman should obey him. I despise a man that wants to make everybody obey him. I had rather be a slave than a master. I had rather be robbed than be a robber. All that I ask for all woman-kind is simply liberty, and let the man love the woman as he should. As one of the old sacred books of the Hindoos says: "Man is strength—woman is beauty; man is courage—woman is prudence; man is strength and woman is wisdom"; and where there is one man loving one woman, and one woman loving one man, in that house the very angels love to come and sit and sing.

I believe, then, in perfect freedom; I believe in perfect justice, and where a man really loves a woman she never grows old to him. Through the wrinkles of age and through the mask of time he sees the sweet maiden face that he loved and won. And where a woman really loves a man he does not grow gray; he does not grow decrepit; he is not old, but to her he is the same gallant gentleman forever that won her heart and hand. There can be nothing more delightful than this, and whoever has loved and been loved—whoever has had children upon his knees and felt the arms of affection around his neck, and the lips of love upon his, his life has been a success. He has not been a failure. The high gods can give us only golden sand. We have to get love for ourselves. And now while the women have been slaves of slaves, the children have been slaves of the slaves of slaves. The children of poverty! my heart bleeds when I think of them; the children simply covered by a rag; the children of famine and starvation; the children of drunkenness and the children of crime, the flotsam and jetsam upon the wild, rude sea of life; the children in alleys; the children that crouch in corners when they hear the unsteady step of a drunken brute of a father; the children—little babes with drinking mothers; the children, too, of the rich that have no liberty—these little children that are crushed, that are trampled upon, that are frightened, I pity them all from the bottom of my heart. What right have you to tyrannize over a child? I have very little respect for a man that cannot govern his child without brute force. Think of whipping children! Why, they say that children tell lies. Yes, cowardice is the mother of lies—tyranny is the mother of lies. Suppose a man who is as much larger than you as you are larger than a five-year old child, should come to you with a pole in his hands, "Who broke that plate?" You would tremble; your knees would knock together, and you would swear you never saw it or it was cracked when you got it. Think of a member of the Exchange whipping one of his children for prevaricating! Think of a lawyer beating his own flesh and blood because he had evaded the truth! Think of a Wall street gambler in stocks striking one of his children for lying! What an inconsistency! Think of it; and some of these men, some of those women, that whip their children, that beat their own flesh and blood, I wish they could have a photograph taken of themselves when they are doing it, with their brows corrugated with anger, their cheeks red with wrath, and the little child shrinking, trembling, crouching, begging! If this child should happen to die, wouldn't it be sweet in the autumn, when the maple trees are turning to gold and when the scarlet vine runs like a sad regret out of the earth—wouldn't it be delightful to go and sit on the little grassy mound that covered the flesh they had beaten, and look at that photograph of themselves in the act of whipping that child.

Now, think of it, think of it; and if all I say to-night will save one blow from the tender flesh of infancy I am more than paid. I have known men to drive their own children from their doors and then get down on their knees and ask God to watch over them. I will never ask God to do a favor to a child of mine while I can do it, never. There are even some Christians who act as if they really believe that when the Savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," that he had a whip under his mantle, and simply said that to get them within striking distance. I will tell you what I say to mine. I say to my children this: "Go where you may; do what you will; there is no crime you can commit, there is no depth of infamy to which you can sink that will shut to you my door, my arms or my heart." Another thing. There is nothing in the world like being honest with these little children. Do not pretend you are perfection; you are not; and if one of them happens to tell a story, do not let on as if the whole world was going to burst. Tell them honestly you have told thousands of them. Do like the man did in Maine when he said to his boy, "John, 'honesty is the best policy.' I have tried both." Do not pretend you are perfection. You are not. But tell them the best way is the right way. Make them courageous, and, first of all, teach them not to fear you. So raise your children that the meanest thing they do they will tell you. And if you are honest with them they need not be ashamed of it, because you will simply compare experiences.

Now, my friends, I have said a few words about the liberty of man, and my doctrine is this: Freethought will give us truth; free labor will give us wealth. What we need is intelligence, liberty, love, justice. And I cannot think of any place that would be so happy as this if we all felt in this way. Think of a little family, a happy republic of free men and free women and sweet free children. What a republic! Think of it. And think of growing old together and liking each other better all the time, and getting old, and then when old age comes and you start down into the valley of the shadow to hear may be the prattle of grandchildren and the birds of youth and joy sing again upon the leafless branches of the tree of age! I can think of no better, no grander way to leave this world than accompanied by those that you have loved, and those that love you. I know not, my friends, what discoveries, what inventions, what improvements may be made in the days to come; I know not what garland of glory may be woven for the world in the loom of the years yet to come, but I do know that no greater blessing, no rarer gift coming from the infinite sea of the future, will ever touch the shores of time than liberty for man, woman and child. Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you.

It is error only, and not truth, that shrinks from inquiry.

CHILDREN must have love inside the house, and fresh air and good play and some good companionship outside—otherwise young life runs the greatest danger in the world of withering or growing stunted, or, at best, prematurely old and turned inward on itself.

THE habit of exaggeration, like dram-drinking, becomes a slavish necessity, and they who practice it pass their lives in a kind of mental telescope, through whose magnifying medium they look upon themselves and everything around them.

VIRTUE.—There is but one pursuit in life which it is in the power of all to follow, and of all to attain. It is subject to no disappointment, since he that perseveres makes every difficulty an advancement, and every conquest a victory; and this is the pursuit of virtue. Sincerely to aspire after virtue is to gain her; and zealously to labor after her ways is to receive them. Those who seek her early will find her before it is late; her reward, also, is with her, and she will come quickly. For the breast of a good man is a little heaven commencing on earth, where the Deity sits enthroned with unrivalled influence, giving safety from danger, and resource from sterility, and making subjugated passion, like the storm and wind, to fulfil his word.

"Danger Signal."

NEW YORK, July 20, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I am informed that the bigots and unenlightened self-righteous are after you in consequence of the zeal you manifest to make the absurdities of error seem more absurd and its abominations more abominable, if possible, by your paraphrases on certain texts of their sacred Scriptures, called otherwise, the Word of God. And they call you a blasphemer. Do you, friend Bennett, entertain disrespectful feelings towards the superior wisdom, the supreme Good of the Universe, which evolved harmony from chaos, light from darkness, good from evil, and blessedness from suffering and sorrow; which calls forth the magnificent and sublime and the beautiful, and embodies them all so largely in the human race? We know you must, with every other intelligent being, bow in reverence before this Omnipotence and Omnipresence. And it is impossible that other than feelings of contempt can arise toward the being whom man clothes in the attributes of a demon, circumscribes in goodness and power, and calls God. We do not complain because their light becomes darkness, but because they would have us worship this darkness and grope about in it, which we, as individuals, refuse to do. If they would give us a being worthy of the heart's best homage, it would not be in our power to do otherwise than to bow in reverence before such. But their God—not the God or Good of the Universe—seems to me too small and too vicious to command our respect even. I once heard a clergyman, who was preaching to thousands, locate the "great white throne of God" as extending from one side of the horizon to the other, and seated upon this throne was his personal God. He did not say if his eyes were as big as saucers, which he should have done to have rendered the picture complete. As well might we worship Milton's Satan, who "With head uplift above the wave, and eyes That sparkling blazed," etc., etc., presents a much more august appearance.

If the Christians would make worshipers according to their ideas, they must give us something worthy of our adoration. At present we only find our adorable objects in the good and great men and women of our present time, with those also of the past ages.

Jerome says, "If an offense come out of the Truth, better is it that the offense come than the Truth be concealed." We know you endorse his sentiment, for you manifest your hatred of error in the vehemence with which you combat it. May your zeal remain unabated until every foolish idol shall crumble into dust, and the soul of man shall arise from the degrading influence of superstition. So fear not, friend Bennett, for if thy enemies carry thee in their wrath to Ludlow street, we have a very partial god in our Ingersoll, who will take you from there in less than no time, and will thereby show himself mightier than they, with their God thrown in. Nothing could benefit the Liberal cause more than this thing which they threaten to do to one of Truth's greatest advocates. And you have no idea how many true friends you have which such an act would call around you. So fear not.

I cannot close my letter without congratulating you on your success in your very interesting debate with the Rev. Mr. Humphrey. We think you got the better of your very able and talented opponent, and vanquished him. Yet we like him for his gentlemanliness and candor. You had the truth on your side, and that made the difference.

Very truly yours, SOPHIE W. KENT.

REMARKS.—A report has reached us that the very Christian Mr. Anthony Comstock, deeming that God needs some of his assistance in suppressing our outspoken utterances has determined to present us for "blasphemy," under the laws of the State, at the next session of the Grand Jury. We hope there is no truth in the report as we have too much work projected for the coming year or two to wish to be confined in Ludlow street jail or the penitentiary of the State. Neither of them offer any charms that are attractive to us.

We have said nothing but what we sincerely believe and had a perfect right to say, and we are determined to maintain freedom of speech upon theological as well as upon other subjects. It is getting almost too far along in this century to imprison a man for having an opinion or being bold enough to avow it. If the Supreme Power of the Universe is not able to attend to our little case without Mr. Comstock's assistance, it is bad for the Supreme Power. It might be advisable for this self-same Power to abdicate and let Mr. Comstock assume entire control. —Ed. T. S.

Social Correspondence.

SAN JOSE, CAL., July 9, 1877.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Brother: You will accept many thanks for the copies of your "Forms, Hymns and Recitations." For such a collection we, as Liberals, have long felt a need, and yours will fully meet that want among our people, and as I journey eastward will do what I can to bring it to the notice of the friends. I will leave home for the East on the 23d, and will speak at Stockton, Sacramento, Virginia City, Ogden, Salt Lake and other points on my way to Chicago and the eastern cities.

I reached home from the North just in time to hear Ingersoll review his reviewers in San Francisco before an audience of three thousand people, and I have felt six inches taller ever since in claiming fellowship with such a noble man as he is. We may well be proud of such a champion.

Nearly all of the clergy lent a hand in casting dirt at the great orator, but like a Boanerges he scattered the dust in their own eyes and dissipated their arguments like fog before the sun. His visit here has done a vast amount of good in opening the eyes of the people to the weakness of the old system of religion in its power to save and develop true manhood.

Another fact has asserted itself during the Ingersoll raid on San Francisco, and that is the entire secular press have spiked their guns towards Ingersoll and show many signs of sympathy and favor towards the champion and cause of human liberty.

God and good angels speed the right. The world rolls on, the light grows stronger; the people's advent is coming. J. L. YORK.

"The Truth Seeker Collection."

HANNIBAL, MO., July 10, 1877.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: I ought sooner to have acknowledged the reception of your "last and fairest." I am admiring it daily; have called in others and taken it out only to excite admiration, which it invariably does. It contains eloquence enough to marry by, live by, and die by. Let us bless those musical souls who give us songs for our pilgrimage, music to march by in the journey of life, and beautiful souls who never lose their childish freshness and fragrance, ever preserve the love for beautiful poetry.

In the "Collection" we have "Our Demands and Principles." Thanks for inserting them. Invocations for those who feel like invoking something, or somebody; "Forms for Organization"—no excuse now for not organizing; "Benedictions and Doxologies"—for those who have use for them; Obituary Notices and Epitaphs, usually so proverbial for flattery, fawning or falsehood; Wills, Sentiments, Toasts, etc., each well enough in its place, but the most prominent feature of the book is the "Hymns and Recitations," and its "Forms for Funeral Services," etc. He who cannot find something in these to suit his wishes, must be an exception and hard to please.

I have been somewhat prejudiced against imitations or changed articles as a general thing, looking upon them as efforts of a meagre intellect to establish a reputation at the expense of another's brains. But that wonderful American mocking-bird, C. S. Weeks, who sings us the old songs with variations, and all the modern improvements, as well as the Tutties, Mrs. Slenker and others, have nearly destroyed my prejudice in that direction.

And Charles Stephenson, whose words glide so melodiously from his pen, and Mrs. Jacob Martin, whose musical words flow softly as angel melodies, filling the inmost soul with the fragrance of song and the inspiration of poetry. Why, Bro. Bennett, you have given us a grand musical festival, a miniature Sanger-fest aglow—no, rather glowing of souls sparkling pure and bright as Costalain waters and for us Christians "wine on the lees well refined."

I cannot give a list of the many stars in this firmament of illuminators, but will say that a man who calls himself a Liberal and don't wish a book like that needs immediate attention and should be instructed forthwith and help.

I hope to see you encouraged, and that the public will compel you to bring out repeated editions of this admirable work.

I know, Bro. Bennett, that you labor incessantly; they make you work not according to your ability but the world's needs, and the world will yet thank you for it.

Our ignorant world scarcely designs to bury its benefactors, but growing wiser, it exalts their names and crowns their memories. Several here will need copies of the book which must be obtained, and orders after all are the best evidences of appreciation. When a letter comes with cash there's something in it, and the greatest encouragement to the earnest worker. Success to you. Hope to send for additional number of copies soon.

Yours truly, D. JENKINS.

Going to the Wolcott Meeting.

BRO. BENNETT: Since I announced the Wolcott Grove-Meeting I am getting many interesting letters, which prove that the people are prepared for a forward movement all along the Liberal lines. Yesterday I sent an interesting letter to the Investigator, and I send you the following, which I hope you will find a place for in THE TRUTH SEEKER. H. L. G.

CORRY, PA., July 8, 1877.

FRIEND GREEN: I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and of course read your letters to friend Bennett about the three-days' meeting at Wolcott. Now I desire to know where that place is, how far from Salamanca, and on what road, for I want to attend that meeting if there is nothing to prevent. I think several more from here will attend. We ought to hold more such meetings. It would be good for the soul's growth. We should meet together often and become acquainted with each other and know who our Liberal friends are. I think friend Bennett is doing a great work, and ought to be sustained by all means by our sympathy and money—especially our money, for, as the saying is, "Money makes the mare go." That is what keeps up the churches.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is all the Bible I have now. I look for it every week as I would for my dinner.

I will tell you something of myself. I am a carpenter on the Atlantic and Great Western railroad. I work all along from Salamanca to Meadville, have a wife and child—a son twenty years old, just graduated from the high school in this place. He will be with us at the meeting. I desire he should hear all he can from the Liberal minds of the times. He is very Liberal as it is.

The first time I am in your place I shall take the time to hunt you up, and will close this by hoping that you will answer at your earliest convenience. I remain your friend and co-worker in the cause of truth.

GILBERT ARNOLD,

P. O. Box 1065, Corry, Pa.

[Wolcott is in Wayne county, N. Y., a few miles north of Clyde, which is on the N. Y. Central R. R., forty miles east of Rochester. —Ed. T. S.]

Letter from Capt. H. H. Brown.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., July 18, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: The Truth Seeker Collection was received in due time, and I most cordially thank you for it, and I thank you also on behalf of the Liberal cause. I only hope that there may be a demand for it that shall make it profitable. We have not yet developed enough to harmonize, not even enough to realize that music is Nature's harmonizer, and here we are so far short of what we should be. The demand will be made, and when it is, all song and music writers will not as now prefer "Christian" hymns and tunes. This Collection will break the way and be a pioneer in this field. I have been busily at work till body and brain needed rest, looking forward to the time when I could write you as I wished, and now I steal an hour from the time given to physical rest to say what I would.

The book as a whole is good. I like it. It is much better than I supposed you could compile in so short a time, and amidst so much labor. The Organization Forms are first-rate and needed. The Prayers are good, but I miss some from Theodore Parker, and the beautiful invocations through Mrs. Conant as reported in the Banner of Light for years. The devotional needs to be cultivated in the Liberal element.

I have been doing much in the Red Ribbon movement in the state, and shall do still more in the Fall. Temperance cannot be run entirely by the Church. The name of Reason must be heard along with that of Jesus.

Yours fraternally, CAPT. H. H. BROWN.

Getting "Religion."

DEPERE, WIS., July 12, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking perhaps it might interest the readers of your paper to hear about the camp-meeting held at Doty's Island, Menasha, Wis., the last week in June and first few days in July, I venture to write.

In the first place we will own up that we attended the meeting for fun—and had it, too. The spot selected was as beautiful as old Mother Nature with her lavish hand could make it. Fifty tents were pitched so as to form a circle. Inside the circle were seats to accommodate fifteen hundred people. Evergreen letters over the doors of the tents designated where the inmates hailed from. We thought the evergreens were not confined to the lettering alone.

Rev. Mr. Inskip, of Philadelphia, was the bright particular star. He was assisted by several other stars of lesser glory. Rev. Inskip is a man of quite liberal views, for a Methodist, and says he believes in diversity of opinion (by the way, how gradually they are rising to infidelity). He went quite mild on hell-fire and damnation. He said he did not want to die yet awhile, but preferred traveling over the cobblestones of Philadelphia to walking the golden streets of the New Jerusalem. Perhaps they do not pay one hundred dollars per week in that Celestial City for conducting "power" meetings.

Sunday, July 1st, about eight thousand people visited the camp grounds; and we think that not only every religious sect was represented but that there was a respectable representation of horrid infidels. At an evening meeting during the week one of the lesser lights held forth on the burning lake so strongly that we could almost smell brimstone. Every soul that did not believe in the Methodist way of getting to heaven was surely going to be pitched into hell and burned forever and ever. He defied any one to give an instance of a man living a perfectly upright, moral life for ten years without a belief in Christ; that it was an utter impossibility for the human family to live good lives without a belief in and acceptance of Jesus Christ as their savior. He pictured in glowing colors the Crucifixion on one side, and the Devil and his nice little hell on the other. The excitement was intense after he had finished speaking, and one female stood up on the seat and screamed, "Glory to God, I've got it!" until she was completely exhausted and dragged off to one of the tents. Men, women, and children groaned, shouted, and cried, till it seemed as though the beautiful twinkling stars and silvery moon would veil their faces for shame, and the grand old trees would cry out with pain at such mockery. The cost of conducting the meeting was $350. Perfectly good order was maintained, there being plenty of police. Rev. Inskip, on the closing day, said he was ashamed to speak, having occupied so much of the time, but his fellow laborers had kept "singing" him on.

The meeting closed with a general hand-shaking all around, and a grand march for the New Jerusalem. We haven't heard that any of them have arrived there yet, for we came home and read THE TRUTH SEEKER as an antidote.

Yours respectfully, JENNIE RICH.

From the Black Hills.

DEADWOOD, DAKOTA TERR., July 11, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I have been here since the 14th of June, and am not sufficiently familiar with objects, events, locations, successes and prospects to pen you an elaborate exposition of these celebrated gold fields.

On Friday the 26th ult., the sun rose clear and lovely, as it usually has since my arrival, and the forenoon was as promising as Spring; but at 12, M., a cloud like a man's hand (I had not prayed for rain) appeared, and in one half hour the whole sky was overcast, and thick darkness prevailed for an hour. Now the rain poured in torrents, and the wind changed from east to northwest, and blew crazily; breaking down, uprooting and tumbling together the trees like a tornado. "Pard" and myself, who were prospecting in the woods, narrowly escaped by taking refuge in a deep gulch whose banks were treeless. A gentleman from Nova Scotia, who arrived in Deadwood the day before, was killed instantly by the fall of a tree in that city. Several miners prospecting in the woods that afternoon were more or less hurt or wounded, but no other seriously.

The next morning we were treated to a severe white frost; ice formed in places of the thickness of window glass. On Sunday, 1st inst., the morning was clear and still, a la Black Hills; rain commenced falling at 1, P. M., and the thunder rolled from the clouds upon the mountain tops, till at 2, when it hailed fearfully. Some of the hailstones, though not as large as those which John the Revelator encountered (of the weight of a talent) were larger than marrowfat peas. This was followed by frost on Monday morning. Since that, nothing occurred to mar the ordinary weather economy up to 2 P. M., yesterday. At that moment a sharp ominous clap of thunder aroused the people of Deadwood to a sense of the wisdom and power of the "True God." A dark, sullen cloud hung over the city. The rain began to fall moderately (it was quite still), and at three P. M., everybody in the vicinity was pelted into caves, stables, cabins, shops and houses, or under overhanging cliffs of rocks, by the severest hail-storm ever known in the Hills in July. I measured three that were brought into my cabin, three and a half, and four inches in circumference. They were egg-shaped, quite smooth, and of nearly the same size. The side of the mountain across the gulch was covered to the depth of two or three inches. The hailstones are being picked up in the gulches this morning three inches in circuit, and the high land is white with frost.

The weather here cannot well be described. Pleasant, clear, hot days, or thunder, lightning, and rain, hail, and wind after noon, is the common order; very seldom indeed are clouds seen or wind, thunder, or rain known here before noon. The evenings, too, are usually clear and cool. The thermometer on Monday and Tuesday of last week climbed to 96° and 100° in the shade.

The three TRUTH SEEKERS came all right. They served me a better, wiser, and holier purpose than the manna did the Israelites in the wilderness.

Thank you! Unbounded prosperity and success to you and the cause you advocate. H. M. EASTMAN.

Friendly Correspondence.

MARY HAZEN, Owatonna, in sending an order of six dollars for books, writes: The package of reading matter for which I previously sent is at hand, and O, what treasures I find the books! Money can never pay the obligations we are under to you for furnishing us with such choice and needful literature. After I have had the pleasure of their perusal, I pass them around for the delight and mental profit of others. Please do not fail to forward me a copy of the "Champions" in leather as soon as out.

J. E. FARLEY, Lacy, Ark., writes: I have been reading that misnamed paper published by you—THE TRUTH SEEKER. I've been obtaining the few copies from a friend who advised me to read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion, and I'll say right here that, were I you, I would crawl out of that as quietly as possible, for your arguments will have no weight, certainly, when the "Joseph" can pick as many as eight or ten misrepresentations in one article. It leaves the impression that you are about up in the soap line. I have been raised and trained to believe the Bible to be the divinely inspired word of our heavenly father, and that it is dangerous to treat it with irreverence. Therefore, you may not be surprised when I say that I was awfully horrified to know that one of my fellow-men could wander so far from God as to be inquiring of him what kin he was to his mother, about the machinery of the Almighty's snout, etc. I don't blame him for coming back on you like he did. You exhibit one of the characteristics of your father (for you must certainly be a son of him than whom, Satan excepted, none higher sat) to a great extent—namely, impudence. You don't come out and dispute God's words like the Devil in Genesis, but your case is worse, for the Devil had some grounds for his remarks, but you have not. Any goosoon ought to know a mother is a mother. If you were to come through our neighborhood blowing such things as that, there wouldn't be enough left of you to sing even a S. M. tune over out of your "Truth Seeker Collection." By the way, you will find enclosed one dollar for the above-named work and a few tracts, just to have lying around, not that I care to read them, but just to see how long the Lord will let a fellow go before he chaws him up. Hoping to hear from you soon shouting at some camp-meeting along with the sisters, and happy in a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, I remain as ever your orthodox friend.

[We are almost at a loss to decide whether our "orthodox friend" is in fun or only just joking a little. If he is in earnest, we congratulate him on his brilliant prospects for the future. He must be a fortunate individual, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.—Ed. T. S.]

Gems of Thought.

THERE is here, and there ought to be, no rest. Life is an aim—an aim which can be approached, not reached. There is, therefore, no rest. Rest is immortal.—Joseph Mazzini.

It is evening again, a summer Sabbath eve. The hills are crowned with the glory of the setting sun, and in the ruddy golden light the earth seems draped in its most resplendent attire; the day's farewell is as peaceful and attractive as the smile of a departing angel.—Wm. McDonnell.

THE love of approbation is one of the strongest passions of humanity. We work, toil, slave, study, and labor in many and various ways so that we may win the approving commendations of those around us. Few things hurt us more than to be found fault with by others—especially by those we love and esteem. The day will come when the only punishment the world will bestow upon the sinning and the erring will be that of gentle, loving, kindly criticism, which, acting upon this sense of approbation as a stimulus, will be sufficient to induce a return to virtue and usefulness.—Mrs. Stenker.

LET IT PASS.

Be not swift to take offense;
Let it pass.
Anger is a foe to sense;
Let it pass!
Let it pass!
Brood not darkly o'er a wrong,
Which will disappear ere long;
Rather sing this cheery song—
Let it pass!
Let it pass!
If for good you've taken ill,
Let it pass!
Oh! be kind and gentle still;
Let it pass!
Let it pass!
Time at last makes all things straight;
Let us not resent but wait,
And our triumph shall be great;
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Anon.

WITH reverence, and yet with fearlessness, I dare to say that the human mind can conceive of no greater crime than the creation of the world on the orthodox theory. To make a system, the outgrowth of which is irremediable misfortune to the majority, is something of which only diabolism is capable. Here we are, enmeshed and involved in this network of evil, all for the fault of a man who lived thousands of years ago, with no provision for the salvation of any but the few millions of Christendom, and with the certainty that only a few of these will be saved; and yet God is sovereign and able to save whomever he will, and on this sovereignty revivalism is based, and men cry and plead and agonize in the endeavor to induce him to save a few more; and he hears a church and takes pity on a dozen or two, when their other engagements permit the court favorites, Moody and Sankey, to be present. Merciful heavens! are men with hearts and moral natures and brains expected to believe such stuff as this?—Rev. M. J. Savage.

Body, soul, intelligence: to the body belong sensations, to the soul appetites, to the intelligence, principles. To receive the impressions of forms by means of appearances belongs even to animals: to be pulled by the strings of desire belongs both to animals and to men who have made themselves into women, and to a Phalaris and a Nero; and to have the intelligence that guides to the things which appear suitable belongs also to those who betray their country and do their impure deeds when they have shut the doors. If, then, everything else is common to all that I have mentioned, there remains that which is peculiar to good man, to be pleased and content with what happens, and with the thread which is spun for him; and not to defile the divinity which is planted in his breast, nor disturb it by a crowd of images, but to preserve it tranquil, following it obediently as a god, neither saying anything contrary to the truth, nor doing anything contrary to justice. And if all men refuse to believe that he lives a simple, modest, and contented life, he is neither angry with any of them, nor does he deviate from the way which leads to the end of life, to which a man ought to come pure, tranquil, ready to depart, and without any compulsion perfectly reconciled to his lot.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.

THE good in this world predominates over the bad; the good is ever increasing, the bad is ever diminishing. But if God is Love, why is there any bad at all? Is the world like a novel in which the villains are put in to make it more dramatic, and in which virtue only triumphs in the third volume? It is certain that the feelings of the created have in no way been considered. If, indeed, there were a judgment day, it would be for man to appear at the bar, not as a criminal, but as accuser. What has he done that he should be subjected to a life of torture and temptation? God might have made us all happy, and he has made us miserable. Is that benevolence? God might have made us all pure, and he has made us all sinful. Is that the perfection of morality? If I believed in this man-created God, in this divine Nebuchadnezzar, I would say: You can make me live in your world, O Creator, but you cannot make me admire it. You can load me with chains, but you cannot make me flatter you; you can send me to hell-fire, but you cannot obtain my esteem. And if you condemn me, you condemn yourself. If I have committed sins, you invented them, which is worse. If the watch you have made does not go well, whose fault is that? Is it rational to damn the wheels and the springs.—Nathaniel Vaughan.

Odds and Ends.

"CAN you spell donkey with one letter?" asked a silly young man of a bright girl. "Yes," she answered, "u."

He held the old shirt up by the neck before discarding it forever, but he wasn't mourning for the garment. He only said: "I wish I had all the drinks that have gone through that old neckband."

THE Illinois Legislature has passed a game law so stringent in its provisions that the Chicago Tribune says a human being is the only kind of game left which it will be safe to kill during certain months.

"Why is it, my dear sir," said Waffles' landlady to him the other day, "that you newspaper men never get rich?" "I do not know," was his reply, "except it is that dollars and sense do not always travel together."

An old infidel says: "I want a holiness that puts a basket on the arm, and puts something in the basket, and goes to the home of impoverishment, and says not in words but in works: 'Here is the evidence of my piety.'"

A FEW evenings ago a lady up town heard some one at the front door about midnight. Thinking it was her son, she called out: "Sam! Sam!" The response that came back was: "It is not your Psalm, but another woman's Hymn."

DARWIN says the "coming man" will be bald-headed. This will be sad news for the coming woman. Instead of snatching her husband by the hair, in a family discussion, she will be obliged to pour scalding water down his back.

PAT (who had been knocking for some time) "Shure, darlint, an' do you sell your whisky by measure?" Bar-maid—"Yes, sir." Pat—"Begorra, an' I thought you must do it by weight; I've been waitin' to get some till the thurrest quite left me."

A MODEST young lady desiring a leg of chicken at the table said: "I'll take the part that ought to be dressed in drawers." A young man opposite immediately said, "I'll take the part that ought to wear a bustle!" Hartshorn was immediately administered to the lady.

"MR. JONES, don't you think women are more sensible than men?" asked Miss Smith. And Jones, after scratching his favorite bump for a moment or two, replied: "Why, certainly they are. They marry men, and men only marry women." Miss Smith beat a thoughtful retreat.

IT was a Cheyenne small boy who, being talked to by his Sunday-school teacher on the sins and frailties of the body, was asked: "Well, my son, what have you besides this sinful body? Quick as thought the urchin responded: "A clean shirt and a nice new pair of breeches."

LORD NORBURY, when delivering a charge one day in court in Ireland, found himself interrupted by a voice from the outside of the court (it was the braying of an ass). "What noise is that?" said his lordship. One of the bar got up and in a hissing voice said, "My lord, it is only the echo."

THE Cincinnati Presbytery of ministers, a few days ago, was trying one of their brothers for heresy, when a couple of others got into an altercation which ended in a pugilistic encounter wherein they no doubt made Satan smile by mauling each other like a couple of regular bruisers.

TELEGRAPHERS are guilty of sad blunders sometimes. The Prince of Wales lately telegraphed from India for "Five Millers"—"Miller" being a great safe manufacturer—"three with drawers, two without." The message reached London: "Five milliners here—three with drawers, two without."

A RED-HAIRED lady, who was ambitious of literary distinction, found but poor sale for her book. A gentleman, in speaking of her disappointment, said: "Her hair is red (read) if her book is not." An author, in attempting to relate the joke elsewhere, said: "She has red hair if her book hasn't."

HUSBAND, who has long wished for an excuse to keep away from church, to devotional wife—"Can't go to church to-day, Susan; it's too risky. These panics, you know, are likely to happen at any time. No church-going's too dangerous a thing for me to take much stock in. Our club house has safe and speedy means of exit."

AN Indiana woman recently sent the following note to her husband, who was serving out a three-years' sentence in State prison: "Dear Tom—I have obtained a divorce from you, and am about to marry again. But never mind; for when you come out I will run away with you, if you see any way by which we can get a living."

THE honeymoon had long gone by when a melancholy husband wearily confessed himself to a friend: "What do you think? I never could have believed it. In the first days of our married life she was an angel—so dear and lovely that I could have eaten her up." "And now?" asked his friend. "Now I repent of not having done so."

A PROMINENT lawyer recently gave the following definition of the law: "It is simply an effort to shift the responsibility of the decision. The jury of laymen, befogged by the pleadings, made up their verdict with the understanding that if there is anything wrong about it, the Supreme Court, composed of lawyers, will make it all right. The Supreme Court settled it according to law, with the understanding that the laymen of the Court of Appeals will adjust the equity. The Court of Errors orders a new trial, and it begins again with the jury of laymen. It is simply a mill that goes round and round and grinds up the property of fools."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
2.	Orations on the Gods. Ingersoll.	3
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	5
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	8
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	10
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	10
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheman.	5
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	3
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	8
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	8
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	2
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	3
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	2
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	3
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	5
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marbles-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	2
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	5
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan E. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	2
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	10
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	5
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	2
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	1
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scitola.	5
100.	The Old and the New. B. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennett.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	5
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	1
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	2
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	5
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic E. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their Kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10
12.	Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 60 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " and Ex. of Prop. Paper 50; cl.	50
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jaccoliot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Krishna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	45
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	1 00
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	4 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	25
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	2 00
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	50
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	1 50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 25
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge, Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	3 00
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	2 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	3 00
Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	1 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	3 00
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	60 & 80
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	35 & 40
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	80
Essence of Religion. Fierbach. 40 and	20
Eight Scientific Tracts.	1 50
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 00
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Grayes' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigma of Life.	2 00
" Creeds of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.	50
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and	50
" etc. Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecy's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard. p 50; cl.	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology. 700 cuts.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols. and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peoples All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, &	4 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man, Ethan Allen	60
Synagma. Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete, Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.	2 00
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	12 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	8 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	2 00
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	25
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.	2 00
The Christ of Paul.	75
The Case against the Church.	2 00
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	1 25
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	4 50
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett.	4 50
" $3.00, $4.00, and	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV, by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 60
Underwood-Marbles Debate.	35 & 40
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREE THOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 31. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, August 4, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE clergymen have not yet struck.

A LARGE fire in Rondout, N. Y. Several buildings, factories, etc., burned.

CHIEF JOSEPH, it is said, has effectually escaped the vigilance of our army.

BRIGHTON YOUNG's Ann Eliza is now a member of a Methodist church in Lockport.

THE salaries of the bishops of the Southern Methodist Church are considerably in arrears.

Thirty clergymen, in their ecclesiastical vestments, attended the funeral of Prof. Tholuck, at Halle.

TWENTY years ago the theological works of Germany constituted one-fourth of the book publications of that country. Now the demand has so fallen off that the proportion is reduced to one-tenth.

A CRAZY woman intruded into the Pan-Presbyterian Council, in Edinburgh, and wanted to make a speech. When they asked her to go out she prayed that the wrath of heaven might descend and consume the whole concern.

REV. H. P. ROSS, the Methodist minister at Bennett's Corners, N. Y., has sued Augustus Vanauken for slander by saying that he (Ross) was a pork thief. Vanauken claims to be able to prove it. This is another of the many cases of trouble with the clergy.

MRS. JAMES DONNELLY gave birth to three daughters, weighing in all sixteen and three quarters pounds. Her husband was appalled at the alarming increase in his family just at the present juncture when business is so dull and work so scarce. James ought to understand that it is his own fault.

A FRIEND refers to an old orthodox Quaker, seventy-six years of age, who has been a constant attendant at church for years. He makes a calculation of how far he has traveled in that way, and it foots up to thirty-one thousand miles. He says, "How far it is to heaven; I suppose that was the place he was traveling to."

THE Calcutta Mohammedans have published an appeal to their Indian fellow-subjects of all creeds for help to the sick and wounded Turkish soldiers. Neither Christians nor Hindoos, however, have as yet shown any signs of responding. On the other hand, the Mohammedans of Singapore have quietly subscribed among themselves some $40,000 for remittance to Constantinople to aid in the war.

A CLERGYMAN by the name of Speere, an intimate friend of a banker in Mason City, Ill., while the latter was engaged with a customer, pocketed a roll of bank bills to the amount of one thousand dollars, took the train to Bloomington, deposited the money, and returned the same night as if nothing had happened. He is now under $2,500 bonds. His friends claim he is insane. There seems to us to be considerable method in this madness.

ANOTHER millionaire has died in California, and a score of persons are fighting over his will. Why do not people who have money place it where it will do good? Peter Cooper has set a good example, and has erected a monument to his name that will be a great and permanent value to the people of this city. For Liberals who die with more money than they care to leave to their relatives there is perhaps no cause for which they could more properly provide than the publishing of books, pamphlets, and papers that will enlighten the people and drive away the damp mists of superstition.

A MEETING of the Pittsburgh clergy has recently been held, in which prayers to God for help in the terrible calamity that has befallen the city were offered up. The discovery that it was a visitation from Almighty God on account of the wickedness of railroad companies, will not strike the average mind as a very important scientific discovery. Though these divines seem to have eased their minds if they have not thrown any light on the great question. Why the general public should be punished for the misdeeds of a certain class, is what makes the ways of the orthodox God so mysterious to an outside observer.

CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES have reached a high degree of development in Great Britain and a few of the nations of Continental Europe, and although America was at one time looked upon as the true home for schemes of co-operation, they have never proved as successful here as in England. With the exception of the Building and Loan Associations of Pennsylvania, there is probably no organization or body of societies which can compare in extent of business with the Industrial and Provident societies of England and Wales. These societies transact a large volume and great variety of business, and are wholly supported and controlled by classes of workers and small capitalists similar to those who form other building societies. They insure lives, provide benefits for the sick, carry on business like the Grangers, supplying the members with all the necessities of life, and they appropriate each year a portion of their profits, to be used for educational purposes. In 1875 there were in England and Wales 926 societies of this kind, with 420,000 members. Their share capital was $22,500,000, and the amount credited during the year about $9,000,000. The trade accounts set forth goods paid for in the year $70,000,000; cash received for goods in the year $80,000,000; stock in trade $9,000,000. The total expense of carrying on the business of the society was about $3,500,000. The disposable profit realized from all sources during the year was about $6,000,000, from which $60,000 was deducted for educational purposes, and the remainder paid out in dividends. These societies are the subject of a Parliamentary Blue-Book, recently issued, which gives exact statements of the business and its results. It is worthy of note that co-operative societies in England are, generally speaking, more successful than individual merchants.—Phila. Ledger.

TEACHERS OF MORALITY INSTEAD OF RELIGION.—It now appears that the committees appointed by the Congregational, Methodist, and Baptist ministers to consider measures opposing sectarian teaching by the Commonwealth at the State Prison, have met and appointed a sub-committee consisting of Rev. Dr. Johnson, of Cambridge, (Congregationalist), Prof. Hovey, of Newton, (Baptist), and Rev. Dr. Pierce, of Zion's Herald, (Methodist), to draft a law to be presented to the next Legislature providing for the appointment of a "teacher of morality" to take the place of the present Prison Chaplain; this officer to give no sectarian instruction; all convicts to be required to attend regular services conducted by him; any denomination or sect to be allowed to hold services not interfering with the discipline of the institution; and any convict to be allowed such religious instruction not paid for by the State, and not interfering with the prison discipline as he may desire. It seems by this action of the clergy that it is desirable to blot out the name of "Chaplain" from the statute books of the Commonwealth, so far, at least, as concerns the Massachusetts State Prison. The purpose of such an attempt is not known definitely, and conjecture has therefore free scope. The main question is, "Is it done to let down easily the present Chaplain?" A "teacher of morality," which the clergy seem desirous of appointing in place of the present Chaplain, already exists. It is a powerful argument against sin, and stands out in bold relief to warn all against the results of wrong doing. That teacher is the Massachusetts State Prison. The men confined within its walls know it is a teacher of morality and a corrector of evil, and outsiders are also well aware of the same thing. It is also contemplated that this "teacher" shall give no sectarian instruction, and all convicts are to attend regular services held by him. Under the present rules of the prison, all convicts are required to attend the regular services held by the Chaplain, and it is fair to presume he does not preach any sectarian doctrine. In these two items no change is contemplated. There is, however, a desire to allow "any denomination or sect to hold services not interfering with the discipline of the institution." In this a change is contemplated, leaving the preaching of denominational and sectarian doctrines to be determined by whom it does not say. "Any convict to be allowed such religious instruction not paid for by the State and not interfering with the prison discipline as he may desire," is another section. This is a matter which should be well considered. "It is intended," so it is said, "that the State shall pay for no religious instruction." At present the Chaplain is paid at the rate of $2,000 per annum, while the Catholic clergy in attendance receive not one copper from the treasury of the State.—Boston Herald.

THE BANK OF HEAVEN UNABLE TO MEET DEMANDS AGAINST IT.—The New York Tribune gives a statement of the mortgages on the metropolitan houses of worship in this city alone. Recent foreclosure proceedings in the case of Dr. Hepworth's Church of the Disciples and similar procedures in other suits have lately directed attention to the fact that many of the finest and costliest of the fashionable churches in New York City are heavily mortgaged. No other class of improved real estate in this city appears to be so heavily incumbered as that of its religious associations. Nearly the whole debt created by these mortgages has been for the purpose of enlarging edifices, or the construction of new ones. There can be found scarcely an example where a church has incurred debt for the purpose of increasing salaries or the number of its laborers, or to enlarge its contributions to general charity or missionary funds. All has apparently been for show. Indeed, many of the churches owe their existence to the mortgages with which they are encumbered. The following list shows the financial condition of many of the New York churches which are mortgaged, and of some religious societies. All mortgages registered prior to 1869 are omitted, and others less than $5,000 in amount disregarded, except in grand totals. The other figures are exact, as taken from the county register's book:

American Bible Union.....	$ 20,000
American Tract Society.....	123,000
Annunciation, Protestant Episcopal.....	16,000
Ascension, Protestant Episcopal.....	36,000
Ascension Chapel.....	21,000
Atonement, Protestant Episcopal.....	25,000
Brick Presbyterian church.....	25,000
Christ Protestant Episcopal church.....	29,000
Covenant, Presbyterian.....	29,000
Disciples, Congregational.....	189,000
Fifth Avenue Baptist.....	42,000
Fifty-Third Street Baptist.....	67,000
First Baptist.....	45,000
First Baptist, of Harlem.....	22,000
First German Baptist.....	18,000
First United Presbyterian.....	12,500
Fourth Avenue Presbyterian.....	25,000
Fourth German Reformed Prot. Dutch.....	10,000
Fourth Reformed Presbyterian.....	20,000
Grace church, Prot. Episcopal, Harlem.....	10,000
Heavenly Rest, Protestant Episcopal.....	137,000
Holy Apostles, Protestant Episcopal.....	12,000
Holy Sepulchre, Protestant Episcopal.....	60,000
Holy Sepulchre, Prot. Epis., Harlem.....	65,000
Holy Trinity, Evangelical Lutheran.....	28,000
Incarnation, Protestant Episcopal.....	14,000
Intercession, Protestant Episcopal.....	46,000
Jane Street M. E.....	14,000
Madison Avenue Reformed.....	100,000
Madison Square Presbyterian church.....	45,000
M. E. church, East circuit of New York.....	45,000
M. E. church, Harlem.....	40,000
Memorial, Presbyterian.....	130,000
New York Presbyterian church.....	15,000
Northwest Protestant Reformed Dutch.....	20,000
Phillips, Presbyterian.....	200,000
Puritans, Presbyterian.....	155,000
Plymouth, Baptist.....	18,000
Reformed Protestant Dutch church.....	471,000
Reformed Protestant Dutch church.....	25,000
Reformed Low Dutch church, Harlem.....	28,000
Sacred Heart, Roman Catholic.....	15,000
Second Congregational Unitarian church.....	64,000
St. Andrew's Prot. Episcopal, Harlem.....	60,000
St. Bernard, Roman Catholic.....	70,000
St. Esprit, Rom. Cath. French church.....	10,000
St. John, Evangelical Lutheran.....	16,000
St. John the Baptist, Roman Catholic.....	74,000
St. Luke, German Evangelical.....	30,000
St. Nicholas, Roman Catholic.....	10,000
St. Stephen's, Protestant Episcopal.....	34,000
St. Teresa, Roman Catholic.....	27,000
St. Vincent de Paul, Asylum of, Rom. C's.....	5,000
St. Vincent de Paul, Church of, Rom. C's.....	65,000

RECAPITULATION.

Presbyterian.....	$706,000	Methodist.....	79,000
Reformed.....	644,000	Lutheran.....	44,800
Prot. Episcopal.....	468,000
Rom. Catholic.....	229,000	Total.....	$2,387,886
Baptist.....	212,000

What think you of that, the churches of an Infinite God loaded down with debt? Keep that lesson before you, and remember how futile is prayer to God to relieve them of that burden.

Events of the Week.

THE English are looking closely after their rights in the East. They will keep two gunboats on the Danube.

THE recent hot weather has enlivened business at the places of Summer resort. Bed-bugs are reported as being very lively.

A FEW days ago we had a very heavy thunder-shower in this locality. Lightning struck in several places and did considerable damage.

WE are having fine Summer weather. Some days it is rather warm for comfort but just the thing for corn. Showers are frequent and refreshing.

THE Russo-Turkish war does not progress very rapidly. Reports arrive of partial successes on either side, which reports are within a day or two disputed.

ONE hundred workmen were discharged from the railroad shops at Albany. It is understood that this action resulted from their participation in the late disturbances at that place.

SUICIDES are still on the increase. In some of our morning papers as many as six cases are reported in a single day. An empty pocket-book, and an empty stomach, with nothing to put in them, rob life of its sweetest charms.

A DAM-BREAK on the Big Crum Creek, at Strathaven, Pa., caused the destruction of ten houses, numerous bridges, and fences, and damaged a woolen factory to the extent of $3,000. Several persons narrowly escaped death.

THE peach season is now fully inaugurated. Forty or fifty car-loads of this luscious fruit are arriving daily. The crop is said to be heavier than ever before. Just think of the quantity of peaches we New Yorkers have got to eat within the next sixty days!

BEECHER's remark that workingmen could live on bread and water stirred up such an amount of ire all through the community that he was forced to make an explanation. He claims that his sympathies are all with the laboring classes, and that his remarks were misrepresented.

THE roughs of San Francisco have been acting very meanly towards the Chinese living in their city. They have invaded the Chinese quarter and attempted to burn the houses in which they live. At San Pablo, near Oakland, nine houses were thus destroyed before the flames could be arrested.

A PREACHER of the colored persuasion, who had a fondness for watermelons, a few nights ago, in Early Co., Ga., took the liberty of walking into the melon patch of one of his neighbors and helping himself without permission. The owner, not fancying interlopers, fired at the intruder and killed him. He dropped dead with his mouth still filled with melon. O, water meloncholy affair.

WM. H. VANDERBILT has presented the employees of the N. Y. Central Railroad with the sum of $100,000, to be divided pro rata among them as they stand upon the pay-roll. He does this in compliment to his twelve thousand employees for their loyalty and propriety during the late strikes. Of that number only five hundred acted riotously, and attempted to destroy property belonging to the company. He promises to raise the men's wages as soon as the business of the country will permit. This act will doubtless make Vanderbilt popular with "the boys."

THE railroad strikes are over, and trains on the principal lines are running as usual. It is a matter of doubt whether the insane conduct of the strikers in the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of useful property has done any good. It is to be hoped that capitalists will learn to do justice to the laboring classes. The prosperity of the country depends upon this; and sad will it be for the country if mob rule and riot are to be the governing powers. The condition of the strikers has probably been made worse by their mad action. Thousands of them are now unemployed, and they will doubtless be the last men whom the railroad companies will be disposed to place in good positions.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1877.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

PART III.
BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. IX.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I fancy I see you walking over your domain endeavoring to repair the damages of the storm of my last, which had so recently swept over it. I see you anxious to replace and readjust the posts, etc., which you had so carefully planted, and that the task is too hard for you. But I perceive, too, that you have the faculty, where you cannot remedy the effects of the storm, of quietly letting it pass and of saying nothing about it. Where you were damaged the most and your posts are completely gone, you say not a word.

In your subsequent efforts to recover from the damage you become excited and wild. You remind me of a discomfited champion of the prize ring who has received such stunning blows that his head rings and swims, his face bleeding, his eyes swollen and closed, his strength exhausted, and he strikes wildly and frantically in all directions without object or aim. What have the advertisements in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER and other journals, the treatment of spermatorrhoea, the sale of medical works, astrology, Paine Hall, Science Hall, The World's Sages, George Francis Train, Mrs. Woodhull, John A. Lant, and many other things you strike at and clutch at, to do with the subject under discussion? Where your posts were entirely swept away, I see you vainly would set up new ones, but they will hardly serve you. I fancy you appear to better advantage on "the back seat of the car of Progress," throwing out your hand-bills, claiming great scientific achievements than in the role of a post-setter and defender, or as a bully in the P. R.

I can hardly notice all the points you touch upon, but you make so many glaring misstatements and misrepresentations that I cannot let all pass unnoticed. While I have you under my charge I feel a certain responsibility for your conduct, and cannot let you make misstatements without applying a gentle corrective. I fear your cause is not a good one if misrepresentation is necessary to help you out. It may be set down as an axiom that Truth never needs falsehood to sustain it. You doubtless think with Paul, your guide and authority, that falsehood and guile may serve a good purpose in certain emergencies (Rom. iii, 7, "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner," and 2 Cor. xii, 16, "But be it so, I did not burden you; nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile"), but the clearest judges do not accept falsehood and guile as proper factors in making up the most excellent moral character or as the best agencies with which to effect good works. Let me point out some of your departures from truth.

1. You say I failed to strengthen my claim to Peter Cooper. I think not. I proved that he admitted that he was a heretic. He is not orthodox, and will so admit to you if you call upon him. What if Paine's works are not in his library and the Bible is? He did not select the books for the library. He does not believe all contained in the books in the library, nor discard all in books not in it. The Life of Paine and Voltaire's Writings are there, and if your argument proves anything, Peter Cooper must believe them. On a certain occasion, in a short speech at a public meeting in his hall, Mr. Cooper admitted that he did not regard the Bible stories of the creation, the fall of man, and the flood, as being literally true, but as mere legends. Besides, let me inform you that Paine's Works are in his library—now, if not when you looked for them.

2. You say all I have said about Cornell University is disproved by the quotation you make from President White. Not so. It does not disprove a word of it. The assertions I made are true and must stand. Of course, he wishes to have religious young men attend that school, and he caters somewhat to them, but neither he nor acting-President Russell are believers in the central dogmas of Christianity.

3. The silence of Herodotus about Jerusalem and the Temple is a proof that they were not in existence, or were not worthy of remark. He visited Syria twice; and as Palestine is included in Syria, had there been such a city, such a nation, or such a temple, he assuredly would have known it and described them. He may also have visited Rome, and his allusions to that city may have been in the portions of his works that were lost. What he wrote about Syria is not lost, and he says not a word about that part of it where the nomadic Jews resided.

4. You misrepresent Prof. Rawson. You say he stands alone among travelers in holding that there are no indications of ancient civilization in Palestine. He has not claimed that there are no proofs there of an ancient civilization. He readily admits it, but claims they are not proofs of Hebrew civilization. There are ruins there of Egyptian, Grecian, Roman, and Arabic origin, but nothing distinctively Jewish. Neither does he stand alone in this position. Dr. Robinson practically admits the same, and is confirmed, as I showed in my last, by Captains Wilson and Warren.

I see you dislike to acknowledge the fact that the Jews were semi-barbarians, but you may as well do so with the best grace you can. Their being degraded slaves in Egypt would not disprove it. Slaves are not apt to be far advanced in education and civilization. Your attempts to prove that they were not barbarians by referring to the silly story of Jacob and his ringed and streaked sticks, and about Queen Sheba coming "from the uttermost parts of the earth," seem to me weak and sophistical. Where are the "uttermost parts of the earth" located? That the Jews were barbarians it is only necessary to state that they offered as sacrifices both animals and human beings. For an instance of the latter, I will refer you to the case of Jephtha and his daughter, and to Leviticus xxvii, 28 and 29. "Notwithstanding no devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord of all that he hath, both of man and beast," etc. "None devoted of man shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death." That they also ate human flesh I will refer you to the following passages: Deut. xxviii, 53-57; Lam. iv, 10; Ezekiel xxxix, 18, and Bar. ii, 3.

5. It is hardly fair in you, after I had given you Prof. Rawson's name and address, and after you had called upon him several times, to still insinuate that I withhold authorities. I will in all cases give them where it is necessary. The statement that Peter Cooper calls himself a "heretic" is from Mr. Egbert Hasard, a cultivated and well-known gentleman.

6. Your repetition that the excesses connected with the French Revolution and the Reign of Terror were a part of the programme of Freethought is most untrue. If you assert it a thousand times, it is still untrue. They were wholly political in character and origin. The Reign of Terror began with the reign of Robespierre, and continued while he was in power. He was the leading spirit of the times; and for proof that he was a Christian, a religious fanatic, I will refer you to Chamber's Encyclopedia, and to Thiers' French Revolution, vol. ii, p. 376, and vol. iii, pp. 11, 12.

7. You say: "Infidelity is always flattering human nature." Untrue. It simply aims to tell the truth about it and to show how much it is capable of doing. Christianity is always demeaning human nature, insisting that it is totally depraved and incapable of itself of doing anything good or praiseworthy. The doctrine of total depravity leaves no room for good in the human heart. Infidelity in this respect teaches truth, and Christianity falsehood.

8. You say: "Infidelity is not self-consistent." It is perfectly so. However difficult it may be to decide the nature of a Supreme Power, or whether we have an individual existence after this life, the rejection by all classes of Liberals of the absurd dogmas upon which the Christian religion is founded is perfectly consistent and perfectly correct.

9. You insist that Infidelity is inferior to the Scriptures because it is disintegrating and disorganizing. Incorrect. While Infidelity does not form creeds and dogmas, it accepts the moral law of doing the greatest good to our fellow-beings, compatible with individual rights. Infidelity is superior to the Scriptures because it rejects the supernatural, it is less contradictory, less obscene, less bloody, less murderous, less cruel. Do you pretend to say there is more diversity of opinion among Infidels than there is among Christians with their hundreds of modifications and differences over which they have contended and fought for nearly twenty centuries?

10. You say "the history and teachings of Infidelity prove that its tendency is to universal disintegration and decomposition—that is, universal death." This assertion is entirely devoid of truth. Pagan and anti-Christian nations have been as much devoted to the organization of families and societies as Christendom has ever been. Pagan sages and philosophers have never been excelled in their inculcations respecting the sanctity of home, duties to parents, children, and all members of society. I refer you to the Institutes of Menu, the teachings of Zoroaster, Buddha, Confucius, Mencius, Socrates, Plato, and numerous others of later date.

11. You declare that "Advanced thinkers are endeavoring to sever the golden bonds of the family." Untrue. The leading thinkers and reformers are seeking to make the family love and family happiness more perfect and more productive of good. As a complete refutation of your assertion, let me refer you to the lecture of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, our leading exponent of Liberalism, upon the "Liberty of Man, Woman and Child," which appeared in the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and which contains eloquent appeals for the sanctity of the home and marriage relations. The marriage ceremony itself is an Infidel institution. It originated with the pagans, and was adopted from them by the Christians. It was your organizing Jesus who taught: "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Luke xiv. 26). When making such sweeping charges as you do, you should adduce some proofs. Who are they who are "endeavoring to sever the golden bonds"?

12. You next say, "If Freethinkers are law-abiding citizens, it is because they are inconsistent." It is a marvel to me how a man who makes any pretension to sanity and truthfulness can make such a reckless assertion. Freethinkers are law-abiding citizens for the same reason that all good people are who recognize the necessity of law and order in the regulation of society.

13. Again, you say: "Were the Infidel doctrine to be applied simultaneously to everything, the whole world would be in a state of hopeless anarchy in twenty-four hours." I do not know how a man could insert more untruthness and absurdity in a single sentence. There is not a word of truth in it. Infidelity is simply a denial of the supernatural origin of the Bible and Christianity. Nine tenths of the inhabitants of the world are disbelievers in this divinity, and they still do not exist in a state of anarchy, but are absolutely more orderly and moral than Christians. Verily, my friend, you have taken the text for your last letter from Rom. iii. 7 previously quoted; and, of course, to a man who can accept such immoral teachings as the word of God, truth must always be subservient to the interests of his creed or of himself. The evil effects of a thorough belief in the Bible are making themselves manifest.

14. You have the hardihood to assert that "Pure Infidelity has produced no orders, brotherhoods or societies; it has created no institutions of charity or learning." Wholly untrue. Nations not accepting Christianity have produced far more orders, societies, brotherhoods, associations, and the like than Christianity has done. There are at the present time in the world hundreds, yea, thousands of societies or associations under Infidel auspices. They have established numerous colleges and institutions of learning and charity. Do not be so blind or narrow-minded as to think that Christianity has done all that has been effected in this line.

15. You say; "The Bible inculcates and Christians exercise more sincerity than Infidels practice." A most ridiculous absurdity, and not susceptible of proof. No class of people in the world exercise mere sincerity than Infidels; and as proof I assert the fact that to maintain their honest convictions they bear the opprobrium, abuse, and condemnation of the votaries of theological mysticism who belong to the popular respectable (?) class. It takes a sincere, honest, and truly brave man to be a good Infidel.

16. You reiterate the threadbare untruth that "a great many Infidels have betrayed their life-long hypocrisy by their death-bed misgivings and confessions." It is perhaps harsh to tell a man he utters a falsehood, but in this case it is mild language to do so. The charge is as false as the doctrine of hell! No distinguished Infidel has confessed his error on his death-bed, nor recanted his views, and I defy you to prove where one has. But there are thousands of cases where Christians have died in great doubt, and in utter fear and terror. Martin Luther despaired of the salvation of his soul. Shortly before his death his concubine pointed to the brilliancy of the stars of the firmament: "See, Martin, how beautiful that heaven is." "It does not shine in our behalf," replied the master, moodily. "Is it because we have broken our vows?" resumed Kate, in dismay. "May be," said Luther. "If so, let us go back." "Too late, the hearse is stuck in the mire," and he would hear no more. At Eishenben, on the day previous to that on which he was stricken with apoplexy, he remarked to his friends: "I have almost lost sight of the Christ, tossed as I am by these waves of despair which overwhelm me," and after a while he continued, "I who have imparted salvation to so many cannot save myself." . . . "He died forlorn of God, blaspheming to the very end." Schusselberg, a Protestant, writes thus of the death of Calvin: "Calvin died of scarlet fever, devoured by vermin, and eaten up by an ulcerous abscess, the stench whereof drove away every person" (Theol. Calvin, t. ii. p. 72). "In great misery he gave up the ghost, despairing of salvation, evoking devils from the abyss, and uttering oaths most horrible, and blasphemies most frightful." John Hazen, a disciple of Calvin, and an eye-witness of his death, writes thus: "Calvin died in despair. He died a death hideous and revolting, such as God threatened the impious and reprobate with." And he adds: "I can vouch for the truth of every word, because I have been an eye-witness" (De vita Calvin). Spalatin, Justus, Jonas, Isinder, and a host of other friends of Luther, died either in despair or crazy. Henry VIII died bemoaning that he had lost heaven, and his worthy daughter Elizabeth breathed her last in deep desolation, stretched on the floor—not daring to lie in bed, because at the first attack of her illness she imagined she saw her body all torn to pieces and palpitating in a cauldron of fire" (Plain Talk about Protestantism of To-day, by M. Segur).

How did your own dear Savior leave this world? In utter fear and terror, crying out in mental agony, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani!—My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me!" How different the death of these great lights of your Church from the courage and calmness displayed by Socrates, Bruno, Spinoza, Mirabeau, Hume, Voltaire, Volney, Hobbs, Bolingbroke, Rousseau, Gibbon, Jefferson, Ethan Allen, Paine, Kneeland, Theodore Parker, John Stuart Mill, Michael C. Kerr, and hosts of other unbelievers who died peacefully and placidly, without the slightest fear. "In all my experience," says the Rev. Theodore Clapp, for a long time a prominent clergyman of New Orleans, and who doubtless preached nearly ten times as long as you have done, "I never saw an unbeliever die in fear. I have seen them expire, of course, without any hopes or expectations, but never in agitation from dread or misgivings as to what might befall them hereafter. It is probable that I have seen a greater number of those called irreligious persons breathe their last than any other clergyman in the United States. . . . When I first entered the clerical profession I was struck with the utter inefficiency of most forms of Christianity to afford consolation in the dying hour." Add to this the testimony of a great light of your own Church, the Rev. Albert Barnes, who for half a century preached the gospel of Jesus to anxious souls. As he neared the close of a long, busy life he said: "I see not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into the world, why the earth is strewn with the dying and the dead, and why man must suffer to all eternity. I have never seen a particle of light thrown on these subjects that has given a moment's ease to my tortured mind; nor have I an explanation to offer or a thought to suggest that would be a relief to you. I trust other men, as they profess to do, understand this better than I do, and that they have not the anguish of spirit I have; but I confess, when I look on a world of sinners and sufferers, upon death-beds and graveyards, upon the world of woe, filled with hearts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger; when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned; and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it, I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it" (Practical Sermons, p. 124).

Thus we see, from Christian authorities, that instead of Infidels dying in fear and terror, it is leading Christians who have done this; it is they who so frequently recoil at the approach of the King of Terrors.

It is an unfair insinuation in you to attempt to make it appear as cowardice in Paine that he deferred the publication of the Age of Reason till the latter part of his life. There is not the slightest warrant for your doing this. To charge Thomas Paine with moral cowardice is like charging the sun with being the source of darkness.

You quote Dr. Johnson as calling Bolingbroke a coward, but Johnson was himself far more a coward. He was noted for his timidity and superstition, and he entertained a perfect horror of death.

17. You say, "The insincerity of Infidels is shown by the scantiness of their efforts to propagate their ideas." Not so. While they do not believe the promulgation of their views is necessary to save souls from the seething lake of fire and brimstone, they have evinced commendable zeal in bringing their views to the knowledge of their fellow beings. Many have spent their lives in disseminating the truths of Liberalism, and with slight expectation of pecuniary remuneration. I claim to be one of this class. I have devoted my time and strength to this labor of love. I do not believe there is a Christian in the country who gives as many hours' service in a year to spreading his views as I do mine, and who does it with less expectation of making money.

18. Again, you say, "Freethought lecturers have to do a prodigious amount of advertising, drumming up, and self-puffing." This is a contradiction of your previous assertion. It is a specimen of your fairness and consistency to taunt Infidels with making no efforts to promulgate their views and in the same breath to asperse them for making "prodigious" efforts in that direction. Our lecturers do not do a "prodigious amount of advertising," but a limited amount. Our two most popular lecturers, Ingersoll and Underwood, are under very little necessity of advertising. Ingersoll, without a single effort of the kind, could have fifty audiences for every night in the year, could he serve them. Underwood has more calls for his services than he is able to supply. He is compelled to refuse many applications. It is not necessary for him to advertise. New lecturers have, of course, to make themselves known. Your fling at the cost of Infidelity is in keeping with your other criticisms. Christianity has cost the world a thousand times more than Infidelity ever has or ever will.

19. You say, "Infidel journals are not well supported." They are supported well enough to continue to exist. The Investigator has put in an appearance every week for nearly half a century. Newer papers, considering the time and capital employed, have done well. Have Church papers all done well? Far greater numbers of them have been forced to the wall for want of adequate support than have Liberal papers. How is it with the Christian daily, The Witness, which has been running a long time at a heavy loss? The compositors and other employees recently struck for the $3,000 that is owing them for their labor, and the paper was compelled to be issued with a single page of new matter. My compositors have never been under the necessity of striking. They have received their pay every Saturday night.

As to efforts being made to "freeze THE TRUTH SEEKER out," I know nothing of it. Just now the temperature is such that freezing seems to be the most unlikely misfortune. It began with the financial panic in the autumn of 1873. It had neither capital nor experience to back it; but in spite of the unprecedented hard times it has grown from a monthly to a semi-monthly, then to a weekly, and its number of patrons and readers has steadily increased.

20. You say SCIENCE HALL "is a dingy little back room." Not true; it is of fair size; 80 by 35 feet, and has seats for about five hundred persons. It is not gorgeously fitted up with richly cushioned seats and a $10,000 organ, but it is not dingy. It is no farther back from the street than nine tenths of the churches in this city, and is more quiet for being removed from the front. Do you think your churches would be more pleasurable if the pulpits were close to the noisy streets? Scientific apparatus, diagrams, and costly illustrations are used there when needed. I have seen them all used there repeatedly, but not once in any of your churches. Whatever aspersions you may please to make about want of grandeur and style in SCIENCE HALL, I can assure you it was not stolen, and it is not in debt. It is not likely soon to be sold out at Sheriff's sale, as was the altar, the pulpit, the organ, and all the holy paraphernalia at the "Church of the Holy Savior" recently, to pay a debt the church could not meet. I will call your attention to a recent article in the Tribune, taken from the county records, showing on fifty-four churches of this city, of various denominations, mortgages amounting to $2,367,886, and will ask you whether it is not better for SCIENCE HALL to rest under your imputation of being little and "dingy" than to be grand and fashionable by following the Christian example of going in debt to accomplish it? If SCIENCE HALL people had borrowed $40,000, which is less than the average owing on the fifty-four churches alluded to, they doubtless could have fixed the place up splendidly, but they preferred to not be embarrassed with such a debt for mere grandeur. See first page of this paper for the list of mortgages alluded to.

In enumerating the places in the city where Liberal meetings are held, it would not have been unfair to have named the magnificent Masonic Temple where Mr. Frothingham discourses to large audiences, Standard Hall, where Professor Adler holds forth to the Ethical Society, Republican Hall and Harvard Rooms, where the Spiritualists meet regularly, and the hall in which the Cosmopolitan Conference meets every Sunday, at 1214 Broadway.

21. You set it down as an axiom, that "Immorality is consistent with Infidelity." It is most untrue. Infidels are admirers of virtue, morality, and good deeds. They esteem them for the results they produce, and not because they think the practice of them will save anybody from a literal hell. Knowing they cannot be counted righteous by the good deeds of another, they realize the necessity of performing the good deeds themselves. They are lovers of virtue for virtue's sake, and not for Jesus' sake.

22. Again you say, "An Infidel cannot injure his standing, as an Infidel, by anything he may do. No injustice or villainy on his part could bring mankind to feel that he had violated his principles." I cannot conceive how a man could go to work to state a more palpable untruth. Infidels are just as susceptible to the effects of bad conduct as any class of men in the world. Injustice and villainy sink them in the estimation of their fellow-beings as much as any class of men. It is the Christian who can consistently commit unmanly deeds and be guilty of immoral conduct, for he does not expect to be saved by his own merits, nor to be damned for his misdeeds; it is faith in the blood of Jesus that takes him to heaven. It is the dying pangs of his Savior that wafts his soul to Paradise. No matter how much vile conduct he may be guilty of, if he only has "faith," he is all safe. Let him contract ever so many debts, "Jesus pays it all."

23. You step out of your way to throw filth and abuse upon the memory of some of the best men the world has ever produced. While there may be some truth in your charges, they are distorted, and you traduce where praise is more deserved. I can hardly take the room to follow you in all cases, and show how unjust your charges are. Girard did not make his wife insane by quarreling with her. You have no grounds for insinuating that Paine lived improperly with Mrs. Bonneville. You have thrown out this slander before, but offered no adequate proof to sustain it. I should be equally justified in claiming that Jesus committed adultery with the Mary whom he loved so well. Goethe was not an immoral man. Rousseau was an upright, well-disposed man. Voltaire was not a perjurer. Chesterfield did not seek to make his son a whoremaster. John Stuart Mill sustained a character too pure for you to besmirch. Shelley was not guilty of wrong in leaving his wife; nor was he dissolute. What are the facts in his case? When a mere boy he was expelled from college, and driven from home because he presumed to disbelieve what the orthodox taught about God and devils. Two years before he became of age he was thrown in the company of Harriet Westbrook, and they, as boys and girls so often do, fell in love with each other. She proposed to elope with him, but he declined to do this, and they were legally married. But unfortunately, as is too often the case, as time sped away, they found they were uncongenial to each other. This state of things was intensified by the conduct of a maiden sister of the wife, who, because of Shelley's unbelief, used every effort to turn her sister's mind against him. They finally mutually agreed to separate, and the same was done with the approbation of the wife's father. Shelley did not forsake her, but contributed to her support and felt friendly towards her. The world has produced few more brilliant, amiable and pure men than was Percy Bysshe Shelley; and though he died before he reached his thirtieth year, he has left such a monument of the beautiful creations of his genius and sterling truths as will carry his name in honor and glory down to the latest generation. Byron, it is true, was wild and amorous; but he, too, died young. Had he lived to late manhood, it may well be supposed he would have "sowed his wild oats," and become a staid and exemplary member of society.

Your flings at Geo. Francis Train, John A. Lant, Dr. Foote, Charles Bradlaugh, and the fanatic and insane Pike are perhaps worthy of you. Let me assure you that neither of these were really guilty of obscenity. Dr. Foote and Bradlaugh published scientific information needed by the people. Train published without comment portions of the "Holy Scriptures." Lant did even less. These were all victims of Christian bigotry and oppression. Let me also assure you that Mrs. Woodhull has never been claimed by the Infidels of this country. She is one of your kind, and is a strong believer in the Bible. She takes it with her upon the lecture platform, and selects texts from it the same as you and her other brethren do. She prevented a witness from being allowed to testify in court because he did not believe in the "Gawd" of the Bible. It is asserted that she has joined the Church, so I beg of you not to traduce a sister in the Lord as being the "quintessence of nastiness."

You have, of course, studiously hunted up all the dark spots you could find on the escutcheon of prominent Infidels, and you have presented them to their worst advantage. But really what does it all prove? It proves that unbelievers are human beings, and have sometimes made mistakes. What class of men is there in the world, that running over their records for hundreds of years, as many charges could not be brought against them?

You have succeeded in giving at most but a short catalogue of the errors of Infidels, men who claimed no power from on high to aid them in withstanding the impulses of human nature. To counterbalance the arraignment let me before I close give you a single chapter of the crimes of the old patriarchs and worthies of the Jewish Church and some of the spiritual leaders and bright lights of the Christian Church—men who are thought to have the spirit of God with them to guide them aright, and the sanctification and holiness of Jesus and the Holy Ghost, not only to aid them to lead pure lives but to be leaders and pilots to those having less assistance from the heavenly throne. I will resume this part of my subject further on.

24. You say "Ingersoll—having nothing else to do—has gone to the California heathen to tell them about his Ghosts," etc. How do you know so well that he has nothing else to do? Let me inform you that he is one of the ablest and most popular lawyers in Illinois, and for years has had a large and constantly increasing practice. As a reply to your aspersions that Infidels have no missionary societies, let me say, that had they such organizations, it would not cost thirty-nine out of every forty dollars received by them to pay the officers, etc., as was the case with the pious St. John's Guild in this city, and ninety-nine out of every hundred dollars received, as is the case with the Christian foreign missions. The poor heathen who stand in so much danger of being plunged into hell do not really get the benefit of one dollar in a hundred of the money that is persistently begged from Sunday-school children, servant girls, and silly children of older growth. The thousands thus obtained are used to pay the numerous officers of the organizations, and to line the pockets of the attaches, unsalaried priests, etc.

25. You assert that "Christianity condemns immorality, while Infidelity is consistent with it and encourages it." Why, my pious friend, do you make such reckless assertions? Christianity excels no religion in the world in condemning immorality. It has sanctioned, and its believers have practiced, for many centuries the grossest of crimes. There is more crime in Christian countries than in any others on the globe. If Christian doctrines are true, morality is wholly unnecessary. Morality cannot save the world but the blood of Christ can, and it can save an immoral world—an immoral people—just as well as a moral one. Faith is the only ingredient necessary. Infidelity does not encourage immorality. It exalts morality and teaches that it is the source of happiness. It does not call it "filthy rags," etc., as Christians have done thousands upon thousands of times.

26. You again repeat that "Infidelity invites and is consistent with every species of iniquity." In the mildest language I can command I must characterize this charge as uncalled for, uncharitable, unfair, and positively false! I demand of you to prove your charge or withdraw it. It avails you little to quote Franklin in a remark about "religion." He does not sustain your slanderous position at all. Of course he had a sincere veneration for religion, but none for Christianity. He did not laud the Christian dogmas, nor harp about the blood of Jesus. Until you can show when he praised the Christian faith, and acknowledged it as his, it will be quite as well for you not to claim him as a supporter of your system.

27. You say "Ingersoll is 'matchless' at cursing and swearing." Mistaken again. You wrong the gentleman. He may occasionally use some expletives, but there are thousands of clergymen in the country who surpass him a long way in cursing and swearing. I have been in his company for hours, and at different times, and do not remember to have heard him swear or curse. You should be a little more careful in making charges.

28. Again you say, "Infidels are illiberal. They have endowed scarcely any institutions of learning," etc. You thus wrong them again. With the bequests of Stephen Girard, Smithsonian, Peter Cooper, Gerrit Smith, and James Lick in memory, how can you make such a statement? When Liberals give in charity it is not as a sect, an order, or as a class, but as citizens of the world. I know not why they should not be just as generous to give according to their means as believers in myths and superstitions. It was the practice of Christianity for so many centuries to kill off the Infidels and the latter had few opportunities to accumulate wealth to give away. It kept them pretty busy to save their lives.

29. You say "There was a furious rumpus at one of the 'Liberal Club' elections." How easy it was for you to exaggerate and misrepresent. There was some difference of opinion as to which members were suitable or unsuitable for certain offices, but there was nothing "furious" or violent about it. Have not Liberals the same right to disagree in matters of opinion of this kind that Christians exercise so largely? There is nothing in the country more common than church quarrels and fights. Hundreds of cases could be cited were it necessary. The proportion of church quarrels to Liberal quarrels is probably a million to one.

30. Again, you say "Infidels are hypocritical." Indeed! It took you to make that discovery! It is possible some of the weaker ones, in order to keep on good terms with Mrs. Grundy and Mrs. McFlimsy, may not be outspoken in acknowledging how little they believe, but it is only the weak ones who act in this way. The bulk of Infidels show a great amount of honesty and independence in acknowledging their views. You must have been put to your trumps to rake up charges against them.

31. "Infidels are superstitious." This is too weak to demand attention. If there are any people in the world free from superstition they are Infidels. They have no faith in myths and supernaturalism. They believe in the Universe—in matter and the powers and forces that pertain to it, and in nothing else. Superstition forms no part of their composition. As to astrologers, it is, perhaps, hardly worth your while to slur them. There have been, and still are, men with more intelligence than you and I both possess who believe that the planets exercise a decided influence on the people and affairs of this world. Thales, Pythagoras, Hippocrates, Aristotle, Claudius Ptolemy, Roger Bacon, Lord Francis Bacon, Kepler, Tycho Brahe, and Sir Isaac Newton, were firm believers in astrology. Your rap at the advertisements that appear in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER was hardly necessary. The publishers of papers are never expected to endorse every advertisement that is brought to them. Christian papers advertise patent medicines, gift concerns, insurance companies, patent rights, etc., and nobody thinks they are responsible either for the worth or worthlessness of the articles advertised.

32. "Infidels exercise blind credulity." Then you add, "You will perhaps regard this as the keenest cut of all." O, no! I don't think it at all keen. If instead of "keen" you had said "silly," I would not have disputed you. Of all the people in the world Freethinkers are the least given to blind credulity. It takes solid proofs and facts to convince them.

33. "Infidels are very much given to copying." Not any more than other people. That they sometimes use arguments that others of their numbers have used is not impossible. I believe there is no law against it. A good argument will bear repeating. But do not Christians pattern after one another? Have they not been preaching the same fables, and telling the same tales about God's anger, the fountain of Jesus' blood, the lake of burning sulphur, and all the rest of that similar nonsense, for many centuries?

34. You have the kindness or unkindness to allude in some rather uncomplimentary remarks to my work, "The World's Sages," etc. You pronounce it "untrustworthy" and "demonstrably incorrect." You may be right. It may be wholly untrustworthy, but allow me to say in the most gentle manner that if I thought there were half as many errors in statement in it as there are errors in doctrine in your little volume of 130 pages on your favorite theme of "Hell and Damnation"—in which you labor so earnestly to prove an angry God, a personal Devil, a literal Hell of fire and brimstone in which hundreds of millions of helpless beings are to fry forever—I would get them all together and burn them to ashes. The facts contained in my volume were taken from biographies and cyclopedias of the highest reliability, and I am very sure no fact was distorted or misrepresented. The information regarding moderns treated in the work was sometimes obtained from the parties themselves, and sometimes from near friends. I assure you truth and accuracy were the ends kept in view.

35. "Infidels are unprogressive." Nearly a century has passed, and yet nothing better to offer a thicker than Paine's Age of Reason. . . . The Infidels of to-day are living on old hash, cold hash, and re-hash." You certainly have the faculty of compressing untruth into a small space to a greater extent than any other person I can think of. There may be truth in your remark that there is nothing better than the Age of Reason. In its way it is hard to beat, and has never been refuted nor answered by your ablest clergymen. It will live long after you and I are forgotten. But you are greatly mistaken in thinking that "thinkers" have had nothing given them since the Age of Reason. With your knowledge of the works of Humboldt, Darwin, Spencer, Mill, Tyndall, Huxley, Wallace, Amberley, Holyoake, Bradlaugh, Draper, and many others, it is most singular you should make such a statement. If we can always have such old hash or cold hash as the writings referred to, we think we shall thrive nicely. We greatly prefer it to the brimstone broth which you ladle out.

36. Your attempt to prove by phrenology that Infidelity is false appears to me futile, and as evidence of it I would say that phrenology is strictly a natural science, and has no connection with the supernatural. Nearly all Freethinkers and scientists accept phrenology as being mainly a true science, which teaches that the brain is the organ of the mind, and that character corresponds to structure.

37. The average sentiment of mankind is not against Freethought any farther than it is cramped and dwarfed by ecclesiasticism and superstition. Had it been, the Protestant religion would never have been known, and instead of you and I living to publish our opinions in an Infidel paper we would long since have been burned on a pile of pine wood carefully prepared by your Catholic mother whom you have so unceremoniously shaken. Martin Luther was a Freethinker for his time, and Infidels now are only finishing the work which he commenced—the demolition of the Christian religion. As fast as the human mind becomes emancipated from mythological and theological dogmas and errors, it is free to embrace the great truths of the Universe, which practically constitutes them Freethinkers or Infidels. The average sentiment of mankind is certainly opposed to Christianity. If the majority is to decide what is truth, your system could not get more than one vote in ten, taking the whole world into account.

38. In your closing paragraph you make a very complimentary allusion to Sir Isaac Newton, and hold him up as a specimen of perfected manhood. Newton was a great man, and when he kept within the range of positive science he was mainly correct. But when he entered upon the realm of superstition he was perfectly at sea, and steered wildly. Biot, in his Life of Sir Isaac Newton, after giving a full account of his work (Observations upon the Prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse of St. John), remarks: "It will doubtless be asked, how a mind of the character and force of Newton's, so habituated to the severity of mathematical considerations, so accustomed to the observation of real phenomena, so methodical and so cautious even at his boldest moments in physical speculation, and consequently so well aware of the conditions by which alone truth is to be discovered, could put together such a number of conjectures without noticing the extreme improbability that is involved in all of them." "The only answer that can be given to this question is, that this work was written at a time when Newton had almost ceased to think of science—that is, after the fatal aberration of his intellect in 1693." This is the answer, in brief, which Biot gives, and which is accepted not only by scientists, but by the majority of well informed theologians.

Thus I have followed you through more than a third of a hundred errors and misrepresentations which you made. Several others I must leave unnoticed this time. In taking my leave of them, allow me to say I hope in the future you will be more careful and guarded in your statements. It is unpleasant to have to take so much time and space to correct your mistakes. A public teacher like yourself ought to despise misrepresentation and untruth. My replies would not need to occupy half the space they do were it not for correcting the egregious errors you are so capable of making.

You have a way of "fast and loose" with the Catholic Church. When it suits your convenience to claim what it has done as an honor to the Christian cause you readily count it in as of the true elect, but when its damnable enormities and abominations are in view, you find it equally as convenient to disown it. I think in my former reply I said something about the ingratitude of a child's turning against its mother and denouncing her as an old prostitute. Such conduct cannot be justified. You must remember that all that Protestantism has she obtained from the Mother Church, and all that makes her any better than her criminal mother is the modicum of Infidelity and independence she dared to espouse when she set up business for herself.

Let me now fulfill my promise and give you an installment of the immoralities and crimes of distinguished patriarchs and saints of olden and modern times, to serve as an offset to the short chapter of similar short-comings which you arrayed against prominent Infidels. As you seem to be fond of that kind of literature, it gives me pleasure to gratify your tastes in that direction.

To begin with old Father Noah, we have Bible authority that he was a drunkard, and that he exposed his secrets while lying in a drunken debauch. That he cursed his grandson and his descendants to perpetual slavery because Ham laughed at old man Noah while thus lying drunk. This is held to be the cause of African slavery, which your own Church, the Presbyterian, has declared to be a divine institution, and regarded itself as an agent to sustain it.

Lot was also guilty of drunkenness and the horrible crime of incest.

Abraham was not only a liar and an adulterer, but he turned the woman he had used as a wife, together with his own child, out in the wilderness to perish with hunger.

Isaac was a liar and foolish dissembler.

Jacob was a deceitful trickster, a liar, a swindler, an adulterer, a polygamist and a fraud.

Reuben, son of Jacob, was guilty of cohabiting with his father's concubine.

Judah, another son, was guilty of whoring on the public highway.

Moses was a murderer, a bigamist, a thief, or the planner of wholesale theft, he was a tyrant, a slaughterer in cold blood of fifty to one hundred thousand women and children. He turned over thirty-two thousand innocent girls for the gratification of the brutality of soldiers.

Aaron was an idolater and a manufacturer of gods.

Joshua was a blood-thirsty slayer of the human race, a brigand, a robber and an appropriator of other people's property.

Gideon, besides being a reveller in human blood, a robber and despoiler, was a libertine—a regular Brigham Young. He kept many wives and concubines for his own use, and had seventy sons of his own begetting, not to count the daughters.

Samson, another judge in Israel, was a murderer, a thief and a dallier with a Philistine prostitute.

David, the sweet singer in Israel, and the man after God's own heart, was a robber, brigand and murderer. He delighted in deeds of slaughter and bloodshed. He was very sensual, keeping many wives and concubines. He slyly watched the fair Bathsheba while she was taking a bath, had her conveyed to his own bed, committed adultery with her and then meanly and murderously caused her husband to be put to death, and from that adulterous source the Savior of man is claimed to have descended, but there is a serious break in the lineage. As a proof that David had the venereal disease very bad, I will refer you to Psalms xxxviii.

Amnon, a son of David, raped and ravished his own sister.

Absalom, another son, held adulterous connection with his father's concubines, and in view of all the people.

Solomon, the son of David and Bathsheba, was the most lecherous man that ever lived. His seraglio consisted of seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines. He was also a worshiper of idols.

To skip several hundred years of lecherous and murderous kings and rulers among the Jews, let us get down into the heart of the Christian Church and see if they are any better than unbelievers and pagans.

Peter was guilty of lying and treachery. He flew into a passion and cut off a man's ear with a sword.

Paul advocated lying and guilt, if by them his purpose could be achieved.

Eusebius was a falsifier, forger, and interpolator.

Constantine, the Great Christian Propagandist, murdered his own son, his nephew, his wife—in all, he put to death seven members of his own family—besides the numerous other murders of which he was guilty.

St. Augustine was one of the most lecherous and dissipated men in Carthage. A thousand times worse than Benedict Arnold, he invited the Vandals under Genseric into Africa to ravage and destroy his own country.

Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, was a pious pillager and a religious ruffian and has justly been styled "a bold, bad man." By his order the Alexandrian Library was destroyed.

St. Cyril was an atrocious assassin. The horrible murder of the beautiful and talented Hypatia was ordered by him.

Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, beat to death the bishop of Constantinople, while attending a Christian council.

St. Alexander, another bishop of Constantinople, poisoned Arius, a brother bishop.

Macedonius passed over the bodies of three thousand men and women to obtain the bishopric of Constantinople.

St. Cyprrian was guilty of so many black and damnable crimes that it would take a volume to contain a recital of them all. The history of his foul deeds may be found in Mosheim and the Bibliotheca Universelle.

Charlemagne, styled "The Pious Augustus, crowned of God," was a wholesale butcher, who, in one day, cut the throats of 4,500 Saxons because they would not consent to be baptized.

Clovis, "The Eldest Son of the Church," assassinated his relatives and all the princes eligible to the throne, and removed by treachery and murder all the heads of the Frankish tribes, and soaked the soil of Gaul with the blood of the Arian proprietors.

Theodosius, called the Great, massacred seven thousand defenseless persons in the circus of Thesalonica.

Clotilda, wife of Clovis, and to whom he owed his conversion, caused, in her old age, two of her grandsons to be stabbed.

Pope Joan, a prostitute, the head of the Church, and vicar of Jesus Christ, gave birth to a child in the streets while at the head of a religious procession.

Pope Gregory the Great sanctified the most atrocious assassinations ever committed.

The pious Phocas assassinated his Emperor Maurice.

Pope John XII. was a drunkard, a profligate, and a murderer. He converted the papal palace into a brothel. He repeatedly raped widows, wives, and virgins while kneeling at his shrine, invoking his holy aid in the practice of religious purity and piety.

Pope Gregory VII. lived in open adultery with Countess Matilda.

Pope Innocent III. was one of the cruellest persecutors ever known. He caused hundreds of thousands of the virtuous Albigenses to be put to horrible deaths. He often used this expression: "Sword, whet thyself for vengeance." This might have been the sword which the lovely Jesus spoke of having brought into the world in place of peace.

Pope Alexander VI. was guilty of the most brutal and sensual conduct. He seduced his own daughter, and conspired with his son to poison four cardinals. Poisoning and gross licentiousness were his great delights. He was unquestionably one of the most licentious villains that ever lived.

Pope John XXII, a pirate in early life, was guilty of simony, rape, sodomy, illicit intercourse with his brother's wife, and of debauching three hundred nuns.

Pope Julius III. was a licentious brute. He committed sodomy with boys, men, and even cardinals.

In fact, many of the popes and cardinals kept boys for the express purpose of sodomy, and the cardinals often committed this vile offense among themselves. Monks, priests, and friars were notoriously guilty of this damnable crime.

The Christian Catherine de Medici, the notorious poisoner, with her mad son, Charles IX., caused the butchery of 66,000 people.

Duke Alva caused the death of 30,000 in the Netherlands because their faith was not of the grade he demanded.

Torquemada, the cruel monster, was at the head of the Inquisition, and caused the death of eight thousand people in Spain because they did not agree with him in their opinions.

Henry VIII. of England, "Defender of the Faith," burnt many men and women at the stake. He beheaded two of his six wives.

The pious "Bloody Mary" burnt three hundred persons for diverging a trifle from her standard of the true faith.

John Calvin, the great founder of Presbyterianism, was a tyrant and a murderer. He caused the death of two excellent men, Michael Servetus and James Gruet, for not entertaining the required belief about the Trinity.

St. Dominic was the founder of the "Holy Inquisition," the cruellest and most damnable organization ever instituted, and which Victor Hugo claims caused the death of 5,000,000 persons.

Peter D. Arbuss was Inquisitor-General of Arragon, and caused the most cruel deaths to great numbers of heretics.

Pope Gregory IX. sent out bloody, murdering persecutors against the Albigenses, caused the death of a great number of men, women and children.

Simon de Monfort was a monster in human form. He hung, gibbeted, butchered, slaughtered, and put to death in every cruel manner that pleased his fancy, thousands of hapless human beings whom he was pleased to regard as heretics; and this was kept up for years.

Pope Alexander III issued an edict against those who did not entertain the right faith, and caused the death of great numbers.

Pope Innocent VIII. directed his Nuncio to take up arms against the Waldenses and other heretics, and caused great slaughter among them. Blood was made to flow in rivers.

Munzer, disciple of Luther, was a reckless agitator. At the head of 40,000 men he ravaged the country, bringing destruction on many.

Claverhouse (Sir John Graham) was a marauding persecutor who at the head of a force of fanatics and murderers spread desolation over much of England and Scotland.

Oliver Cromwell ordered or permitted the massacre at Wexford, Ireland, of five thousand people, including three hundred people who had gathered around a cross pleading for mercy. He also deluged the streets of Drogheda with blood, and gave God the credit of doing it.

Cortez and Pizarro proved themselves cruel monsters in Mexico and South America. They put many to death for being heathens.

Guy Lusignan, first king of Jerusalem, was a murderer.

Louis XI. was a cruel tyrant, who confined his doubting subjects in iron cages, and put many to death.

Balhuaser Gerald, in a fit of religious zeal, committed murder.

Revallac assassinated Henry III. of France.

Guy Fawkes, in the interest of the Romish Church, attempted to kill the king and both houses of Parliament.

Jeffreys, the Christian judge, was the most infamous that ever sat on an English bench.

Pandolph, the Pope's legate to the Court of England, though under a vow of celibacy, was found in bed with a prostitute.

Archbishop Cranmer imported in a box a mistress from Germany, and she came near being suffocated by the box being left upside down.

Cardinal Woolsey was a lecherous man and died of syphilis.

Revs. Parris and Cotton Mather, in Salem, Mass., persecuted many poor wretches to death upon the ground that they were influenced by witches. Parris stood calmly by while weights were piled upon an old man eighty years of age until his tongue protruded from his mouth, when Parris tried to poke it in again with his cane. The old man died in agony.

Father Achille was denounced in England by Cardinal Manning for the lowest licentiousness and filth. The father denied it most positively, whereupon Manning sent to Italy and procured witnesses who proved such an amount of lewdness, licentiousness, and vulgarity, as were before seldom proved against a man. The pious man ultimately confessed all, but justified himself by claiming that he committed the vile offenses when he belonged to the Roman Church, where such crimes were the common practice with the clergy.

Bishop Armagh, Protestant, of West Ireland, was guilty of long continued sodomy with his coachman. Upon discovery both were compelled to flee the country.

Bishop Onderdonk, of the Episcopal Church in this city, was deposed for being culpably guilty of lecherous conduct with many females, some of whom were wives of clergymen, in his library, and notoriously with his servant girls in all parts of his premises.

Bishop Onderdonk, of Pennsylvania, brother to the above, was convicted of similar conduct, and retired in disgrace.

Rev. L. M. P. Thompson, of the Second Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati, regarded as the most able clergyman in the city, was guilty of whoring and promiscuous intercourse with many females. He was expelled from the ministry, and after confession he united with the Synod at Buffalo, and was allotted to a charge in Jamestown, but soon fell into the same carnal practices, and was again expelled from the Church. He is now traveling in Europe and acting as correspondent for a religious weekly.

Rev. T. Turner, D.D., President of the English Wesleyan Conference, about 1850, was convicted of the seduction of several servant girls. He left England in disgrace, and next appeared in Australia.

Rev. Ephraim K. Avery, of the Methodist Church, seduced a young girl and then murdered her. During the long, searching trial the church swore him through and did all they possibly could to screen him and keep him from the hands of justice.

Rev. T. Marson, of the Methodist Book Concern, 1840, was guilty of seduction and disgraced.

John Newland Maffit, Methodist, a great revivalist, was widely known in the Western States thirty and forty years ago. He talked and sung sweetly for Jesus, and pictured hell in its most vivid colors, and gave the devil his very blackest garb. His greatest love was for the dear sisters. In revival times it was a common thing for him to put his hand in their bosoms to see if they had the Holy Ghost, and to go home with some kind sister and stay all night. He committed adultery with the dears many scores of times and in various parts of the country. The lovely creatures deemed it a privilege to do for Bro. Maffit anything he wanted. I have received many authentic statements of his antics with the sisters. A near and excellent friend of mine, Oscar Roberts, saw Maffit on one occasion, in the private bed-room of one of the leading sisters of the church at two o'clock in the morning. A bright fire in the vicinity brought them to the window, and they exposed themselves before they thought. This was during a big revival, and the next night he plead for Jesus as earnestly as ever, and there was a great inflowing of the spirit.

Rev. E. W. Schon, a great light of the Methodist Church in the West, long a presiding elder, and afterwards at the head of an educational establishment, had adulterous intercourse with a prostitute late one evening in his own church in Louisville, Ky. He was a very amorous man, and went it "on the sly" with many of the good sisters. Many charges of this kind were brought against him.

Rev. McCraig, El Paso, Ill., was guilty of crim con with a lady of the place and had to leave.

A clergyman of Detroit forsook his wife and went away with another woman. He resumed preaching in the far West and wrote back that he "hoped to meet his friends in heaven."

Rev. Mr. Wesley, Geneseo, Ill., ran away with another man's wife.

Rev. E. P. W. Packard caused his wife to be confined in an insane asylum because she would not believe that a portion of the human race were destined to burn in hell forever.

A Catholic priest of Evansville, Ind., was proved guilty of gross improprieties and immoralities with the young girls under his charge.

A clergyman of England not long ago was convicted of forgery and other criminal conduct.

Rev. Mr. Torrey, of the Conference of Western New York, was tried and convicted of holding assignments in his church. After prayer-meetings a select few of the sisters would remain, the lights would be extinguished and several hours, and sometimes the whole night, would be spent in sexual pleasure. A discovery was, however, made and the interesting game closed. He was removed to another field of labor.

Rev. Henry Brown, Methodist, seduced a girl in Texas under promise of marriage.

Rev. A. Q., D.D., now preaching in a prominent town in Massachusetts, officiated for a few weeks in Plymouth pulpit in 1875, for Henry Ward Beecher. During his stay he was known to have adulterous intimacy with two fancy women on Fourth avenue in this city. He sometimes had them both in bed at the same time. Proofs of this can be produced if called for.

A well known D.D. and LL.D., for many years President and Dean of one of the leading theological colleges of New England, was in the habit of committing sodomy with certain students under his charge. He seduced for this purpose a pleasing young man, and the abominable practice was continued with him for sixteen years, and after the young man also became a D.D. professor in the same college. This unnatural intercourse practically unsexed the younger man and depraved his tastes. He married, but from consequent deficient virility growing out of the vile habit alluded to, his wife was dissatisfied and committed adultery with several of the professors of the college. This horrible case can be fully attested by a learned physician of this city, who gave the younger man surgical and medical treatment for the physical injuries he had sustained in that monstrous, criminal course of life.

Rev. Maxwell P. Gaddis, an eloquent Methodist preacher of Cincinnati, a loud temperance lecturer and United States revenue collector under A. Johnson, was guilty of looseness, whoring and drunkenness. His wife was also a loose character, and had sexual connection with numbers of men. A pretty pair of pious cases, indeed.

Rev. S. C., D.D., of this city, was a well known whoreist for more than twenty years.

There is now preaching in Brooklyn a distinguished D.D. who, a friend of mine cured of gonorrhoea. The same medical friend has treated numerous elders, deacons, class-leaders, church stewards and church members in almost countless numbers for private diseases. Among this class he has known many mere moral wretches whose history was too low and filthy to relate in the public press. Names can be given if insisted upon.

Rev. Mr. Allen, of Cincinnati, in 1865 and 1866 was convicted of intemperance and whoring.

Rev. J. S. Bartlett, Milford, Ohio, was guilty of criminal intimacy with a pretty married woman of that town, who had no children.

Rev. Mr. Linn, of Pittsburgh, was guilty of several improprieties with the ladies of his congregation.

Rev. Miriam D. Wood, of Deateur, seduced Miss Emma J. Chivers. Result, a bouncing boy without a legal father.

Rev. J. M. Mitchell, of Savannah, Ga., and formerly from Maine, was guilty of improprieties with females of his fold. When charged with the offences, he stoutly denied it, and asserted his innocence; but when proofs accumulated and stared him in the face, he was compelled to confess to Bishop Beckwith, that he was not only guilty of the offences as charged, but that he had used the grossest falsehood in endeavoring to conceal his crimes.

The embroglio between Rev. Dr. Langdon and Rev. Mr. Goodenough, and several other Reverends of the Methodist Book Concern of this city, is well remembered, when charges of dishonesty, embezzlement, falsehood, etc., etc., were freely made against each other.

Rev. Mr. Lindsley, of Medina, N. Y., whipped a little child of his, three years old, for two hours and until it died. The excuse alleged by the reverend "man of God" was, that the child would not obey its step-mother and say its prayers. He was imprisoned at Albion, and came near being lynched by an infuriated populace.

A Methodist minister in Cheltenham, Pa., was boarding with the wife of one of the deacons of his church. The deacon had a blooming daughter of fifteen summers, with whom the parson became so much enamored that his passions were greatly aroused. The mother of the young girl was justly shocked on a certain occasion to find the clerical gentleman in bed with her daughter. The pastor endeavored to explain the unfortunate occurrence to the satisfaction of the parent, by claiming that he must have got into the child's bed when asleep, but the story was not credited by the parents, and he was given twenty-four hours to leave the neighborhood.

Rev. Dick Bottles, of Meridan, Mass., was arrested for stealing ham; but as he is a son of Ham, possibly he thought he had a right to it.

Rev. Charles A. Graber, pastor of the Lutheran church in Meriden, Conn., was accused of Beecher-like immorality, and of improper connection with the sisters. Like Beecher he denied it, but would not stand an examination, saying he preferred to resign his charge.

Rev. Mr. Wilcox held a revival of several days' duration, several years ago in Northern Illinois. He was loud and earnest in his appeals for "dying sinners to come to Jesus;" but in due process of time it was found that during that religious revival the Rev. Mr. Wilcox had become the father of four illegitimate children.

Rev. Mr. Dowling, Indianapolis, Ind., prominent among the Campbellites, committed adultery with his servant girl, and was seen in the act by persons from a higher window in a neighboring house.

Abbe Joseph Chabert, a prominent Catholic ecclesiastic of Montreal, and Principal of the Government School of Art and Design, was on Sept. 25th, 1875, arrested on a charge of rape, committed on Josephine Beauchamp, a girl of fifteen years, and in his own room. Probably his saintship had indulged too much in celibacy, until the flesh rebelled against the spirit.

Rev. John A. Hudkins, of Mount Airy, Ohio, was a bigamist, or rather a trigamist, having three wives at a time. He eluded justice by escaping to Canada.

A Baptist clergyman of North Carolina was imprisoned for bastardy. The fine assessed against him was paid by members of his church, and when he was released from confinement the sisters of his congregation met him at the prison door and received him with open arms.

Rev. W. H. Johnson, of Rahway, N. J., was convicted for stealing chickens, and was sentenced to prison for the offense.

Rev. Luke Mills, of the Methodist church, Norwich, Ct., decamped with a considerable sum of money which had been collected for building a new church. He was also said to be guilty of irregularities with a female member of his congregation.

A well known Episcopal clergyman of Covington, Ky., has several times partaken too freely of intoxicating liquors, so as to plainly show the effect it had upon him. On Christmas day of 1874 he preached a sermon in St. John's fashionable church in Cincinnati, and he was so fuddled with egg-nog and communion wine, his preaching was so strange and his language so incoherent that his condition was made known to all present. His mumbling became so senseless that the wardens made signals to the congregation, and in shame and disgrace they left the church and the drunken pastor to talk to empty benches.

Rev. Mr. Warren, of Busset Hills, N. Y., resigned his charge at the special request of his congregation, because he was the husband of three living and undivorced wives. He asked to preach a farewell sermon, but they would not consent to it. It was only leniency on their part that prevented them from prosecuting him for bigamy and sending him to State prison.

Rev. Mr. Deardoff, of Yates City, Ill., held a protracted meeting at that place, some time ago, and was one night invited by one of the sisters to go home with her and stay over night. Upon arriving there he began improper familiarities, and she not feeling in the humor for the like, and tearing herself away from his embrace, rushed to one of the neighbors for safety. It is needless to say the protracted meeting came to a sudden termination, and the reverend gent proceeded to another field where the sisters were more accommodating.

Rev. Mr. Curtiss not long since conducted a revival meeting at Plano, Ill., and lived on "chicken fixings" and the best the pious sisters knew how to get up for him. Clerical business called him to the village of Blackberry, where he put up at a hotel and staid over night. When he retired he was either so absorbed in the spirit, or in the flesh, that he accidentally got into bed with a woman not his wife. When discovered in the interesting situation by some over-curious individuals, he claimed that the little affair was entirely an accident. It is singular how many of these little accidents do take place.

Rev. Dr. Fiske, upon a trial for adultery in Michigan, unlike many of his brothers of the cloth, honestly owned up as follows: "I frankly confess to the fearful sin which I am charged with, and I will not be a coward to lie or seek palliation of my weakness and guilt. I have returned my letter of fellowship to the denomination I have so grievously stricken, and have abandoned the profession I have so deplorably shamed. I am not a coward or sneak to make Adam's plea, that a woman did it. It was my own weak and unguarded soul that in a moment of frenzy and passion wrought my downfall!" This man was much more honorable and honest than a majority of his brothers who are tried for similar offenses, and insist "through thick and thin," in the face of positive proof, that they are perfectly innocent.

Rev. L. D. Huston, the clerical villain of Baltimore, was guilty of seducing and ruining several young, innocent girls, daughters of widows and other members of his congregation, who were sent to him for moral instruction. The fiendish ingenuity he employed in accomplishing his vile purposes was enough to strike one with horror.

Rev. A. T. Thompson, Methodist, Cincinnati, O., was guilty of numerous criminal intimacies with married and unmarried females of his congregation, and also of gross intemperance. His conduct was of the most scandalous character.

Rev. E. F. Berkley, of St. Louis, was guilty of criminal intimacy with the "gentle ewe-lambs of the fold." Among them was Ella C. Perry of the immature age of 11 years.

Rev. Washington W. Welch, near Holly, Mich., committed a rape on Mrs. Louisa Green, the wife of a brother minister.

Rev. Geo. Washburn, of the Lewiston and Bradford circuit, Alleghany Co., N. Y., was engaged in courting several young ladies at the same time, and was under promise of marriage to two or more of them.

Rev. Dr. Griswold, of Maine, of South Carolina, and of other localities, was a noted "ladies' man." His love adventures were numerous and spicy. He was also very fond of jovial and convivial company. He committed bigamy, having two wives at one time.

Rev. Wm. Holt, near Paris, Ill., whipped a widow woman with plow-lines.

Rev. Thurlow Tresselman, in Annetia, N. Y., seduced several young ladies of his flock, and when unmistakable indications became so apparent that he was charged with the matter and about to be tried, he left the place very early one morning with the gay Mrs. Hurst, the wife of a gentleman who was absent from home.

Rev. E. G. Ribble, of DeKalb Co., Ill., seduced four young girls of the neighborhood, and ran away, leaving his wife and two children unprovided for.

Rev. B. Phinney, of Westboro, Mass., was guilty of licentiousness with various females connected with his church.

Rev. Mr. Reed, of Malden, was in the same category.

Rev. I. S. Kalloch, of Kansas, while a resident of Massachusetts, visited a neighboring village with a woman not his wife, and hiring a room in a hotel for a short time, committed adultery with her then and there, as testified to by an eye-witness. Mr. Kalloch, after this little affair, removed to Kansas, and for several years wallowed in the mire of politics; but not succeeding just to his mind in obtaining offices, he for the second time turned his attention to ministerial duties and pleasures. But sad to say, the lovely sisters once more proved too charming for him, and he wandered in by and forbidden paths. He was hauled up before the church authorities for his peccadilloes, and finally stepped down and out for a season; but he is said to be now once more imparting to his admiring hearers the will and requirements of God.

Rev. Dr. Pomeroy, Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, was proved to be a liberal patron of houses of ill-fame, where he freely used the money his confiding flock had donated for the conversion of foreign heathen. By his own confession, he had paid more than six thousand dollars to women of notorious character in that city.

Rev. Tunis Titus Kendrick, of Brooklyn, was proven guilty of drunkenness and other immoral conduct. He struggled for a long time to regain admission into the church from which he was expelled, but did not succeed.

Rev. R. H. Williamson, Wilkesbarre, Pa., (pastor of the St. Stephen's Episcopal Church) was guilty of visiting houses of ill-fame, and of other immoral conduct.

Rev. Mr. Smith, of Illinois, a few years ago drowned his wife in a shallow stream by holding her head under water.

Rev. Father John Daly, Catholic, Montgomery, Mo., seduced a young girl nineteen years of age, named Lizzie McDonnell, whose mother had been housekeeper for the priest for a long time. After getting her in a condition to soon become a mother he procured an abortion for her. The congregation were much excited in consequence, while a portion of the church authorities did all they could to smother the reports.

Rev. Archibald Hines, Knoxville, Tenn., was charged with stealing fifty cents from a bowl in the cupboard of one of his parishioners, and it made a great excitement among the saints.

Rev. T. M. Dawson, Brooklyn, Cal., left that locality and went to Nevada, leaving a number of his brethren, in the aggregate several thousands of dollars, in arrears, he having invested for them in mining stocks. He was also, not long ago, divorced from his wife on the ground of desertion.

Rev. George O. Eddy was deposed for bigamy at Gloversville, N. Y.

Rev. Mr. Edgerton, same place, was afterwards charged with theft. He boarded at the Mansion House, and a servant found a quantity of stolen towels, napkins, etc., in a satchel in his room. He was arrested and he left his watch in payment for his board bill.

Rev. L. T. Hardy, a Baptist elder in Shelbyville, Ky., had a fall from decency. He eloped with one of the sisters of his congregation, and her brother pursued the pair in hot haste.

Rev. Benjamin F. Bowen, Cold Spring, N. Y., was tried for malicious trespass.

Rev. J. A. Davidson, recent State lecturer for the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Pennsylvania, was arrested at Erie for drunkenness and disorderly conduct and had a fine to pay. He is said to have organized more lodges than any other person in the State.

Rev. J. M. Porter, Bethlehem, N. J., was deposed from the ministry and Christian fellowship by an ecclesiastical council for gross immorality in connection with the sisters of the church.

Elder Sands, of the Baptist church in Hoosick, N. Y., formerly an insurance agent in this city, was charged with "naughty" conduct with a ewe-lamb of his flock. He paid frequent visits to her, and one day her brother surprised them in very suspicious relations together. An investigating committee was appointed to enquire into the case. The girl was entirely mum and had no communication to make on the subject. The elder confessed to having his hands under the young lady's clothes but further than that deposed not. The affair, however, was smoothed over and hushed up, and the gay Lothario still breaks the bread of life to the faithful.

Rev. G. W. Porter, Methodist, recently had a trial at Danbyborough, Vt., for adultery with Miss Hattie Allen. The young lady was on the witness stand nine hours and made a clean-breast of the affair, making the preacher's guilt most apparent to all present.

Rev. John W. Hanna, Presiding Elder, and the most prominent Methodist preacher in the State of Tennessee, and one of the ablest lights in the Episcopal Church South, had recently in Murphysboro, Tenn., a trial before a church investigating committee, consisting of Bishop McTearie and five prominent clergymen, for gross immorality in writing a lascivious letter to Miss Parilla Nailor for trying to seduce her from the path of virtue and to yield herself to his lustful embrace. In his amorous suit he directed the attention of the young lady to the seventh chapter of Solomon's Songs, hoping the sensuous character of that portion of "God's Word" would aid him in his unholy enterprise. Fortunately the young lady's brother intercepted the base letter and detected the hoary, clerical lecher. Upon exposure he became very penitent and acknowledged in great sorrow his criminal folly. The love of Jesus in his case was altogether insufficient to keep him pure and upright.

Rev. John S. Glendenning, of Jersey City, N. J., it will be remembered had a long trial for the seduction of Mary

E. Pomeroy, who deposed with her dying breath that he was the father of her child, and that he had seduced her. Although the clergyman boldly and persistently asserted his innocence, the public were satisfied that he was a basely guilty man. He subsequently removed to Henry county, Illinois, and preached to the faithful there.

Rev. W. H. Butler, pastor of St. Luke's church, (Lutheran) of New York, was arraigned before the church authorities for deceiving a young lady under promise of marriage. He was requested to resign his charge and he had the good sense to do so.

Rev. Austin Hutchinson, of Vermont, was charged by his own daughter, Ida, with being the father of her babe five months old, she asserting the fact with great persistency.

Rev. L. L. Copeland, of Vermont, and a revivalist of some note, was denounced as a rascal. The credentials upon which he entered the ministry, even, were pronounced forgeries, and he was accused of being a swindler and a bigamist.

Rev. J. H. Todd, of Sioux City, Iowa, played an unmanly trick upon his wife. While she was mending his pants he slipped out of the house and eloped with a milliner.

Rev. A. B. Burdick, of River Point, R. I., was guilty of improprieties of a social character with female lambs of his flock. Eight witnesses testified pointedly against him, his guilt was unmistakably established, and he was compelled to "step down and out."

Rev. K. N. Wright and Rev. Mr. Kristeller, both contested for the same pulpit at Newbridge, N. Y. The first had preached there a year, and was opposed to leaving. The second was appointed by the Conference to succeed him. The first refused to vacate; hence the quarrel. The Church divided as to the two claimants, some joining one side, and some the other. The quarrel waxed very warm until the saints shook their fists at each other in a very ungodly manner.

Rev. A. W. Torrey, Kalamazoo, Mich., was tried by the Church for falsehood, and found guilty.

Rev. Mr. Coleman, of the M. E. Church, in E. Janesville Circuit, Iowa, was held in $5,000 bonds for committing a rape on a girl thirteen years old.

Rev. Mr. Parshall, Oakland, Cal., was not long ago tried by a church council for lascivious conduct with sisters of the congregation. He was convicted and left town.

Rev. A. W. Eastman, West Cornwall, O., was expelled from the Baptist Church for immorality.

Another Baptist clergyman at Sabin, Mich., was detected in too much familiarity with some of the sisters, and ran away to avoid the shame of exposure.

Rev. John Hutchinson, Episcopal, Boston, was sent to the House of Correction for eight months, for swindling George Allen out of a thousand dollars.

Rev. Wm. Rice, Methodist, Mason, Mich., was convicted of adultery.

A pious reverend in Warren, McComb Co., Mich., was charged with violating a dozen school girls and swearing them to secrecy on the crucifix of the church. He ran away to escape exposure.

Rev. D. M. White, Presbyterian, Pittsburg, Pa., was sent to State prison for two years for stealing money.

Rev. D. S. K. Rine, same place, was charged by a young woman with sexual irregularities.

Rev. Dr. Wm. G. Murray, rector of the Central Church, Baltimore, got drunk and was extremely profane.

Rev. A. Steelson plead guilty to the charge of too much intimacy with the sisters.

Rev. James. Reedsdolph, Methodist, Adrian, Mich., was sent to the Detroit House of Correction for sixty days, for false pretenses and getting drunk.

Rev. Mr. Reynolds, Muhlenburg Co., Ky., brutally and repeatedly whipped his daughter, eighteen years of age, to force her to marry a man she did not love.

Rev. Hiram Meeker, Granville, N. Y., was convicted of fornication and adultery.

Rev. H. Foster, Circleville, O., was compelled to marry his servant girl whom he had seduced.

Rev. John Seeley Watson, Kansas, murdered his wife.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, Williamson Co., Tenn., seduced a girl fourteen years of age.

Rev. E. S. Whipple, Baptist, of Hillsdale College, Mich., seduced a deacon's wife, and when charged with the crime was compelled to confess it. He afterwards prayed with the deacon and his wife. The deacon must have enjoyed that.

Rev. Richard Dunlap, Baptist, Midland, Mich., was convicted of adultery with a Mrs. Burnett.

Rev. Mr. Davis, same denomination, was arraigned for adultery with sister Brunk.

Rev. Mr. Kirby, Chambersburg, O., was fined $200 for seduction.

Rev. Malcolm Clark, superintendent of the Sunday-school, Howard, Mich., ran away with $400 belonging to his mother-in-law, and also forged her name to obtain other money.

Rev. Mr. White, Washington, Pa., was found guilty of seduction.

Rev. J. H. Rose, Baptist, Hartford, Mich., was guilty of forgery.

Rev. Jay H. Fairchild, leading Congregational clergyman of Boston, after honorable service in the pulpit many years, was guilty of intercourse with the sisters. Left Boston, went to Exeter, was tried for seduction. Confessed that he had bound the young girl by a solemn oath not to divulge that she ever knew him. He attempted to preach again in Boston but was not successful; was charged by the public press with the crime; brought suit for libel, and upon full examination of the case was defeated.

Rev. Dr. Fay, a very eminent divine of Boston for over twenty-five years, had been esteemed and beloved by his Church; committed fornication and adultery; was charged with it; denied it and swore that he was innocent. A Church Committee examined the case, were disposed to clear him; were about to report him innocent when one of them, Dr. Hooper, said he could not sign the report, and proposed to adjourn for a fuller examination. When Dr. Fay heard this he begged them not to adjourn; said he had a communication to present, when he confessed his crime in full.

Rev. Mr. Strasburg, First Presbyterian Church at Albany, large congregation of influential citizens, and those connected with State government, an able, eloquent, and popular preacher. Accused of debauchery, herding with negroes, and of the lowest and dirtiest conduct. Was put on trial, found guilty and deposed. Thus was prematurely hushed a voice eloquent for Jesus.

Rev. Mr. Southard, son of Senator Southard from New Jersey. Was founder of the Calvary Episcopal Church in this city. Accused of gross immoralities. The church tried to shield him, but his character was deemed so base that he could not continue preaching here; went to Newark and founded the "Home of Prayer; was kicked out, and went South, dividing his time while there between the pulpit and low dens of prostitution in southern cities. He died drunk in a low brothel in New Orleans.

Rev. Augustus Doolittle (or St. Clair, as he sometimes called himself), preached at Hoosic Falls, and was accused of unlawful intimacy with a wife of one of the deacons of his church. Was first charged with the guilt by a single person, who was beset and persecuted. Additional proofs came to light, and after several months the seductive saint confessed in full that the crime had been committed by him on numerous occasions for several.

Prof. Webster, a pious Christian, connected with the leading universities of Boston, murdered Dr. Parkman, etc. Denied his crime most persistently, but the jury had sufficient proofs to find him guilty, and he was duly executed.

The Rev. Dr. Reed, Congregational, Malden, Mass., was guilty of most heinous crimes with youths of both sexes, and children even. Was proved guilty of most disgusting and revolting crimes.

Rev. Charles Rich, from Boston, was settled over a most respectable church in Washington, the one in which Dr. Sunderland preached for several years afterwards. He was convicted of immoralities and indecencies unfit to be named, and died in disgrace.

Rev. Mr. Thompson, Presbyterian, preached in Buffalo, and afterwards in Arch street, Philadelphia, was over and over again charged with adultery. Was tried several times, but managed through the sharp practice of friends to escape.

Rev. Mr. Pomeroy, Congregational, preached in a fashionable church in Bangor, Me. Was Secretary of American Board, a position of high honor and trust. Was followed to houses of ill-fame in Boston, in this city and in cities of the West. Denied that he was guilty of any impropriety, but claimed that he visited those places to reform the sinful inmates. He was charged, tried, condemned and deposed.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, of the Evangelist, a very pious man, a loud advocate of temperance, was several times seen in the third tier of the theater drinking with low prostitutes and acting disgracefully. He was tried and deposed in disgrace.

Rev. Dr. Magoon, at this time President of Jones College, a Congregational institution. He was guilty of very licentious conduct with females of his congregation. Was tried, convicted and deposed. But after confessing and humbling himself was taken back into fellowship and set to preaching again.

Rev. Horace C. Taylor, one of the chiefs of the church at Oberlin, O., was guilty of seduction, was tried, convicted and imprisoned. Was afterwards restored to the ministry, but he fell again and was more sinful than before.

Rev. Richard Fink, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was in 1874 found guilty of adultery with a young sister of his church. He was eloquent, popular and highly esteemed. The case was so plain against him that he readily resigned.

Rev. Joseph Stillim, Winchester, Pa., was charged with ruining a young lady, Miss Sarah Hall, who stood high in the society of that locality. The great disgrace rendered her insane, but in her lucid moments she averred that the reverend gentleman quoted scripture to her to prove that his conduct was in keeping with the word of God. She unfortunately trusted too much in a false shepherd.

Father Forham, of the Catholic church, Chicago, was charged with and tried for embezzling several thousand dollars that belonged to the church. He claimed that a part of the money was won by gambling in a church fair, that there was no legal owner of it, and that he had as much right to it as any one. He was held in $5,000 bail.

Rev. Alfred N. Gilbert, of Baltimore, had charges preferred against him by members of his own church for sinful intimacies with a grass widow also belonging to his congregation. The widow was induced to leave, and the matter was piously hushed up, and the pastor's preaching and praying were resumed.

Rev. John Hobert, Methodist, Malden, Mass., was early in 1875 arraigned before the district Court to answer a complaint made by Mrs. Anna L. Lundleery, who charged him with being the father of her unborn babe. He was nearly sixty years of age, and was originally from Vermont. He graduated as a minister at Middleton, Conn. He preached a few years at Fall River, Mass., and was also chaplain in the army. It was charged upon him that, after getting this woman in the bad situation alluded to, he induced a simple man by the name of Lundleery to marry her; but his crime was not thereby concealed.

Rev. Mr. Humpstone, Malta, N. Y., in consequence of a church difficulty, tendered his resignation in April, 1875. On the following Sunday it was arranged that the Rev. Mr. Cook should officiate in his place; but as he did not appear, it was suggested by a member that brother Humpstone read the services. Dr. Bellinger opposed the proposition and rebuked the brother for making it. When brother Humpstone arose to speak, Dr. Bellinger ordered him to sit down. The ex-pastor would not be thus suppressed. The contending parties then clinched, and a disgraceful fight ensued.

Rev. J. K. Stillwell, of Logansport, Ind., was brought before the Church for making improper advances to the sisters of his flock. A clear case was made against him, and without adding falsehood and perjury to his other crimes, he had the discretion to confess his offenses, resign his charge, and leave the place. The local papers regretted the circumstance, more especially as it came in the midst of a successful revival, which was sensibly checked by the publicity of the clerical scandal.

Rev. Thomas Barnard, of London, recently got disgracefully drunk, and in that condition went to the Globe Theatre, where Lydia Thompson was engaged. That evening a new piece was put upon the stage, in which Mrs. Thompson did not appear. This so enraged the drunken parson that he stamped, shouted and hissed to such an extent that a policeman arrested him and took him to prison.

Rev. J. J. Reeder, a young clergyman, went in 1874 to New Milford, Pa., and studied for a time under the Rev. E. F. Bledsoe, pastor of the Methodist church in that village. Subsequently he was sent to Newark, N. J., Conference to fill a vacancy at that place. The young divine proved to be popular, especially with the younger sisters of the society, with whom he spent the most of his time. He afterwards manifested a great fondness for horse-flesh. He traded in fast horses, and soon obtained the reputation of being a good judge of equine stock. He finally purchased a valuable horse, for which he gave his note; but just before it became due he suddenly decamped for parts unknown, leaving many unpaid bills behind. In his hasty flight he left his trunks and books, which were sold to pay his debts; but unfortunately they went but a short way towards paying them. It is not known in what part of the moral vineyard he is now laboring.

Rev. Charles S. Macready, of Middleboro, Mass., on May 20, 1875, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

Rev. J. J. Howell, Presbyterian, Minneapolis, Minn., hung himself in May, 1875.

Rev. Samuel B. Wilson, of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., was in May, 1875, deposed by the Presbytery for immoral conduct.

Rev. John W. Porter, in the Winter and Spring of 1875, had a charge at Van Sycles Corners, Huntington Co., N. J. In addition to preaching, he also taught school. It turned out that the villain basely seduced one of his young female pupils named Silenda Stires, daughter of Peter W. Stires, a well-to-do farmer in the neighborhood. While she was yet a mere child, she was about to become a mother. Upon being questioned, she informed her parents of the nature of the lessons the clergyman had taught her. When confronted by the injured father, the villain confessed the crime, and turned over his horse and buggy to partly make amends for his shameful conduct, and with his heart-broken wife, took the first train for another field of labor.

The case of Henry Ward Beecher is fresh in the minds of all; of his various liaisons with the females of his flock, particularly with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton. His protracted trial of six months for the crime of adultery; the amount of damaging testimony that was arrayed against him, his confession, etc., are not forgotten. Probably twenty-five millions of the people of America believe him guilty not only of the offense charged against him, but also of the most barefaced perjury, when for thirteen consecutive days he swore positively that he had not done it. He still fills the pulpit as a spotless shepherd, to lead the little lambs to the arms of Jesus.

Lucius M. Pond, of Worcester, Mass., a zealous leader in the Methodist Church, and very active in all religious movements, committed forgeries to the amount of $100,000, and borrowed and purloined all he could obtain, after which he suddenly left and had it given out that he had been murdered for his money. He intended to have gone to Australia, but was arrested in San Francisco and was brought back, convicted and punished.

Rev. Aug. C. Stange, Presbyterian, of Patterson, N. J., was guilty of gross improprieties with Sister Pfennibaker in the church. He was tried and acknowledged his guilt. The sister, however, accused the clergyman of forcing her contrary to her wishes.

Rev. John James Thompson, of Orange Co., N. Y., was arraigned for making a criminal attack upon a young female member of his church. The plea made in his defense was insanity. There has been too much of that kind of insanity about.

Rev. Ambleman Wright, of Whitestown, N. Y., by presents of money, coaxing, etc., induced a little girl of twelve years to yield her body to his lusts. He was a man with a wife and married daughters.

Rev. Fred. A. Bell, of Brooklyn, was charged with making improper advances to Mrs. Mary Morris, a member of his church.

L. K. Strauss, superintendent of the Sunday-school in Huntington Co., Pa., and deemed a very exemplary Christian, seduced one of the teachers, Miss West. The criminal practices were continued a long time until the young lady became stricken with remorse and confessed. He was tried and fined $4,500.

Rev. E. D. Winslow, of Boston, swindled confiding banks and financiers out of $500,000 and left suddenly and has not yet returned.

Rev. J. J. Kane was sued by his wife for a divorce on account of inhuman treatment.

Elder Doolittle was tried in the Juneau county, Wis., Circuit Court on a charge of incest and adultery. The testimony was conclusive, he was found guilty and was sentenced to six years' imprisonment in the State prison at Waupun. He was over sixty-three years old, and one of his victims was a simple-minded girl, his own niece.

Rev. F. W. May, presiding elder of the Methodist church, Chesaning, Mich., was guilty of grossly immoral practices with several of the sisters. A number of them testified against him.

Rev. Henry A. Heath, Methodist, formerly of Maine and later of Morrison, Ill., was a lecherous old hypocrite. He left his wife in Maine and committed adultery with numerous females, both pious and not pious. His crimes were many and black.

Rev. Joseph M. Berry was tried by his church in Asheville, N. C., for drunkenness and adultery, and was found guilty.

Rev. Jonathan Turner, Methodist, Fourth street, Philadelphia, was arraigned for embezzling from Mr. Myers and was held in $1,000 bail.

Rev. F. F. Rea, of Durham, Conn., was expelled from the Congregational church for drunkenness.

Rev. Seth B. Coats, of Dallas City, Ill., was tried for improper conduct with the females of his congregation, both single and married. The testimony was explicit and unfit for publication.

Rev. Mr. Parker, Presbyterian, Ashland, Ky., eloped with a young girl, daughter of a deacon of the church, and left a wife and several children.

Rev. Francis E. Buffum, Congregationalist, was tried at Hartford, Conn., for holding criminal intercourse with Miss Cora Lord, who lived in his family. He procured an abortion upon the young woman. His wife left him and sued for a divorce.

Rev. Mr. Kendrick seduced a little girl, the organist of his church, and but thirteen years of age. He did it with cheap jewelry and a twenty-five cent penknife.

Thomas W. Piper, sexton of a Boston church, ravished a child five years old, named Mabel Young, and murdered her in the belfry of the church.

Rev. E. S. Fitz, Southampton, Mass., was tried for very improper conduct with the sisters. The evidence was of the most spicy character and rather unfit for publication. The brethren and sisters did all they could to screen him, but his guilt was too apparent.

Rev. G. M. Davis was caught by his wife in a very improper connection with another lady, and this in the church. Much excitement in consequence.

Rev. D. Ellington Burr, of Ellardsville, Mo., was tried and suspended for three years for using intoxicating liquors, and being criminally intimate with women.

Rev. J. B. Patterson, Presbyterian, Elizabeth, N. J., upon an examination being instituted, confessed to being guilty of drunkenness and immoral conduct with the sisters. He was very contrite.

Rev. James Regan, Methodist, Madison, Ind., was deposed for improper intercourse with Mrs. McHenry, a beautiful widow. The crime was committed on board a steamboat on the Ohio River.

Rev. C. D. Lathrop was expelled by the First Congregational Church of Amherst, Mass., for cruelty to his family, and other unchristian conduct.

Rev. Arthur Watson, Protestant, Killowen near Kinman, over fifty years of age, killed his wife by discharging a shot gun at her.

Rev. E. P. Stenson, of Castleton, N. Y., was found intoxicated in the streets of this city and was arrested by officer Ryckman. The Judge in kindness let him off.

Rev. Thomas B. Bott, of one of the Baptist churches in Philadelphia, has had many charges preferred against him for lascivious conduct with various females. The last one was Miss Louisa Younger, daughter of one of the deacons in his church. It was proved that he visited her at unreasonable hours, that they passed several days together at a place of Summer resort; they went in bathing together, and he was seen in a nearly naked state in her private room. She was seen sitting in his lap, and they were kissing each other, etc. He has a wife and family, and the latest news in reference to him is that his wife has brought suit against him for neglect and desertion.

Thus, Brother Humphrey, I have given you quite an installment of the crimes and shortcomings of that class of our fellow-citizens who would have it understood that they are nearer to God than the masses of the people, that they are favored with an extra amount of aid from on high, and have more influence at the Throne of Grace than the average of mankind. I assure you though I have gone into the subject at some length, that it is by no means exhausted. I can furnish you with a good deal more of the same kind should you wish it.

I have simply mentioned the names of several of the characters and their crimes, without giving a moiety, even, of the damnable practices of which they were guilty. I have now in course of preparation a work, which will be out in a few months, entitled "THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH; or, Biographical Sketches of Eminent Christians." It will be an octavo of one thousand pages, and will contain a history of much that has been done by the characters above named, and by many others, in the name of Christianity. Such as wish to inform themselves of many of the facts in the rise and progress of Christianity, its crimes and excesses, its persecutions and executions, its wars and massacres, its licentiousness and immoralities, will find in the "Champions of the Church" the information they seek.

I may mention in connection with the clergy of America, that more of them have been hung in the last twenty-five years than of Infidels. More of them are in our States prison for capital offenses. As compared with actors, who are often denounced as a wicked class, according to statistics carefully compiled, clergymen have committed more murders than actors in the proportion of twenty to one, and they exceed actors in about the same proportion in seductions and adulteries.

If the charges you made against Infidels (if true) prove them to be bad men and in error, does not the array of facts that I have presented against the American clergy incontestably prove them not only weak and bad men, but utterly unworthy to be looked upon as guides and leaders to the young and inexperienced?

It must be borne in mind that the cases of clerical criminality here noted are but a small part of the cases that actually occur. But few of those that have been made public are named here, and not one case in fifty is suffered to come to light. "For the good of the cause" every instance of this kind is smothered and covered up that can be, and it is only here and there a case comes to the ear of the public. But those that are known, are enough to appall the stoutest hearts and strike conviction deep into the thinking men and women of the country, that they are supporting a fallible and useless class of privileged characters that would be doing far better were they engaged in some honest and useful calling, producing something or manufacturing something that would be of value to the human race.

The fact is, the priesthood, as a class, have for thousands of years, and under various systems of religion, been living upon the credulous masses and drawing their support from the patient, submissive toilers who are willing to labor for them. The priesthood have never been a producing class. They have not grown what they have needed to eat, nor spun and woven what they needed to wear, but they have fed upon the best of food and have been clad in the finest broadcloths, liens, and furs, because it has been superstitiously supposed that they were mediators between the gods and the people, and were able to tell the gods what the people wanted of them, and in return give the will of the gods to the people. I mean nothing personal in this, friend Humphrey. I entertain much respect for you and believe you honest and sincere, but I think I have correctly stated the character of the priests of the world.

Let me state, too, that they are all upholding systems of superstition and error. Whether priests of Brahma, Ormuzd, Fohi, Osirus, Zeus, Jupiter, Odin, Thor, Allah or Jehovah, it is all the same. Their rule is to hoodwink the people and to draw their support from them, without rendering a just equivalent in return.

All the religions of the world have been handed down from the ages of prehistoric barbarism, myths and superstition. This Christian religion is no exception to this rule. It is made up of Judaism and Paganism. I make the assertion and call upon you to disprove it, that Christianity contains not an original dogma, rite, sacrament or point of belief. Everything upon its programme was borrowed from the Jewish and Pagan theologies, and largely the latter.

The fundamental legend or idea of a son of God being born of a virgin was old long before the birth of Christianity. The conception of Virgin and child dates away back thousands of years. The Egyptians had their Isis (virgin) and infant three and four thousand years ago. The Hindoos, the Persians, the Egyptians, the Siamese, the Thibetians, the Grecians, the Scandinavians and many other nationalities had similar legends. There have been—according to the old legends—at least forty different saviors and Redeemers born into the world, and a large proportion of them of virgins and of deific paternity. Nearly half of them, after a life of holy teaching, performing miracles, leading obscure lives, it has been believed were crucified for the salvation and happiness of mankind.

The symbol of the Cross has been used in the religions of the world fully three thousand years. That and the steeple were handed down from the Phallic worship.

Baptism by water was practiced as a pagan rite centuries before Christianity had an existence.

Fasting, Prayer and Praise were employed thousands of years before Christianity began. The Trinity and the Holy Ghost were early pagan conceptions.

The existence of a devil and demons was believed in by pagan nations long before there were any Christians to believe in them.

Confession of sins, monasteries, monks, nuns, the eucharist, anointing with holy oil, belief in a day of judgment, in the resurrection of the body, in angels and spirits, the second birth, belief in sacred writings or bibles, holiness, repentance, and humility, prevailed among pagans many centuries before there was a Christian in the world. This can be fully substantiated, and if it is not true, I call upon you in the most earnest manner to disprove it.

If what I have stated is the truth, it follows that the great system of Christianity, which you and millions of others venerate, is simply modified Paganism, and that the story of Jesus, his miraculous birth, his moral teachings, his band of followers, his ignominious death upon the cross, and all the rest of it, is a mere clumsy rehash, or plagiarism of the old pagan fables. I am honestly of the opinion that this is the case, and that a man of your intelligence and research ought to be able to see it and understand it.

I charge you, then, with supporting and defending a borrowed system of myths and superstitions handed down from the ages of darkness and ignorance, and that the supernaturalism upon which it is founded is untrue and impossible.

I should rejoice could you become a convert to the truth as it is in the Universe and is revealed by science, and if you could freely discard all belief in gods, devils, hobgoblins, lakes of sulphur, etc., until you have some proof of their existence, and reject every creed and dogma that depends upon supernaturalism or the setting aside of the immutable laws of Nature. I am sincerely yours,

D. M. BENNETT.

Gems of Thought.

He who hides a truth betrays a trust.—Anon.
CHARACTER is the last fact of human nature—the root from which springs all that is good and noble and grand.—Prof. Felix Adler.

We may search in vain the Roman lane before Constantine for a single passage against freedom of thought, and the history of the imperial government furnishes no instance of a prosecution for entertaining an abstract doctrine.—Renan.

A MINUTE analysis of life at once destroys the splendor which dazzles the imagination. Whatsoever grandeur can display or luxury enjoy is procured by offices from which the mind shrinks from the contemplation. All the delicacies of the table may be traced back to the shambles and the dunghill; all the magnificence of building was hewn from the quarry, and all pomp ornament dug from among the damp and darkness of the mine.—Johnson.

NATURAL phenomena sometimes occur by which whole countries become desolate, and the memory of things past is erased; accidents may intervene to occasion the loss of the arts themselves, but the exigencies of men, in process of time, cause their recovery or revival by the same uses of natural means, and by the necessity of man's having recourse to art for administering to his wants; and, notwithstanding these interruptions and revolutions, yet the machinery of the world subsists without infringement.—Aristotle.

MORALITY is too often based, now-a-days, on a system of utility, of the "honesty-is-the-best-policy" order. But I say morality has nothing to do with interest. True morality scorns your petty utility. That is useful which serves an object besides itself. We call the "moral ideal" the ideal, because it expresses the one great object of man's life. The moral ideal will embrace all your lives in its scope. You are royal by its virtue. Nothing shall be for its uses only, but everything shall take its form and color from the central idea. Morality is not sour and gloomy. It does not moan in corners. It is genial and loves good society.—Prof. Felix Adler.

LIFE is full of deep well-springs of love, joy, and hope. The whole world is filled with rejoicings. The very waves ripple to a gleeful, glad melody. The little birds sing out from every bush and covert in strains of sweetest harmony. The rose, the lily, and the pink breathe only one perpetual breath of the richest of perfumes. Beauty, hope, and happiness are everywhere around us. And can it be that amid all this joy and loveliness there is a single individual who will say, "Man was made to mourn"? No! not away with such a gloomy ascetic thought! 'Tis a foul slander upon dear old Mother Nature, who has bestowed upon all that exists a heritage of bliss unutterable.—Mrs. E. D. Stenker.

WHY is it that man alone, more than any other of God's creatures, should be compelled to feel the pangs of hunger? What a shame that humanity should be thus degraded! The world contains ample stores for all; kind Nature willing to be impartial, is lavish in her dealings, and yields her gifts in rich profusion; but the fair and equitable distribution which she intended is interfered with by too many of the selfish and rapacious, and unheeded by too many of the wealthy in power. This is a violation of natural rights; for where all the children of the earth are equal inheritors, unequal distribution of the patrimony is injustice. A few, by force or by fraud, or by little or no industry, have amassed wealth and possess a superabundance of every comfort; the many have mostly to exist by severe toil, and suffer great deprivation. A few monopolize the ownership of the very land, keeping large tracts unproductive; while a vast number of persons can show no claims—unless it be for interment—to a single foot of the soil of their native country. This is a palpable outrage on natural rights.—Wm. McDonnell.

IS NOT the unquenchable light that feeds our globe suspended "by a golden chain from heaven, like a lamp from a dome," the emanation of creative love? Does not the earth in all its magic wealth of hill and valley—its hanging woods and mighty rivers flashing back the dawn—its gushing fountains and its gem-roofed caves—its lakes and oceans paved with the mute chronicles of a wondrous past—its boundless mineral treasures, garnered in the dark, unfathomable caves for man—proclaim to every creature who has an ear to hear and a soul to understand, that the governing principle of the physical world is love—love, pure, infinite, universal? All things, even apparently unintelligent objects, combine in the spirit of love for mutual aid and preservation. The flowering trees bend over to their neighbor and kiss them with their blossoming branches, and by this embrace of love, earth is replenished with their luscious fruits of many-tinted and resplendent hues? The mighty cedars on the mountain tops, shelter and protect each other from the tempest's force, and as they rock to and fro their giant arms embrace the winds and answer them with sweet Eolian harmony! The burning spheres above us retain their places in the "vast concave" solely by the power of mutual attraction—the unalterable material law of love! Each starry ray that travels millions of miles and requires thousands of centuries to reach our little orb—is an untiring messenger sent to teach us the universality of Nature's harmony—the eternity of love and light! And then the sun o'ertopping all, filling creation with its gorgeous beams—enriching, blessing all, from man, the monarch, to the tiniest leaf that forms the mansion of an atom—what is it but the majestic emblem of love?—love eternal, immutable and immortal!—W. Cowell.

Odds and Ends.

A PRINTER, in setting up "We are but parts of one stupendous whole," by mistake of a letter made it read: "We are but parts of one stupendous whale."

TWO LITTLE girls were lately prattling together, and one of them said, "We keep four servants, have got six horses, and a lot of carriages; now what have you got?" With quite as much pride the other answered, "We have got a skunk under our barn."

HE was sitting silently by her side one chilly evening last autumn, thinking of something to say. Finally he remarked: "How sad it is—the frost has come, and will kill everything green." The young lady extended her hand, and said in a sympathetic tone: "Good-bye."

A GENTLEMAN in search of a man to do some work, met on his way a highly respectable lady, not as young as she was once, and asked her: "Can you tell me where I can find a man?" "I cannot," she replied, "for I have been looking these twenty years for one for myself."

"You cannot deny that we have mustered some of the finest armies ever seen on the globe!" haughtily said the rebel general, Wade Hampton, to Gen. Kilpatrick, during the negotiations of Johnson's surrender. "Yes," quickly replied the dashing cavalry man, "You mustered 'em, and we peppered 'em."

A NOTED physician in Massachusetts has the following quaint lines inscribed on his medicine chest: "When brought at last to Death's dark door, We the aid of both heaven and doctor implore Restored to health, both are alike requited. Heaven is forgotten and the doctor slighted."

THE Rev. Daniel Fuller once had a schoolmaster boarder whose name was Woodcock. One day, speaking of owls, the reverend joker propounded this question: "What is the precise difference between an owl and a Woodcock?" The schoolmaster replied that an owl was "a little Fuller about the head, a little Fuller about the neck, and a little Fuller all over."

A DISK FOR A WEEK.

Born on Sunday, full of grace;
Born on Monday, fair of face;
Born on Tuesday, trumps an ace;
Born on Wednesday, sour and grum;
Born on Thursday, welcome home;
Born on Friday, free in giving;
Born on Saturday, work hard for a living.

HE was praising her beautiful hair, and begging for one tiny curl, when her little brother said: "Oh! my! 'tain't nothin' now. You just ought to have seen how long it hangs down when she hangs it on the bed-post to comb it." Then they laughed, and she called her brother a cute little angel; but when the young man was going away and heard that boy yelling, he thought the lad was taken suddenly and dangerously ill.

ON a Sunday morning an old and extremely pious puritan deacon once gave instructions to his newly appointed store clerk, who was below attending to his Sunday morning duties which had been assigned him in arranging matters for the business of the coming week, as follows: "Hullo, Sandy." "Yes, sir." "Have you sanded the sugar?" "Yes, sir." "Have you graveled the coffee?" "Yes, sir." "Have you watered the rum?" "Yes, sir." "All right, Sandy you may come up to prayers."

THE skeleton of a cat walked into Ryan's store at Hoboken. Ryan, seeing her, said to his boy: "Mickey, didn't I tell ye a month ago to fade that cat a pound of mate a day until ye had her fat?" "Yis, sur, ye did; and I've bin after fading her a pound a day ever since." "Has that cat aten a pound this morning?" "Yis, sur." "Shure, I think it's a lie ye're telling. Bring me that scales. Bring me that cat." The cat was brought, and turned the scales at exactly one pound. "There, didn't I tell ye she had aten a pound of mate this mornin'?" "All right, me boy, there's yer pound of mate, but where the devil's yer cat?"

A COMPLIMENT TO AN ARCHITECT.—Louis XIV., taking the air in the gardens of Versailles with courtiers, saw Mansard the architect walking through one of the alleys. He soon joined the old man, and Mansard taking off his hat, as was strict in the presence of his sovereign, the great Monarque, lifting up his hand in friendly reprehension, said: "Pray keep it on; the evening is damp, and you may take cold." The courtiers who were all standing bare-headed around the king, as was the custom, stared at each other at this extraordinary show of courtesy. But Louis XIV., observing their surprise, said: "Gentlemen, you appear amazed; but learn this: I can make a duke or a marquis with my own breath, but Nature only can make a Mansard."

CAT CONCERTS.—Those whose evening reveries are often disturbed by the feline tribe will appreciate the following: If a cat doth meet a cat on the garden wall—if a cat doth greet a cat—O, need they both to squall? Every Tommy has his Tabby, waiting on the wall; and yet she welcomes his approach by a unearthly yawl. If a kit wishes to court a cat upon the wall, why don't he sweetly sit and smile, and not stand up and bawl, and lift his precious back up high, and show his teeth and moan, as if 'twere colic more than love that made the feller groan. Among the twain there is a swain, his voice is known full well; but what's his name or whence he came, the deuce alone can tell. He's sweet upon the other sex, his amorous feelings rise, he can't resist the tender glance of their seductive eyes; and so with groans and horrid throat, he rends the very air, and makes these midnight catawauls impossible to bear.

Deacon Jones' Experience.

Yer right when you lays it down, Parson,
That the flesh is weak and a snare;
And to keep yer plow in the furrow
When yer cattle begins to rare
Ain't no sure thing. And between us,
The same may be said of prayer!

Why, I stood the jokes on the river
Of the boys, when the critters found
That I'd joined the Church, and the snicker
That maybe ye mind, went round,
The day I sat down with the mourners
In the old camp-meetin' ground!

I stood all that, and I reckoned
I might, at a pinch, stood more—
For the boys they represents Baal,
And I stands as the Book of the Law,
For it seemed like a moral scrimmage,
In holdin' agin their jaw.

But thar's crosses a Christian suffers.
As hain't got that pretense—
Things with no moral purpose,
Things ez hez got no sense;
Things ez, somehow, no profit
Will cover their first expense.

Ez how? I was jist last evenin'
Addressin' the throne of Grace,
And mother knelt in the corner,
And each of the boys in his place,
When that sneakin' pup of Keziah's
To Jonathan's cat gave chase!

I never let on to mind 'em,
I never let on to hear,
But drove that prayer down the furrow
With the cat hidin' under my cheer,
And Keziah a whisperin' "sic her!"
And mother a sayin' "you dare!"

I asked for a light for the heathen,
To guide on his narrer track,
With that dog and that cat jest waltzin',
And Jonathan's face jest black,
When the pup made a rush, and the kitten
Dropped down on the small of my back.

Yet, I think, with the Lord's assistance,
I might have continued then,
If, gettin' her holt, the kitten
Hain't dropped her claws in me—when
It somehow reached the "Old Adam,"
And I jumped to my feet with "Amen!"

So yer right when you say it, Parson,
That the flesh is weak and a snare,
And to keep yer plow in the furrow
When yer cattle begins to rare
Ain't no sure thing. And between us,
I say it's jest so with prayer. —Bret Harte.

Wolcott Meeting—How to Reach it.

MR. EDITOR: As I am receiving many communications inquiring the way to Wolcott, may I answer through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER? Wolcott is located on the Lake Ontario division of the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg Railroad, some forty miles northeast of Rochester, N. Y. As this road has agreed to return free all who attend the meeting over it, persons east of Rome on the N. Y. Central, should leave the N. Y. Central at Rome, and take the R. W. & O. road to Wolcott. Persons west of Suspension Bridge should take the shortest route to the Bridge, and there take the R. W. & O. road to Wolcott, and they will be returned free to the Bridge. This road also runs to Ogdensburg on the St. Lawrence River, and has a division running to Syracuse. Then the Ontario Southern Railroad has agreed to take passengers at excursion rates, and this road connects with the Elmira and Canandaigua division of the Northern Central Railroad which will carry passengers at half fare from Elmira and towns through which it runs. Arrangements will also be made with the Southern Central Railroad from Waverly, N. Y., to carry at half fare to the meeting. By examining any late Railroad Guide our friends, I think, will understand with the above explanations how to reach Wolcott. H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

The Fruits of Philosophy.

BRADLAUGH-BESANT PROSECUTION IN ENGLAND.

A lecture on the above subject was delivered on Sunday morning July 22d at Science Hall, by Mr. Rawlins (from London). He commenced by stating that in view of the present bad state of society it was their duty not to shirk the subject, but to face it manfully and earnestly, to find out what was necessary to be done, and not to rest contented until a better state of things existed.

He then went on to explain the population question as set forth by Malthus, the principle of which was that the chief cause of poverty with all its attendant evils, was owing to the constant tendency in all animated life to increase beyond the nourishment prepared for it. Population increases so rapidly that were it not for certain checks the whole earth would soon be literally overwhelmed; the checks that operated to keep down the numbers were preventive and positive ones which resolved themselves into moral restraint, vice and misery. Malthus recommended the people to adopt moral restraint, or in other words, abstinence and celibacy, in order to keep down the population, but the lecturer urged that each amounted simply to a sham, or delusion, and a snare. For the true remedy we were indebted to late writers, and principally to Dr. Knowlton, the author of "Fruits of Philosophy," who points out how that people may get married without the fear of being overburdened with large families, by adopting scientific but simple means to prevent conception, when desirable, which are set forth and explained in his work.

The lecturer then entered into particulars of the prosecution against Mrs. Besant and Mr. Bradlaugh for publishing in London the "Fruits of Philosophy," which resulted in their being sentenced to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $200 each. He denounced this prosecution as tyrannical, inasmuch as the defendants were animated by a lofty purpose. He regarded Mrs. Besant as a courageous and high-minded lady, and Mr. Bradlaugh's abilities were indisputable.

There was a martyr to the same cause even in this city, who was well known on the other side for his contribution to medical science; he alluded to Dr. Foote.

The lecturer concluded by saying that it was for the American people to cast off the old conventional trammels, and by adopting new ideas and new modes of living to light the way for other nations.

Some discussion followed; Mr. Henry Evans thoroughly endorsed the views of the lecturer, as did also Mr. D. M. Bennett. The only opposition that was raised was from some gentleman who was under an entire misapprehension as regards Mr. Bradlaugh, and quite adrift as to the principle of population.

The audience was small but appreciative, and listened attentively to the lecture.

B. F. Underwood's Appointments.

Fremont, Neb., July 25; Lincoln, Neb., July 28, 29; Norborn, Mo., Aug. 1, 2; Harrisonville, Mo., Aug. 4, 5, 6; Oglesby, Ill., Aug. 8, 9, 10.

Letter from G. B. Terwilliger.

THE WOLCOTT MEETING, THE TRUTH SEEKER, ITS EDITOR, ETC.

BRO. BENNET: I am confident your readers would be pleased with the sentiments contained in the following letter, and I can't see how you can object to them, therefore I forward the letter from Brother Terwilliger (without his knowledge) for insertion in your paper. H. L. G.

H. L. GREEN—Dear Sir: Ever since you announced the Wolcott Grove Meeting in THE TRUTH SEEKER I have been anxious to know where the place is, and how far it is from Binghamton, and what it will cost by rail from Binghamton. I would like to attend the meeting, and think I will if the expenses are not too heavy. I have been a constant reader of that fearless little sheet, THE TRUTH SEEKER, ever since it first launched its little bark at Paris, Illinois, and I have learned to love it. I could not do without it. There is more truth and common sense to be obtained from its pages than from all the bibles in the world. It is dealing some heavy blows at the old myths and fables of ancient history, and I hope I may see the time when old theology will go down, and the Religion of Humanity take its place, and science be no longer impeded in its onward course to make the world better, wiser, and happier.

If I was able I would give our old friend D. M. Bennett a thousand dollars to help him, for I think he needs it.

If the Liberals in the land would give half as much the Church receives from the hands of its dupes how long would ignorance be popular and intelligence kept in the background?

I hope the meeting at Wolcott will be a success, and I think much good will be accomplished by the friends of truth assembling together. As the times are hard I hope arrangements can be made with railroads to reduce their fare. Yours fraternally, G. B. TERWILLIGER.

MR. EDITOR: The railroad fare from Binghamton to Wolcott and return, by the way of Rome and Sterling, is five dollars and thirty four cents in all. At Rome you will get an excursion ticket to Sterling and return by the S. C. R. R. for three dollars and seventy-two cents, and the Ontario Shore Road will return you to Sterling from Wolcott free. Possibly this may be the cheapest route for our New York friends. All should examine the Rail Road Guides for information. H. L. G.

Obituaries.

MRS. FREEMAN PARKER was buried from her residence Monday, June 4th. At the grave the Master of Petaluma (Cal.) Lodge of Grangers, of which she was an earnest member, read the following simple and beautiful service:

"Friends and Neighbors: We are about to lay in the grave a gentle and loving sister, wife and mother. Her greatest desire while living was to live and love, and be loved by virtuous and sincere friends, and return even better than good for good. Nature, the mother and source of us all, claims her, and we give her up with tears but without fear. Dear friend, wife and mother, farewell!"

The Burial Service of the Episcopal Church was then read, and the coffin, covered with flowers, lowered into the grave, after which the Master closed the loving ceremonies with the words: "Infinite Nature! Thou givest and takest all life. To thy sweet influences we commit our dead. Farewell! Farewell!"

MRS. JANE REED, wife of John Reed, died June 14, in the seventy-fifth year of her age. She was born in Noblestown, Penn., July 15, 1802. In early life she was a member of the U. P. Church but in 1841 she was baptised by Elder Eli Regal and became a member of the "Disciples of Christ," remaining such until death. With her husband and family she removed to Barnesville, in 1847, where she has since resided. She was kind to the poor, a friend to the friendless, a comfort to the sick, an affectionate mother, and a faithful, loving wife.

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 32. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, August 11, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 5th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE's dwelling at Mandrin, Fla., has been struck by lightning.

Mrs. MOODY, wife of the evangelist, is teaching a large class of men in the Orthodox Sunday-school in Northfield, Mass.

THE Rev. Joseph Cook says: "We have churches that, when they erect a new house, dedicate to God only a mortgage."

IN British India statistics recently collected go to show that the number of suicides in the hot season is immensely more than at other times.

LORD MACAULEY says: "The Puritans hated bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bears, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators."

DANIEL O'CONNELL once taunted Disraeli with being a lineal descendant of the thief on the cross. Disraeli's answer was: "One half of Christendom worships a Jew, and the other half a Jewess."

A PREACHER crying out in the midst of his sermon, "How long, O Lord, how long?" was startled to hear a sleepy, money-lending old deacon pipe out: "Twelve per cent., secured by first mortgage."

A SAN FRANCISCO huckster bought a mule by auction for $140. After trying for three days to put its harness on from a second-story window, the owner sold it for fourteen dollars, on long time, and under the title of "Sara, the High Kicker."

IN a Nevada trial a new theory for defence was evolved. It consists in proving the previous bad character of the accused in mitigation of his crime, and as an explanation why nothing better could have been expected of him.

A WICKED man killed himself in the lowest level of a Nevada mine, and the account says: "Thus his alleged soul was saved over half a mile of transportation"—being that much nearer hell than if he had died on the surface of the earth.

THE site of the ancient city of Sybaris, in Cantania, Southern Italy, famous for its habits of luxury, is to be explored by the Italian Government. Excavations will begin during the coming autumn. Sybaris was destroyed by the Cretans about 510 B. C.

A CARRIER-PIGEON, carrying a message to the French Ambassador in London, won a race against a train going sixty miles an hour. The bird was liberated as soon as the steamer reached Dover, whence it flew to its dovecote in London, seventy miles in sixty minutes.

Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE speaks of the fishermen on the sea of Galilee as smelling of the salt water. The waters of the Galilee Lake are remarkably fresh, and the apostles who fished there were no more "old salts" than if they had lived on top of the Pyramid of Cheops.

BROTHER LEE, of Newark, though advised by the Presbytery to resign the charge of his church, still holds the fort. He says he has laid the matter before the Lord, and as the Lord tells him to stay, he does not see what the Presbytery has to do with it. His brother Presbyterians are embarrassed to know how to get rid of him.

THE Burlington Hawk says: Of the twenty-three men who recently stepped across the threshold of life from an Eastern college, eleven are clerking in auction stores at fourteen dollars a month, one is running a fish boat, two are learning the house-painting trade, and one starved to death before he had been out of college a week.

LAST week a man 80 years old walked 18 miles on the railroad to town to buy his marriage license. The case is hardly as bad as the one that occurred in Sumner county, Tenn., some time ago. A man walked to Gallatin, 30 miles, to get his license, but after making application he lacked fifty cents of having money enough. He walked home, and tried to borrow 50 cents, but failing, he walked back to Gallatin, and spent three days in trying to beat down the clerk.

THE Rev. Oliver L. Ashenfelt, pastor of the Reformed church at Carlisle, Pa., has been severely criticised for what have been called heretical sayings. He is now formally charged with "preaching sermons, and giving publicity to them, which contain doctrines inconsistent with the standards of the Reformed Church in the United States, and other teachings prejudicial to Christian morals," and is to be tried.

A KANSAS man in the garb of an ambassador from Christ, has recently been playing a confidence game in Willamet Valley, Oregon. He borrowed sums of money from the farmers, ranging from $5 to $50. He also borrowed (?) a span of horses which he omitted to return, and ended his sacred career by criminal intimacy with two of his female parishioners, and an elopement with a third.

MR. ALVA P. CROWNER, who lived a short distance from St. John's, Mich., some time since committed suicide by shooting himself with a gun. The papers called it a case of temporary insanity, but the neighbors say that the Rev. Mr. S. Pope was entirely too attentive to Mr. Crowner's wife to suit. The Rev. gent moved to Burlington, Iowa, and his wife has just written that she, in poor health, and her two children are deserted by the Rev. Mr. Pope, who, in company with the widow of Mr. Crowner, has gone west.

MINISTERS are now advertising that they want work; thus: "A clergyman of experience, standing, and ability desires a field of labor with a Congregational church. For particulars apply," etc. "An Eastern clergyman, who has been a pastor for five years in Illinois, is spending his vacation in Chicago, and will supply a vacant pulpit in this vicinity any Sabbath in August, if reasonable notice is sent," etc. A large number of clergymen are doubtless idle, and would be glad of a good fat position.

THE BLOOD OF JESUS TOO STIMULATING.—The Rev. Joseph Blanchard was found asleep on a bench in Washington Park, and was taken to the Jefferson Market Police Court on Monday last. The policeman who made the arrest testified that the reverend gentleman "was as drunk as a boiled owl." The prisoner said that he had been to church and taken too much communion wine. "O, how he loved his Jesus!" As he lacked the requisite ten dollars to pay the fine imposed upon him for drinking communion wine, he was committed to prison.

THE HINDOOS are endeavoring to introduce their religion into Australia, and Hindoo missionaries have been laboring for a year in that country. One of them reports on the condition in which he found the Australians. The things he particularly notices are that drunkenness and profanity are frightfully common; that abject poverty and deep ignorance are the leading characteristics of the people; and he thinks the Christian religion degrades instead of elevating. He adds, severely, that not much can be expected of a religion, the founder of which drank wine when on earth, and the priests of which relate stories of improbable miracles.

THIS is a year of distress in Asia. While the British Government acknowledges itself powerless to prevent widespread starvation in its Indian possessions, China is ravaged by fever, and looking forward with dread to a possible failure of crops. The whole empire is said to be poverty-stricken, and not even a good year's harvest can restore it to its average status. The bad financial condition of the country, of course, has its effect on the foreign traders, whose goods are accumulating on their hands, and who can get only very low prices for what they manage to sell. Another lean harvest will, it is feared, ruin the country for a time.

THE voyage of Capt. and Mrs. Crapo from this country to England, in a schooner-rigged life-boat twenty feet long, has ended successfully. During the last three days Mrs. Crapo was sick and unable to assist her husband, and his left hand became useless from protracted employment in steering. A correspondent says if Mrs. Crapo had died, Capt. Crapo would have been morally guilty of manslaughter. A flag for such reasoning! We are tired of this cant about woman. No woman in this nineteenth century need suffer or subject herself to hardships and injustice at the hands of man except she wants to. Mrs. Crapo was doubtless a woman of courage and daring, and entered into this exploit with all the enthusiasm that such a spirit is capable of. One might just as well argue that a man is amenable and responsible to the law if his wife kills herself with tight lacing and late hours, or other equally disastrous habits. Grown people are responsible to themselves alone, and feats of daring are to be encouraged in women.

DR. DEEMS, of the Church of the Strangers, in this city, said on Sunday last, that a mob was the most terrible thing on earth to encounter, and that the man who could quiet a mob was greater than any general. He then cited the Bible story of Christ feeding the multitude, and then quietly sending them away. We never before looked upon that gathering to listen to Jesus in the light of a mob; and we think it a great pity that the secret of feeding five thousand people with five loaves and two fishes could not have been handed down to us. It would certainly be of immense use at this time in pacifying these poor, half-starved strikers, whose story, as told by a correspondent in one of the New York papers, is certainly very heartrending in its details of misery and suffering, the result of poor pay and injustice. But the wonderful powers of Jesus which he promised to leave as an inheritance to his faithful followers seem to have died with him, and to-day we find it impossible to quell a mob of hungry, and consequently irresponsible, men.

THE PROGRESS OF INFIDELITY.—TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN.—Sir: What was said in Saturday's Sun is perfectly true. Infidelity is indeed marching along, and the clergymen on the watch towers, with their $20,000 and $15,000 per annum, do nothing to stay its progress. The chief difficulty does not come from Darwin, Tyndall, and Huxley, but from the inability of the clergy to reconcile their Calvinism with the plain dictates of the moral sense. The difficulty is not from without, but from within. People nowadays underlook words to see their meaning, and the word "just" will not screen actions that are demonstrably "unjust." Predestination and reprobation, the dogma of vicarious punishment, or suffering inflicted upon the innocent for the supposed guilt of our first parents, the supposed offense being in itself trivial, and the punishment cruel from excessive disproportion—these are the chief forces which spread "infidelity" in the nineteenth century. The great disseminators of infidelity are men like Dr. McCosh himself, who take the Westminster Confession of Faith for their Bible, and preach dogmas as revelation which revolt the reason and shock the moral sense. The sermon that a man hears on Sunday morning makes him an infidel on Sunday night.

JOHN FISHER.

GATH, writing to the Graphic from Asbury Park, where a Methodist camp-meeting is in progress, says: "The progress of love in the church is much facilitated by calling 'Miss' sister and 'Mr.' brother. The young man seeking grace has just got up from wrestling in the straw, and feels relief and joy, when a plump young woman comforts him across the table by saying, 'Brother Tompkins, will you have some of the cheese?' 'Yes, Sister Todd.' After a pause—'Sister, I believe I shall bathe after dinner. Do you bathe?' 'Brother Tompkins,' says she, 'I think it's just old splendid. After a refreshing sermon it seems to be as necessary as a congregational hymn, to get right in and kick up.' 'Sister,' he says, demurely, 'we'll both bathe!' Then the young man reflects how agreeable is this religion. Then we have the widowed Christian whose late spouse was a member of the fold. Life went on so evenly with them that she heeds the Scriptural injunction with all her heart, 'it is not good for any man to be alone.' In fact she is on the qui vive for number two, and watches among the howling penitents in the straw for the coming man. 'Brother Fisher,' she says, 'what I miss most of all is that comfortable blessing at the family table which Mr. Smith used to ask. It appears as if I have no appetite without it. Spring chicken is tedious and tasteless without family piety.' 'Sister Smith, did you ever hear me ask a blessing?' 'O, Brother Fisher! how can you be so insinuating?' 'There, there!' says the presiding elder, coming in, 'I won't disturb you! I see how it is!'

Events of the Week.

SAINT BONIFACE HOSPITAL, in South St. Louis, was totally destroyed by fire Aug. 5th.

THE remains of Dr. Winslow were cremated in Salt Lake City, July 31st. The weight of the ashes was 4 lbs, 11½ ozs.

WE are enjoying an English summer in New York—a summer in which showers and light winds alternate with the sunshine in such proportion as to make it positively enjoyable.

THE poor-house on the Industrial Farm of the county of Norfolk, one mile from Simcoe, Ont., was burned at 11 o'clock, on the night of Aug. 6th. Seventeen human beings perished in the flames.

BOTH Adelina Patti, the great prima donna, and her husband, Marquise de Caux, filed applications for judicial separation. The court pronounces against her position, and condemns her to pay costs.

Mrs. FRANK HOLMES, a young widow, living at 209 Lexington avenue, was assaulted Monday afternoon, as she was entering her home, by T. H. Clark, a rejected suitor, who struck her several times with a hatchet. Her condition is critical, and she is not expected to recover.

THE shooting of John Conklin of Fairfield by Geo. Allen proves to have been one of the most deliberate murders on record. Conklin was shot while sitting in his front yard. Allen expressed great joy when he found that his victim was dead. The Rev. Father Mullen, called to attend the murdered man, on turning to go home, fell dead in Conklin's yard.

WALL-STREET was excited last week over an assault by Major Selover, a wealthy broker, on Jay Gould, the speculator, and proprietor of the Tribune. The two men were walking along together, engaged in earnest conversation, when Selover suddenly struck Gould several times, and then, raising him, held him suspended over a railing, finally dropping him into the area below. Gould was uninjured.

THE great railroad strike is not yet entirely settled. The workmen are so far the victors. In no case have they resumed work without some concessions on the part of the employers. In some cases wages have been advanced 10 per cent. In others the reductions have been rescinded. Some railroads have abolished arbitrary rules and regulations. This has been the result of united action on the part of workingmen.

THE Russians met a serious defeat at Plevna, losing from five to ten thousand men and several officers. It is a serious blow to the onward march to Constantinople, and necessitated the Czar's making another call upon his forces at home. The war is costing his nation $1,000,000 per day, and it now looks as though it would take some time for him to get his money back. A body of insurgents in Herzegovina, under Gen. Despotovitch, after a battle of seven hours, were defeated. So far in the contest between Jehovah and Allah, the former seems not yet to have gained much advantage.

ON Aug. 6th, Pester's cigar-box factory, corner of 8th st. and Broadway, Cincinnati, O., was burned to the ground. Some eight girls and several men employed in the place perished. An eye-witness describes it as the most rapid fire within his memory. Though the fire-engines had but a stone's throw to go, after the alarm was sounded, they found the whole block one sheet of flame. In fifteen minutes the walls fell. The girls were in the fourth story, and there was no possible means of escape. How often do we read of these heartrending scenes! And yet, in spite of all the protests of press and people against the wanton neglect in providing means of escape at such time, there is no heed paid to such demands. A few ropes, a few ladders, and a little drilling of the operatives in factories and workshops to handle them quickly in case of emergency, and hundreds of lives would be saved every year. It is certainly a question that requires legislation. All such neglect should be visited with a heavy penalty. In spite of our boasted Christian civilization, we are not yet civilized or Christian enough to deal justly, humanely and mercifully by our fellow-creatures—if such dealing require too close contact with the pocket-book.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER NO. X.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: It seems to me that you have resorted to some rather imbecile arguments; at any rate, I think that, were I to make use of similar ones, you would be among the first to belittle them. For instance, you meet my observation on the equal silence of Herodotus about Rome and Jerusalem by saying that "he may have also visited Rome, and his allusions to that city may have been in the portions of his works that are lost." Right here let me ask two questions: 1st. May it not be as fairly presumed that his promised but missing history of Assyria, or Syria, as the Greeks called it, contained "allusions" to Palestine and Jerusalem? 2nd. What would you say of a Christian critic, if he should base an explanation of a difficult passage of Scripture on the supposed contents of some of the lost documents frequently mentioned in the Old Testament? Again, you plead for Byron that "had he lived to late manhood, it may be well supposed he would have 'sowed his wild oats,' and become a staid and exemplary member of society." Tell the candid truth now, Mr. Bennett: would you show any respect for a prospective apology of that kind for a wayward professor of religion? I am afraid we should have to hunt up your "lost works" to find an instance of such a thing. Speaking of my exposure of some leading Infidels, you say: "But really, what does it all prove? It proves that unbelievers are human beings, and have sometimes made mistakes. What class of men is there in the world, that, running over their records for hundreds of years, as many charges could not be brought against them?" That is very nice. Of course, you will not object to throwing the same cloak of charity over the "mistakes" of the professing Christians whom you have enumerated. A good rule always works both ways.

A few weeks ago, I saw a couple of quotations from Paul in the Boston Investigator. It was clear that their drift and meaning had never been investigated by that journal. As the Apostle himself said, he was "slandorously reported" (Rom. iii, 8). Imagine my surprise at finding the same citations, put in the same way, in your last Reply! I could not help thinking of Byron's lines, slightly modified:

A man must serve his time to every trade,
Save censure—critics all are ready made;
Take hackney'd jokes from Mendum, got by rote,
With just enough of learning to misquote;
A mind well skilled to find or forge a fault,
A turn for punning, call it Attie salt.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.

You furnished an item about church debts. The Tribune is a very acceptable authority; but you did not give the date, so that the statement you refer to could be verified and examined. But grant that there are fifty-four churches in New York city under "mortgages amounting to $2,367,886." If these churches were each under a debt equal to that on Paine Hall ($70,000), the sum would be $3,780,000—almost a million and a half more. And it should not be forgotten in this connection that this is a comparison of fifty-four churches and the Christians of a single city, with one building and the Infidels of the whole Western Continent. Then it should be remembered that there are hundreds of magnificent churches, and thousands of tidy chapels all over the country, entirely free of debt. You will see by the Directory that there are over two hundred and fifty in New York City alone. Most emphatically, then, there is nothing in this direction but very odious comparisons for Infidelity. Its liberality is as nothing in the presence of the munificent and varied generosity of Christianity.

Your last letter is the fullest and clearest illustration I ever saw of the meaning of the Latin phrase, ipse dixit. The solidified and petrified Past seems to be mere dough in your hands. You can put the features and lineaments of Infidelity on it with the greatest of ease. In order to show this, let me place some of your assertions and the fixed facts of history side by side:

"Voltaire was not a perjurer." (D. M. Bennett).

"When very hard pushed, he would not swear from a false oath" (Morley's Voltaire, N. Y., 1872, p. 200).

"Eusebius was a falsifier, forger, and interpolator" (D. M. B.).

"Eusebius wrote under the pressure of the great commotions of his age, but with much freedom from prejudices, with a more critical spirit than many both of his predecessors and successors, and with an ecclesiastical erudition unsurpassed in his age" (American Cyclopaedia).

"St. Augustine was one of the most lecherous and dissipated men in Carthage" (D. M. B.).

That is true of him only when he was an unbeliever in Christianity. After his conversion "it is believed that he was at once the purest, the wisest, and the holiest of men, equally mild and firm, equally prudent and fearless, equally a friend of man and a lover of God" (Am. Cyclopaedia).

"Girard did not make his wife insane by quarreling with her" (D. M. B.).

"He about this time married the daughter of a shipbuilder of that city, but the union was unhappy. Mr. Girard applied for a divorce, and his wife ultimately died insane in a public hospital" (American Cyclopaedia).

"He was very eccentric in his habits, a free thinker, ungracious in manner, ill-tempered, and lived and died without a friend" (Johnson's Universal Cyclopaedia).

"You have no grounds for insinuating that Paine lived improperly with Mrs. Bonneville" (D. M. B.).

"Mr. Paine was godfather to one of the others, who had been named after him" (Vale's Life of Paine, p. 145).

"Thomas has the features, countenance, and temper of Paine" (Cheetham's Life of Paine p. 227).

"Goethe was not an immoral man" (D. M. B.).

"His first years there (in Weimar) were spent in wild and tumultuous enjoyments, in which 'affairs of the heart,' it is to be feared, did not always end with the heart. 'There is not a woman here,' wrote the simple-hearted Schiller more lately, 'who has not had her liaison.' . . . A relation with Frau von Stein, which Goethe had long maintained, was now broken off, but the poet soon formed another with Christine Vulpius. She was uneducated, and lived in some domestic capacity in his house; but in spite of the enormous scandal which the new tie occasioned even in Weimar, Goethe afterwards married her to legitimate his son" (American Cyclopaedia).

"Shelley was not guilty of wrong in leaving his wife; nor was he dissolute" (D. M. B.).

"Toward the close of 1813 the estrangement which had been slowly growing between him and his wife resulted in their separation, and she returned to her father's house, where she gave birth to a second child. . . . He was soon after traveling abroad with Mary, afterwards the second Mrs. Shelley, daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, all of whom deemed marriage a useless institution.

On his return he found that his wife had drowned herself, and his sorrows are said to have made him for a time actually mad, and as such he describes himself in 'Julian and Maddalo.' He now married his second wife, who had been his companion for two years" (American Cyclopaedia).

"Chesterfield did not seek to make his son a whoremaster" (D. M. B.).

"Un arrangement, which is, in plain English, a gallantry, is, in Paris, as necessary a part of a woman of fashion's establishment, as her house, stable, coach, etc. A young fellow must therefore be a very awkward one, to be reduced to, or of a very singular taste, to prefer drabs and danger to a commerce (in the course of the world not disgraceful) with a woman of health, education, and rank" (Chesterfield's Letters to his Son. Letter 227).

"John Stuart Mill sustained a character too pure for you to besmirch" (D. M. B.).

I only said, and I again repeat, that a minister's name would be tarnished or "besmirched" were he to do as Mill did with another man's wife. Let me quote Mr. Mill: "At this period she lived mostly with one young daughter, in a quiet part of the country, and only occasionally in town, with her first husband, Mr. Taylor. I visited her equally in both places; and was greatly indebted to the strength of character which enabled her to disregard the false interpretations liable to be put on the frequency of my visits to her while living generally apart from Mr. Taylor, and on our occasionally traveling together, though in all other respects our conduct during those years gave not the slightest ground for any other supposition than the true one, that our relation to each other at that time was one of strong affection and confidential intimacy only. For though we did not consider the ordinances of society binding on a subject so entirely personal, we did feel bound that our conduct should be such as in no degree to bring discredit on her husband, nor therefore on herself" (Autobiography, N. Y., 1875, pp. 186, 229.) There is Mr. Mill's word for it. I am willing to accept it. But I am sure that if a bishop were to follow his example, the Infidels especially would wink, and insinuate, and put their mouths in position to say "lecherous."

"Rousseau was an upright, well-disposed man" (D. M. B.).

Whew! That assertion needs no quotation to disprove it. No wonder you could flatter the Devil in one of your preceding letters. If Rousseau was moral, immorality is an impossibility; and you should not be so inconsistent as to condemn "clerical beasts" any more.

I have entered into these details in order to vindicate my former statements, and to show the reader how scrupulous you are about historical truth! I have quoted largely from the New American Cyclopaedia, partly because it is unsectarian, and far from partial to Protestantism and Orthodoxy, but chiefly because you have expressed your acceptance of it as high and unquestioned authority (Reply No. III).

I have been tracing some of your references. You point to several Scriptural passages in evidence that the Jews "ate human flesh." Do you by this mean that they were cannibals? Your language is framed so cunningly that it at the same time conveys this impression, and leaves you a loop-hole in case of exposure. Well, I will have to force you into the loop-hole. Deut. xxviii, 47-58; Lam. iv, 10; and Bar. ii, 3 do not at all refer to the ordinary customs of the Hebrews, but to the last desperate resort of a people dying with famine. Ez. xxxix, 18, does not speak of human beings as "eating the flesh of the mighty and drinking the blood of the princes of the earth." In the preceding verse we are explicitly told that this was done by "every feathered fowl" and by "every beast of the field." Let the reader examine these passages carefully and he cannot fail to see that you have tried to play a trick on him. All your other Scriptural comments are about as critical and accurate as this one.

I have also examined Thiers, and Chambers' Cyclopaedia, but I found no evidence whatever that Robespierre was a Christian. As your generosity has recently placed Paine's works in Cooper Institute, in order that you may be able to say they are there, so, I am afraid, your jaundiced imagination sometimes reads things into authorities which they do not really contain. I have taken considerable pains to examine Thiers' History of the French Revolution; Garat's Memoirs of the Revolution; Lamartine's History of the Girondists; and especially Lewes' Life of Robespierre, and I find that Robespierre was simply a Deist; that his mode of thought was moulded by Rousseau's philosophy; and that his coadjutors were avowed Infidels. It is true some of the Atheists sneered at him as a kind of religionist, because he believed in the Being of God. But that does not prove your allegation. For the same reason Paine became unpopular with the very same class of people. And it had been said long before that even Voltaire was "retrograde," "superstitious," and a "bigot," because he was a Deist (Morley's Voltaire, p. 94).

You, too, can play "fast and loose" with Catholic authorities. While you would scornfully reject their testimony about skeptics, you can accept, with smacking gusto, their most spiteful misrepresentations of the life and death of Luther and Calvin.

It is quite likely that some Infidels have "died as the fool dieth," with stolid unconcern. But it is on record that many of them approached death with fear and trembling. There is good evidence that Voltaire died whining for a Catholic priest, and that Hobbes contemplated "the inevitable" with terrible trepidation (Condorcet's Life of Voltaire; Thomas' Dictionary of Biography; Blackburne's Life of Hobbes; Hume's History of England, new ed., London, 1864, vol. v, p. 97). A conscientious historian says that Robespierre and his fellows, when besieged in the Hotel de Ville, writhed like a knot of snakes encircled by fire. Henriot was drunk. Las Basas despatched himself with a pistol. Couthon cut ghastly gashes in his bosom, but lacked courage to drive the knife to his heart. Robespierre made an attempt to shoot himself, but succeeded only in breaking his jaw. St. Just begged his comrades to kill him (Scott's Life of Napoleon Buonaparte, vol. i, chap. xvii).

It is nobler, like Hamlet, to meditate on death in a serious vein, than to breathe the last, like Hume, with a deck of cards in his hands. But who, except a true Christian, can die with the serene assurance of St. Paul, and say: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day" (2 Tim. iv, 6-8)?

I might as well improve this opportunity, once for all, to say a word about Calvin and Servetus. Everybody is familiar with these two names. Callow striplings that never saw a Life of Calvin, far less read one, are able to articulate the three words: "Calvin burned Servetus." Ignorami that can hardly tell the difference between Calvinism and Galvanism, somehow manage to say, with a knowing air: "Calvin burned Servetus." The sectarian hater of Calvinism; the Catholic hater of Protestantism; and the Infidel hater of Christianity, can stand side by side and chant together: "Calvin burned Servetus." A gainsayer, cornered, squelched, and extinguished in controversy, can say that much, anyhow: "Well, Calvin burned Servetus." Now, I am prepared to say, and I hereby say deliberately, that CALVIN DID NOT BURN SERVETUS; NEITHER DID HE CONSENT TO HIS BURNING BY OTHERS. The facts about that sad affair were these:

1. Calvin believed in punishing incorrigible heretics with death.

2. Servetus himself, and his follower, Socinus, cherished the same belief.

3. Calvin instigated the arrest of Servetus, and furnished the evidence against him in the trial.

4. The authority that pronounced the sentence on Servetus was vested in the Senate of Geneva.

5. Calvin exerted all his influence to secure a modification of the sentence from burning to death by the sword.

It is true, this bears a most painful resemblance to the humaneness of the French Infidels, when they discontinued the use of the awkward axe, and proceeded to chop each other's heads off with the more graceful guillotine. Nevertheless, let the truth be said, even of John Calvin.

6. That age gave a general endorsement to the execution of Servetus. The cantons of Berne, Zurich, Bale, and Schaffhausen concurred in the action of Geneva. Melancthon, Beza, Farel, Bucer, Oecolampadius, Zuingli, Viret, Peter Martyr, Bullinger, Turretin, and the cotemporaneous theologians and statesmen generally approved of it.

This was confessedly a dark spot on the character of Calvin. But he should be judged in the light of his own age and surroundings. He was trained a Romanist; and it was hard for him to shake off entirely the dregs of intolerance. Even Draper says: "He was animated, not by the principles of the Reformation, but by those of Catholicism, from which he had not been able to emancipate himself completely" (Conflict between Religion and Science, p. 364). Besides, he found himself in Geneva under an ancient law that declared heresy a capital crime. The public opinion sanctioned that law. And we know how hard it is for mortals to be several centuries ahead of their times. Calvin's crime was the crime of his age; but I admit that it was a crime nevertheless.

I cannot see why Presbyterians should suffer reproach on account of the Calvin and Servetus affair any more than other denominations. Calvin was no part of the Presbyterian Church. If the Westminster divines adopted, to a great extent, his system of doctrines, they did no more than the Baptists, and the earlier Episcopalians and Congregationalists.

The world should not forget its many obligations to John Calvin. Bancroft, in his History of the United States, traces the germination and development of republican principles to his system. Froude has shown that "Calvinism" has been no secondary force in the progress of civilization; and he has testified as to Calvin's private character, that he "made truth, to the last fibre of it, the rule of practical life."

There are extant ever so many discussions of "Calvin and Servetus." But no one has been just to the memory of Calvin until he has seen what may be said in his favor by reading Beza's, Waterman's, McCrie's, Mackenzie's, and especially Henry's Life of Calvin; Rilliet's Calvin and Servetus; Chauffepie's article on Servetus in his continuation of Bayle's Dictionary; the Encyclopaedia Britannica; Coleridge's Table-Talk; the Biblical Repertory, vol. viii, pp. 74-96, and the Bibliotheca Sacra, vol. iii, pp. 51-94. There are two sides to this question; and no conclusion can be fair where both sides have not been thoroughly investigated.

I deny that Biot is accepted by the best scientists and theologians as good authority on Sir Isaac Newton. David Brewster contradicts him flatly, and proves conclusively that Newton's greatest religious works were thought out and written before the temporary cloud passed over his mind. (Life of Newton, ch. xvi, Lynn's ed.)

To me it is one of the clearest things in the world that Infidelity is of a disintegrating character. I mean, of course, unmixd Infidelity. Many Infidels are unconsciously restrained by the internal and external influences of religion. As many professed Christians are worse than their principles, so many professed Infidels are better than their principles, or, rather, non-principles. Imagine a world of universal skepticism. God is denied or ignored. Where then is Moral Obligation? Will you say that society shall declare its own requirements, by enacting laws to direct and govern itself? But what right has society, any more than a body of bishops, to think for the individual? Plainly enough, the spirit of Infidelity is inimical to every thing organic among men. This is illustrated by palpable facts. All Infidels are making an onslaught on the Church. The Free-Love Infidels are waging war on the Family. And the Communistic Infidels are breathing out threatenings and slaughter against Civil Government.

So you think Infidelity is consistent with Morality! You are then far in "advance" of some of your predecessors. D'Holbach grunted under the burden of showing that Atheism furnished the strongest motives for virtue and justice. Voltaire requested D'Alembert and Condorcet not to talk Atheism in the hearing of his servants, giving as his reason that he "did not want to have his throat cut that night." Hume says that "Hobbes' politics are fitted only to promote tyranny, and his ethics to encourage licentiousness" (History of England, vol. v, p. 97). He says farther in one of his Essays: "Disbelief in futurity loosens in a great measure the ties of morality, and may be supposed for that reason, to be pernicious to the peace of civil society." Bolingbroke says: "The doctrine of rewards and punishments in a future state, has so great a tendency to enforce the civil laws and to restrain the vices of men, that, though reason would decide against it on the principles of theology, she will not decide against it on the principles of good policy. . . . No religion ever appeared in the world, whose natural tendency was so much directed to promote the peace and happiness of mankind as the Christian. The Gospel of Christ is one continual lesson of the strictest morality, justice, benevolence, and universal charity."

But this question needs no backing by quotations. It stands to reason, as they say, that a man who thoroughly believes in a God who will certainly punish iniquity, and as certainly reward goodness, will be more moral than another one who has no God to fear or love; no Hell to shun, no Heaven to seek. A man who believes that he is only a beast is quite likely to live like a beast.

Let us now consider some of the popular objections to Religion:

1. There is a lurking fallacy, and a sly begging of the question, in some of the words which Infidels are very fond of using. For instance, they persist in speaking of the entire clergy of Christendom as priests, priesthood, and priestcraft. They ought to be more just and accurate. They ought to know that the great body of Protestants do not regard a minister as a priest in any sense different from the lay believer. In other words, there is no distinct order called the Priesthood, under the Gospel Dispensation. (Hodge's Systematic Theology, vol. iii, p. 689.) The Infidel use of these words is only an unfair attempt to cover Protestantism with the odium that is associated with Romanism.

It is frequently assumed that "common sense" is all on the side of unbelief. This is both gratuitous and egotistic. As Huxley says, common ignorance passes very often by the more deceiving name of Common Sense (Lay Sermons, p. 330). There is not a book in the world that contains as much "common sense" as the Bible.

What self-complacency there is in the skeptic's use of the word "Liberalism"! It takes for granted what does not exist in fact, viz., that Infidels are more truly liberal than Christians. What is popularly called "Liberalism" is really an unwritten creed, which runs about as follows:

Art. I. Every individual is the smartest fellow in the world.

Art. II. It is to be presumed that anything and everything may possibly be true, provided always orthodoxy is excluded from this supposition.

Art. III. It makes no difference what you believe or do—you'll fetch up all right.

How much superior to all this is the Liberalism of the New Testament: "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another" (Rom. xii, 10). "Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another" (Gal. v, 13).

Similar things may be said of the words "Freethought," and "Freethinker." The Infidel is not more free as a thinker than his religious neighbor. For one, I can testify that my mind enjoys unbounded freedom. I think exactly as I please. Freethought! That is certainly a high-sounding name. But we should remember that great names are frequently given to very insignificant concerns. You will often see a low corner grogshop dubbed "London House," or "Paris Hotel." But it is a low corner grogshop after all. It is so with Infidelity. It may style itself "Freethought," "Liberalism," "Progress," and all that; but its true character will still remain the same. In the language of Prof. Huxley, "many a spirited free-thinker makes use of his freedom mainly to vent nonsense" (Lay Sermons, p. 62). From the way many Infidels stagger through History, bungle

Philosophy, and blunder over Scripture, I should say that Freethinker would be a more appropriate term than "Free-thinker."

How often it is assumed that if a man is a thinker, he is sure to be an unbeliever. When we remember that such men as Columbus, Descartes, Locke, Blackstone, Milton, Bacon, Cuvier, Newton, Kepler, Brahe, Pascal, Da Vinci, Brewster, Burke, Faraday, Herschel, Morse, Mitchell, Guizot, Handel, Haydn, Rawlinson, Chalmers, Agassiz, etc., etc., were firm believers in the Christian Religion, this assumption is at once ridiculous and contemptible. There are ever so many "Sages" and "Thinkers" who are not "Infidels;" and there are hosts of Infidels who are neither "Sages" nor "Thinkers." It might be well for some people to keep in mind that long hair, weird looks, spectacles, funny clothes, and other eccentricities, all put on, do not, ipso facto, constitute a thinker.

2. It is sometimes objected to Religion that it makes people insane. But is this a sound argument? Is it applied to anything else? News, good and bad, have caused some to lose their minds. Should newspapers, telegraph companies, and all post-offices, be suppressed on that account? Disappointment in love has made many a bonnie lass and sighing swain crazy. Does it follow that courtship should be discountenanced the world over? Financial embarrassments have overwhelmed the mind of many an enterprising merchant. Does that prove that business, commerce, and money should be banished from the earth? Childbirth is often followed by derangement. May we thence argue that marriage is dishonorable in all. It is probable that Newton's temporary aberration of mind was caused by the intensity of his scientific studies. May we therefore conclude that scientific investigation should be discouraged? Everybody will answer, No. Then, on the same ground precisely, I will answer No, in behalf of Religion.

But why is this argument not passed around? Why not insist that Spiritualism is a very bad thing, since it sent even the strong-minded Robert Dale Owen into the insane Asylum? George Francis Train is either a lunatic because he is an Infidel, or else he is an Infidel because he is a lunatic. Why not blazon this as a knock-down argument against Infidelity? Intemperance has made a thousand crazy, where religious excesses have made one. Why is it that Infidel journals do not use this fact as the ground of a thundering appeal against the Liquor Traffic? It is all because they will not turn their style of caviling against Christianity against anything else. It is because they are given to straining out religious gnats, while they can swallow irreligious camels.

3. Some people, and some very intelligent people, say they cannot determine anything about the Christian Religion, because of the multiplicity of sects. Now, it is too true that there are far more denominations than are necessary. Divisions have subdivided until the sections are very numerous. But the "Freethinker" should be the last man to find fault with this. It is the result of the liberty which Protestantism vouchsafes to every man, and body of men, to think and act as they see fit. Thus a place is furnished for almost every variety of taste and opinion. As to the vital difference between these denominations, it is not so very great, after all. The Evangelical Alliance could meet on a common basis. And it is the united voice of Protestant Christendom that that basis contains all the essentials, the saving truths, of Christianity. The distinguishing marks are non-essential—matters of taste, education, local and historical attachments.

But let us admit that the variety of sects and denominations is perplexing and bewildering. I will still claim that the denial or ignoring of religion on that account is unreasonable, and contrary to human practice in other respects. The world has a great many different forms of government—Empires, Kingdoms, and Republics. Will any intelligent man use this as an excuse for refusing citizenship anywhere? Let us be thankful that our country actually swarms with most amiable and excellent young ladies and gentlemen. Do any of them put matrimony out of the question, on account of the wide room for choice? Would an emigrant refuse to settle in any part of America, simply because there are so many States and Territories? Would a traveler refuse to go to any hotel, and sleep out doors, because he was met by so many contending runners at the depot? Do our talented young men decline going to any college or university, because there are so many colleges and universities? What are our political parties but political sects? How many American citizens are there who make the variety of parties a reason for identifying themselves with no party? Should the fabled ass that starved between two bundles of hay, because he could not determine which was the best, so that he might eat it first, be the model of reasonable men?

Such questions as these answer themselves. They show that the objection to Religion, now under consideration, is more of an excuse than anything else. But where is a man to flee to get rid of this excuse? Certainly not to Infidelity; for sectarianism prevails even there. He will there be stunned by the conflicting clamors of Deism, Atheism, Pantheism, Materialism, Spiritualism, Free-Loveism, Communism, and a hundred Nondescriptisms. Nothing can be better and easier for him than to study the cardinal truths of the Divine Book, absorb them into the very marrow and fibres of his being, enter the Master's great vineyard, and work at the row of vines he may choose.

4. But the commonest objection of all to the Christian Religion is the inconsistencies of many who profess it. This objection is as old as Sin and Sophistry. And it is still full of life and vigor. It lives on in defiance of logic, good sense, and consistency. You have gone to the trouble of furnishing quite a list of fallen ministers. Doubtless some of your sympathizers will mistake this list for reasoning. They will probably keep it as an Infidel reference bible.

Very likely they will learn some of it by heart. It furnishes them with a great supply of cartridges—blank, every one of them. What a sweet scrap-book you must have had! You have certainly been a diligent gleaner on the fields of the "Police Gazettes"; and now you come to the threshing-floor with your blasted sheaves. But you forgot the case of the "confidence game" man, who, the other day, donned a clerical suit, and was thereby enabled to "borrow" quite a sum of money from a rustic. He was a capital illustration of the principle you try to bring out. The apostates whom you mention were only social and moral "confidence game" men. The Bible and Christianity are no more responsible for them than the Constitution and the good citizens of the United States are culpable for the existence among them of the criminal classes.

I have no inclination to doubt that your sketches of the disguised wolves are in the main correct. I offer no apology for those who were guilty. I will say of the Protestants that have transgressed, and died in their sins, as Moehler, the great Catholic controversialist, said of the "priests, bishops, and popes, whose scandalous conduct and lives extinguished the still glimmering torch, which they ought to have kindled: Hell hath swallowed them up" (Symbolism, Robertson's trans., 3d ed., p. 270). But in your ventilation of this matter you reveal a spiteful spirit, and a readiness to make unwarrantable assertions. You are not careful to mention all the cases that have been deposed. You give some names twice, in order to swell your list. You expatiate on the doings of individuals whose names you can not or dare not produce. You accuse others merely because gossipers, quack-doctors, and possibly, blackmailers, have wagged their "froward tongues" against them. Yea, you have been so unjust, and illegal, to say nothing of illiberal, as to assume that many are guilty against whom a whisper has never gone forth.

But it is only the genuine Christian that can consistently condemn such irreligious and unchristian characters as you have mentioned. It was against the Bible most of all that they sinned. Their conduct was quite in harmony with the teachings of prominent Infidels. Those who committed suicide were only doing what Hume and D'Holbach pronounced not only justifiable, but brave and noble. Those who appropriated to themselves, without leave, the property—or, as the Infidel Proudhon would call it, the "robbery"—of others, were only making a private application of that growing child of "Freethought," namely, Communism. The adulterers and whoremongers were nothing more than Free-Lovers in disguise. It was the practice of Infidel doctrines that made them what they were.

But, will you say, as Mrs. Woodhull said of Beecher, that their sin consisted chiefly in their hypocrisy? According to the Scriptures, hypocrisy is a damnable sin. But I have shown in my last that the skeptical Hume recommended, and that Toland, Paine and Voltaire practiced dissimulation and duplicity. To them may be added Simon Magus—whom you have hung up in your gallery of Infidels—lying, and uniting with the Apostolic Church with the expectation of receiving thereby extraordinary powers (Acts viii, 9-24); Collins and Shaftesbury partaking of the Sacrament in order to qualify themselves for civil office; and Hobbes clinging to the Anglican Church, though he hated its doctrines. By your showing—which, as we have seen, is incorrect—President White is a hypocrite, sanctioning and participating in daily prayers—only to "cater" to religious young men! O Mr. Bennett, Mr. Bennett, where is consistency? If suicide, dishonesty, licentiousness, and hypocrisy are wrong in clergymen—and they are eternally so—they are also wrong in all men. But where did you learn that these things are unlawful? Was it from Hume's Essay on Suicide? Was it from the utterances of Free-Love Conventions? Was it from the ring-leaders of Communism? No, dear friend: it was from the blessed old Bible which you despise, and which your batch of disgraced clergymen have disobeyed.

It seems that you have given us some of the advance sheets of your forth-coming "Champions of the Church," which you took occasion to advertise. I have seen your prospectus, and found that those whom you have selected for "Champions" are, with very few exceptions, divisible into two classes: 1st. Those who were no champions at all; and 2nd. Those who were champions only in evil doing. I hope you will proceed to give us, on the same principle, a volume entitled "Champions of the American Republic," containing exclusively sketches of Benedict Arnold, Aaron Burr, Preston S. Brooks, John B. Floyd, Jefferson Davis, Mrs. Surratt, J. Wilkes Booth, Raphael Semmes, Oakes Ames, James Fisk Jr., Wm. M. Tweed, John Morrissey, Brigham Young, Tom Thumb, Justus Schwab, Joseph Coburn, and the like. If your method is fair in religious it is fair in political history.

Ministers, as a class, are good men. Of course, there are exceptions among them; but exceptions never disprove a rule. When we remember that there are between seventy and a hundred thousand ministers in the United States, it is a marvel that far more of them do not prove to be wolves in sheep's clothing.

There are two reasons why the sins of a minister attract unusual attention: First, the height of his station gives special conspicuousness to his downfall. Impropriety in one clergyman will elicit more remarks than greater immoralities in a hundred men of the world. "Irregularities" in the latter are taken almost as matters of course; and very little is said about them. I would not have it otherwise as regards the clergy. They should be holy men. If they sin against God, and forget their awful responsibilities, they deserve to feel the keenest edge of disgrace and remorse.

Another reason for this is to be found in the fact that men do not generally speak of the sins of ministers and those of other people in the same terms. Dishonesty makes a preacher a thief outright—as it ought to; but it only makes an irreligious man a little "crooked," but "might"

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 30.

Great Jehovah, we are taught to regard thee as unchangeable, immutable, and infallible, and that the Bible is an emanation direct from thy hand or thy brain. If this is so are we not justified in looking for infallibility, harmony, and perfect agreement in thy word?

If we find that it is contradictory—that one part clashes with another, that one passage disputes what is asserted in another passage, have we not good grounds to decide that it is not the work of thy faultless hand, but that it is of human origin, and, like everything else produced by man, is defective and imperfect?

Is it possible for a God without weakness, without fault, without inharmony, to produce a work that is replete with imperfections and contradictions?

Is it not a perfectly legitimate and proper course for us to pursue in arriving at a correct conclusion as to the origin of the book called the Bible, to examine it closely and critically, to see whether it contains blemishes and imperfections, and whether it possesses qualities and characteristics that are above the ability of man to produce?

If we find that in addition to its contradictions and incompatibilities, it contains nothing superior to what is found in other books which men have written, are we not right in believing that this book was also written by men with human fallibilities?

As a faulty and imperfect piece of workmanship is positive proof of the defective mechanic who executes it, so, is not a book that contains numerous misstatements and contradictions the strongest evidence that can exist that it is not the production of a perfect, infallible being?

Does it not state in Genesis i, 31, "And God saw everything he had made, and behold it was very good"? And in chapter vi, 6 does it not say, "And it repented the Lord that he hath made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart"?

Is there not a serious discrepancy here? If the work of thy hand was so good and so perfect as to meet thy entire approbation, is it probable thou wouldst so soon become displeased with it as to wish thou hadst never made it?

In 2 Chron., vii, 12 and 16 does it not state that thou hadst chosen the temple which Solomon had builded for thy permanent residence, and that thou wouldst dwell there perpetually; and in Acts, vii, 48, does it not expressly state that the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands?

In 1 Timothy vi, 16, does it not say that thou dwellest in the light which no man can approach unto? In Kings viii, 12, does it not as emphatically state that thou wouldst dwell in thick darkness? In Psalms xviii, 11, does it not say thou madest darkness thy secret dwelling place?

In Genesis iii, 9 and 10, Exodus xxxiii, 11 and 26; xxiv, 9, 10, and 11; Gen. xxxii, 30, and Isaiah vi, 1, does it not state that thou wast seen as a man is seen, and that thy voice was heard the same as a man's voice? In other places, as in John i, 18, v. 37; Ex. xxxiii, 20, and 1 Tim. vi, 16, is it not stated that thou canst not be seen at any time; that no man has ever seen thee, and that none can see thee and live?

Could anything be more contradictory than this, thou canst be seen and was seen, and that thou canst not be seen and wast never seen? Must not one of these statements necessarily be untrue?

In Exodus xxxi, 17; Isaiah xliii, 24, and Jeremiah xv, 6, are we not informed that thou didst become weary and needed rest, while in Isaiah xl, 28, it states that thou art not weary? Can both be true, that thou art weary and art not weary?

In many passages of the book is it not expressly stated that thou art everywhere, and that thy eyes are constantly looking upon all parts of the Universe, and in other places does it not as explicitly state that thou wert under the necessity of visiting certain places in order to see how things were and what had been done?

If thine eyes keep in constant view all parts of the earth, was it necessary for thee to "come down" to see the city and the town which men had builded, or to visit the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah in order to see whether they had done as thou commandedst? If thou art always present in all places, could Adam and Eve hide themselves from thy presence?

In Psalms xlv, 21, and cxxxix, 2 and 3, and Acts i, 24, are we not told that thou knowest the hearts of men, that thou knowest all their ways and the very secrets of their hearts, while by other passages, as in Deut. xiii, 8; viii, 2; Gen. xxii, 12, are we not informed that thou wert under the necessity of testing and trying and proving thy servants in order to know what was in their hearts and minds? If thou at all times knowest all things, is it ever necessary for thee to experiment, or take pains to learn something thou already knowest?

In many passages is it not stated in the strongest language that all things are possible with thee, and that nothing is too hard for thee to accomplish; but in Judges i, 19, is it not confessed that whilst thou wert able to drive out the inhabitants of the mountain, thou couldst not drive out the inhabitants of the valley because they had chariots of iron? Was iron indeed more than a match for thy power?

In numerous passages, as James i, 17, Malachi iii, 6, Ezekiel xxiv, 11, Numbers xxiii, 19, and many others, does it not state in the strongest language that thou art unchangeable, that thou changest not, and that thou never repentest; and in contradiction to this is it not as expressly stated in Gen. vi, 6, Jonah iii, 10; 1 Sam. ii, 30, 31; 2 Kings xx, 1, 4, 5, 6, and Ex. xxxiii, 1, 3, 14, and 17, are we not as pointedly assured that thou changest thy mind, that thou didst often repent, and wert sorry for what thou hadst done?

In Psalms xcii, 15, Gen. xviii, 25, Deut. xxxii, 4, Rom. ii, 11, Ezek. xviii, 25, Deut. x, 18, 19, and other passages, are we not fully assured that thou art just, righteous, and strictly upright in all cases, and that thou treatest all with strict justice and impartiality; while in Gen. ix, 25, Ex. xx, 5, Rom. ix, 11, 12, 13, Mat. xiii, 12, Deut. xiv, 21; 2 Sam. xxiv, 17, and elsewhere, are we not informed that thou didst curse some of thy children; that thou didst visit upon the children of the third and fourth generations the iniquities of their grandfathers and great-grandfathers, that thou didst show favor and partiality, and that thou didst send curses and judgments upon innocent parties?

In a multitude of places, as in Psalms xix, 7, 8, Deut. xxxii, 4; 1 Cor. xiv, 33, James i, 13, etc., are we not assured in the very strongest language that thou art all goodness and justice, and that in thee is neither iniquity, confusion, nor evil, and in other parts of the book, as in Lam. iii, 38, Jer. xviii, 11, Isaiah xlv, 7, Amos iii, 6, Ezek. xx, 25, as well as elsewhere, are we not informed that thou not only doest evil unto men, but that thou art the author of evil, and doest all the evil that is done in the world?

In James i, 5, and in Luke xi, 10, are we not assured that thou wilt freely give to those who ask of thee, while in John xii, 40, Josh. xi, 20, and Isa. lxiii, 17, we are informed that thou didst harden the hearts and blind the eyes of thy children that they should not understand, nor see, nor be healed? Didst thou not take measures to cause the destruction of those who had called upon thee?

Is not the promise given in Prov. viii, 17, and in Mat. vii, 8, that those that ask shall receive, and that those who seek shall find; while in Prov. i, 28, Isa. i, 15, and Ps. xviii, 41, the contrary assertion is made that those who call upon thee shall not be answered; that those who seek thee early shall not find thee, and that thou wouldst hide thyself from those that seek thee; that when prayers are offered up thou wilt not hear, and that when cries were offered up to thee thou wilt not attend them, and will answer not? Can a being who makes such contradictory promises and statements be relied upon?

In Rom. xv, 33, and in 1 Cor. xiv, 33, does it not say that thou art the God of Peace, while in Ex. xv, 3, Ps. cxliv, 1, and Isa. li, 15, and many other places, does it not say thou art a God of War, the Lord of Hosts, the God of Battles, and that thou teachest the hands to war and the fingers to fight?

In James v, 11, Lam. iii, 33, 1 Chron. xvi, 34, Ezek. xviii, 32, Ps. cxlv, 9, and xxv, 8, and 1 Tim. ii, 4, does it not say that thou art kind, merciful and good? that thou art filled with loving kindness; that thou dost afflict none willingly; that thy mercy endureth forever; that thou art good to all; that thy tender mercies are over all; that thou art love, and goodness, and uprightness, etc., while in other passages, as in Deut. vii, 16, and iv, 24, Joshua x, 11, 1 Samuel xv, 2, 3, and vi, 19, and Jer. xlii, 14, that thou wilt not have pity nor spare; it says thou wilt not have mercy; that thou wilt consume thy people; that thine eye shall have no pity, that thou art a consuming fire, and thou didst throw down stones from heaven upon men and kill them? Are not the two characters thus given thee the most contradictory ones that can be conceived of? Can both be true?

In Psalms xxx, 5, and ciii, 8, are we not told that thy anger endureth not a moment; that thou art merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy? while in other passages, as in Exodus iv, 24, Numbers xxv, 4, and xxxii, 13, Psalms vii, 11, and Jer. xvii, 4, and elsewhere, are we not assured that thy anger was frequently kindled against thy people; that thou didst command that they be put to death, and that thou art angry with the wicked every day? Can it be possible that both these descriptions are true of the same being?

Is not the assurance given in Exodus xxix, 18, 36, Leviticus i, 9, and xxiii, 27, that thou didst command, approve of, and delight in burnt offerings, and in the blood of rams, bullocks, etc., while in other passages, as in Psalms i, 13, 14, Isaiah i, 11, 12, 13, Jer. vi, 20, and vii, 22, it explicitly states that thou not only didst disapprove of burnt offerings, sacrifices, and holy days, but that they were not sweet or acceptable unto thee; that incense is an abomination unto thee; that new moons and Sabbaths are an iniquity; and that thou delightest not in the blood of bullocks, rams and goats? Would it not appear from this that thy tastes were subject to very great changes?

In Deuteronomy xii, 30, 31, didst thou not forbid human sacrifice, which in Genesis xxii, 2, Leviticus xxvii, 28, 29, Judges xi, 30-39, and 2 Samuel xxi, 8, 9, 14, didst thou not expressly command it or acquiesce in it? Were not, then, thy moods variable?

In James i, 13, is not the positive assertion made that thou temptest no man? while in Genesis xxii, 1, 2 Samuel smart." A violation of the Seventh Commandment in a church-member is adultery, fornication, lechery, and whoredom; but in an unbeliever it is only a "liaison," "an arrangement," "a gallantry," "peccadillo," "mistake," and "something not menial." This manner of selecting words misleads many into the belief that sin is really sinful only in a religious teacher.

There are two reasons why your catalogue of hypocrites makes nothing against the Christian Religion. The first is the fact that the Bible does not sanction, far less command, vice and sin. It was because they disobeyed the Scriptures that those whom you have named, fell. There is no book in the world that speaks so severely of the unfaithful minister as the Word of God. For examples of this, read Zeph. iii; Mic. iii, 8-12; Mal. ii, and many other places. To see what a minister is required to be, read 1 Tim. ch. iii.

The second reason consists in the fact that the Church has neither tolerated nor connived at the sins of its Judas Iscariots and Ananias. By your own showing, conviction of iniquity has invariably been followed by expulsion. What more, what better, could the Church do? The glaring fact that the Bible condemns uncompromisingly, and prohibits emphatically and repeatedly, not only evil, but "all appearance of evil," and the other fact that the Church, as rapidly as consistency with justice and fair trials will permit, deposes, excommunicates, and disowns, such of her members and teachers as reveal wicked hearts by tangible acts, effectually shield Christianity against your imputations.

Infidelity has nothing to compare with this. It possesses and recognizes no authoritative Statute-Book which says: "Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." It admits of no supreme standard of right and wrong. Neither does it know aught of such a thing as discipline. It owns and acknowledges as teachers such men as Bolingbroke, Rousseau, Voltaire, whose private characters were an abomination—owns them, though they professed no repentance, but rather justified their loathsome practices.

Your reasoning—if such it may be called—amounts to this: That inconsistency with, and violation of, any given principles, are a proof that those principles are in themselves bad. No man would think of reasoning in that way about anything on earth but religion. When you find a dishonest man, do you scold the multiplication-table? Will you point to the pickpocket and the burglar as evidences that all statutes against stealing should be abolished? Will you endeavor to prove by the fallen women that the law of chastity and marital fidelity should be annulled? Do you despise genuine money because it is counterfeited? Do you want to annihilate doctors and drug-stores because disease and death are still in the world? Do you want to dissolve all civil governments for the reason that so many office-holders are corrupt? Would you point to Benedict Arnold as a type of American patriotism? Would you, if required to show specimens of American horses to a company of foreign equestrians, take them to a back stable, and there direct their eyes to some scrawny, wheezing creatures, infected and disfigured by ringbone, founder, spavin, glanders, and epizootic? Suppose—we may suppose anything now-a-days—suppose that Science were to establish interplanetary travel, and a committee of Jupiterians were to make you a visit to request some models of terrestrial beings to take back with them—would you go to the Penitentiary or the Lunatic Asylum to select the models? Do you despise Liberty, because—as Madame Roland said a-dying—crimes are committed in its name? You will say a thousand times No to these questions. Then, in the name of Sense and Consistency, I demand that you shall give just the same answer in regard to the Bible and the Christian Church. I insist that we are to judge of the principles of the Scriptures only by those who obey them.

You disparage ministers generally. You say they are useless and unproductive. But you said that with your eyes closed. You forgot that many clergymen, such as Leyden and Priestley, have been scientific discoverers. You forgot that nine-tenths of the Chancellors and Presidents of the world's Universities and Colleges from time immemorial until now, have been ministers of the Gospel. You forgot that the needy and distressed in every village and city in Christendom go most hopefully to the Christian pastor for sympathy and assistance. You forgot that a vast number of our best Biographies, Histories, and Cyclopedias of Art and Science, are the works of clergymen.

The Infidels are more truly the unproductive class. Where is the Hospital, or Benevolent Institution that they have founded and supported? Where, in our broad land, is the Orphan Asylum, or Home for the Aged, that they have endowed? What are they doing to teach the rising generation to love Virtue, Patriotism, Righteousness, and Holiness? What great ideas have they ever given to the world? In the language of Carlyle, whom you have called a "Giant Infidel," (?) "What Plough or Printing-Press, what Chivalry or Christianity; nay, what Steam-Engine, or Quakerism, or Trial by Jury, did these Encyclopedists invent for mankind? They invented simply nothing; not one of man's virtues, not one of man's powers, is due to them; in all these respects the age of Louis XV. is among the most barren of recorded ages" (Essay on Voltaire).

Pardon the length of my letter. I could not review your Reply, and expose the popular sophistries of Infidelity, in less space. Your obedient Servant,

G. H. HUMPHREY.

He who reforms himself has done more towards reforming the public than a crowd of noisy impotent patriots.

RELIGION makes large armies. The number of people on the globe at present enumerated as Christians is 353,000,000. Drawn up against this solid column, under the banner of all other isms is found an army of 913,000,000 souls, xxiv, 1, Job ii, 3, Jeremiah xx, 7, and Matthew vi, 13, it is emphatically stated that thou didst tempt Abraham, David, Job, and others? Are both of these statements true?

In Numbers xxiii, 19, and Hebrews vi, 18, is it not clearly stated that thou canst not lie, while in Judges ix, 23, 1 Kings xxii, 23, Jeremiah iv, 10, and xiv, 18, Ezekiel xiv, 9, and 2 Thes. ii, 11, are we not told that thou usest deception; that thou sendest a delusion; that thou puttest a lying spirit in the mouths of thy prophets; that thou sendest an evil spirit; that thou deceivedst thy prophets, etc.?

In Genesis vi, 5, 7, are we not told that on account of the wickedness of man, and the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart, which were evil continually, thou didst decide to destroy man whom thou hadst created from off the face of the earth, while in chapter viii, 21, thou didst decide equally as firmly that thou wouldst not again curse the ground for man's sake, nor any more smite every living thing, notwithstanding the imaginations of man's heart were evil from his youth? Do not these passages indicate that thy mind had undergone a slight change?

According to Romans i, 20, are not the invisible things pertaining to thee from the creation of the world clearly seen and understood by things that are made, even thy eternal power and Godhead, while in Job xi, 7, and Isaiah xi, 28, we are expressly told that thou canst not be found out by searching, and that there is no such thing as searching thy understanding?

In Deut. vi, 4, 1 Cor. viii, 4, and other places, are we not assured that there is but one God, while we are to understand by Gen. i, 26, iii, 22, and xviii, 1, 2, 3, 1 John v, 7, and elsewhere, that there is a plurality of Gods? Are both true?

In Exodus iii, 21, 22, and xii, 35, 36, didst thou not command thy people to commit theft and robbery, while in Exodus xx, 15, and Lev. xix, 13, didst thou not positively forbid stealing and robbing? Didst thou really command and forbid the performance of the same act?

By Exodus i, 18, 20, Numbers xiv, 34, Joshua ii, 4, 5, 6, 1 Samuel xvi, 1, 2, 1 Kings xxii, 21, 22, Romans iii, 7, 2 Cor. xii, 16, and James ii, 25, are we not to understand that thy lying and falsehood were approved and sanctioned? while in Exodus xx, 16, Proverbs xii, 22, and Revelations xxi, 8, are not lying and deception positively forbidden? Is lying, then, sometimes approved and sometimes disapproved by thee?

In Exodus xxxii, 27, 2 Kings, x, 11, 30, and other places, was not killing positively commanded, while in Exodus xx, 13, it is positively forbidden? Is there not a contradiction in these commands?

In Genesis ix, 5, 6, didst thou not require that every man who shed the blood of his brother should die? and in Genesis iv, 15, didst thou not specially provide that the man who had shed the blood of his brother should not be put to death?

In Exodus xx, 4, didst thou not positively command that no image or likeness of anything in the heaven above or in the earth beneath should be made, and afterwards, in chapter xxv, 18, 20, didst thou not expressly command the making of two images or cherubims with wings?

In Genesis ix, 25, Leviticus xxv, 45, 46, and Joel iii, 8, is not slavery approved and commanded, and in Exodus xxi, 16, and xxii, 21, Isaiah lviii, 6, and Matthew xxiii, 10, is it not clearly disapproved and forbidden? Does it not look like blowing "hot and cold" upon the same usages? Canst thou at the same time love and hate the same thing?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Wolcott Three-Days Grove-meeting.

Before the next copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER reaches our readers, Friday the 17th will have arrived, on which day the meeting commences. We take this opportunity to say to our friends that we hope all will make arrangements to be there who can reasonably do so. The prospects are that it will be the largest Liberal gathering that has ever been held in the country, and that it will be a glorious reunion of those who favor the intellectual emancipation and advancement of the race. A dozen good speakers or more will be on the grounds, with an excellent choir of singers, and there will be no lack of good speaking and singing. Let us all go up and renew our strength in the cause of truth, stimulate our zeal in the conflict we are waging, and strengthen the bond of fraternity that should ever hold us together.

Should the weather be bad, Bro. J. M. Cosad has a Liberal Hall in the near vicinity, so there will need to be no serious interruption in the exercises.

We hope to see many of our old friends, and to make many new ones. Come on, friends, let's go to Wolcott.

THE CAREER OF JESUS CHRIST, being a supplement to "Science of the Bible." By Milton Woolley, M.D., Stretator, Ill. The author of this pamphlet of fifty-two pages, 8vo, pursues the same system of explaining the stories and events of the New Testament which he followed in his larger work—an astronomical basis—with particular reference to the signs of the Zodiac. In his explanation of the Old Testament language, he held that Elohim, translated Jehovah in Genesis, referred to the Sun in conjunction with Aries, and hence meant Summer, and that El, standing alone and disjoined from the sun, meant Winter, and using this as a basis he explained all the Bible characters and figures. In the pamphlet under consideration he continues the same system, and relegates to the various signs of the Zodiac not only the entire story of Jesus, but all the principal incidents narrated in the New Testament. He starts out by saying that Iesos—Joshua—or Jesus, was the son (sun) of man or of the fish; or of the whale which swallowed Jonah. "The fish, in the opinion of antiquarians in general, is the symbol of Jesus Christ." Tertullian says: "We are little fishes in Christ our great fish." Jesus Christ was the sun in Pisces. Indeed, so closely was Jesus related to Joshua's father, the fish, that he was often called Ichtus—The Fish.

In a small space we can give a very imperfect idea of how the author explains the web and woof of the entire New Testament story. Those who are interested in his theory should send to him for a copy. Price 30 cts.

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.—Continued.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAYNE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

Music, architecture, sculpture and painting were devotedly cultivated, and they offered no opposition to theology. Speculative philosophy created violent agitation in the Church, but from its very nature it offered no truth, knowledge, or facts in place of theology.

The metaphysical method was fruitless, it produced no grand results. Philosophers sought to explain every problem by the process of thought alone.

"Tennemann has fairly stated the good and bad of the scholastic philosophy. It gave rise to a great display of address, subtlety, sagacity in the explanation and distinction of abstract ideas, but at the same time to many trifling and minute speculations, to a contempt of positive knowledge and to much unnecessary refinement" (Hallam's Middle Ages, vol. i, p. 33).

In these days speculative philosophy has no longer the control of the best minds. Science or knowledge now governs the thinkers of the world. Mr. John Fiske gives us a good definition of science and metaphysics. "A scientific explanation," he says, "is a hypothesis which admits of verification—it can be either proved or disproved—while a metaphysical explanation is a hypothesis which does not admit of verification; can neither be proved nor disproved."

For centuries the Church maintained philosophical or metaphysical disputes about the nature of Christ, one party arguing that his nature was of the same substance (homoousion) as the Father, and another as strongly urged that the nature of the Son was of like substance (homoiousion) to that of the Father. This discussion led to bitter struggles and bloody wars.

At another period the ablest minds in the pale of the Church were fiercely engaged in solving the problem of life and salvation with subtle speculations on Realism and Nominalism.

Some of the empty questions still remain. There is much talk about the gods and heaven and hell, but from these discussions there comes no additional light to man. These are questions that cannot be proved or disproved.

The doctrine of Christianity are immoral. Let us consider the doctrine of atonement. The earliest form of the Christian doctrine of atonement was that the Devil killed Jesus in ignorance of his nature. The Devil was thus deceived into doing what he had a right to do, consequently he was obliged to pay for this by giving up the souls of sinners to which he had a right.

Modern Doctrine of Atonement.—The doctrine as it now stands, has been crystalized into a few words, "Jesus paid it all."

Amsdorf, six years after the death of Luther, maintained that "good works were an impediment to salvation."

Justification by faith is still the most popular doctrine of the Church.

This first doctrine of the atonement was based on the idea of a conflict or war between Christ and the Devil for the soul of man. The Devil had gained possession of the human race in consequence of its sin. The right of the Devil over man was fully admitted. Augustine considered it as the right of property, and Leo the Great as the right of a conqueror.

Christ gave his life to the Devil as a "ransom," which was adequate to redeem the whole race. If Christ gave his life as a ransom, the question arose, from whose power was man redeemed? From the Devil's power. Hence Jesus paid his life to the Devil as a ransom for man.

Nothing, either great or small.

Nothing, sinner, no!

Jesus did it, did it all,

Long, long ago.

Weary working, burdened one,

Wherefore toil you so?

Cease your doing, all was done

Long, long ago.

Till to Jesus' work you cling

By a simple faith.

Doing is a deadly thing.

Doing ends in death.

Cast your deadly doing down.

Down at Jesus' feet;

Rise in him, in him alone

Gloriously complete!

This saps away the foundation of morality.

Nature proclaims that he must suffer who violates her laws. "Nature pardons no mistakes," says Emerson.

The doctrine of atonement makes a good God punish his innocent son and allow his guilty sons to escape.

If the guilty go unwhipped of justice, then the grounds of virtue and morality are gone. If

"While the lamp holds out to burn

The vilest sinner may return."

what motive is there in the doctrine to lead men to lives of morality? The murderer is prayed with a few times in his cell and then he is converted and becomes a new creature by faith. The Christian admits his conversion, but does not think him fit to live on earth.

Do we ever hear of a genuine conversion of a murderer where the good Christian friends seek and demand his pardon?

But if atonement be a real virtue, why may not a converted murderer, who is fit for heaven be fit to live on earth?

John D. Lee who recently was executed in Utah for murder said in his last confession, that he was not "an infidel," he "believed in Jesus," etc. So it has been with thousands of fiends who have perpetrated the most horrid crimes possible—they have died happy, regenerate, and just ready to fall upon Abraham's bosom. The doctrine of death-bed repentance has been the dry rot of Christian morality.

The Atonement is but another word for Indulgence. The idea of Indulgence as taught by the Roman Catholic Church is simply this: the Church has committed to her custody the atonement of Jesus. The Church, therefore, can pardon sin—pardon it even before it is committed. But if it is preposterous to pardon sin before it is committed it is equally preposterous to pardon it after it is committed.

To do a deed for the glory of God is all right, but to do a deed from love of humanity would be nothing but "splendid vice."

Christianity cherishes the spirit of persecution.

Of old the Church claimed the right to control man's opinions and beliefs. The Inquisition—the auto da fe, an act of faith—sought by means of torture and death to make all men think alike.

Auto da fe, an act of faith was this!

Queen Mary, when she had burned a few heretics, explained, half apologetically, that she did not think God could be angry with her for burning the heretics a few hours for their heresy as he would in the next world burn them forever for the same thing.

Another demoralizing feature of this doctrine is the temptation of the Devil.

"The devil tempted me and I sinned." I am therefore exonerated from blame. It all amounts to this: the Devil is wholly responsible for sin, and Jesus who died and paid it all, is responsible for salvation, and man is responsible for neither sin nor salvation. The natural result of such teaching is to take from man his manhood by persuading him that he cannot do what he ought. But how could it be otherwise if man was a fallen and totally depraved being? Never in this world was there a greater evil inflicted upon man, never was there so execrable a doctrine and fraud as this Christian Infidelity to man. This is the deepest and muddiest fountain of Infidelity that the world has ever known.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

INSTANCES OF RESISTANCE TO MORAL COERCION.—Number one: Dagobert, I believe—I will not be certain of the name—was on the point of being baptized. His spiritual adviser had told him that unless he submitted to the rite salvation was impossible. Ready to step into the font—the ceremony differs from ours—the convert paused and put the following question: "You tell me that there is no road to heaven except by baptism. Where are all my ancestors gone?" "To hell, undoubtedly," was the reply. "I'll go there too; I prefer being uncomfortable among friends to being comfortable among strangers." Number two, which brings us to the death-bed of Machiavelli. The great Italian sophist was dying, surrounded by a host of ecclesiastical dignitaries. Falling asleep for a few moments, he had a vision in which he saw a group of persons, wretched, starving, miserably clad, uttering lamentable cries for bread. "Who are these men?" asked he of one of the priests, explaining the conditions under which he had seen them. "These are the future inmates of paradise," was the answer, which was clenched by "Beati pauperes, quantum ipsorum est regnum colorum." Once more the patient falls asleep, and again a group, this time composed of men of grave demeanor and dignified bearing, passes before him. In their midst he recognizes Plato, Plutarch, Tacitus, and a host of other worthies, discussing momentous and important questions. "Whither are these great men bound?" is his second query on awakening. "They are the reprobated. Superbi hujus saeculi inimici sunt Dei," is the reply. And now the choice is given to him with whom will he cast his lot. "I prefer to be in hell with these eminent men, to devise in their society about the affairs of State, than in heaven with this other lot of dirty vagabonds, who flaunt their rags, idiotcy, and ignorance."—Tinsley's Magazine.

HAPPY thoughts will be but transient guests unless we entertain them with hearty good will and evident pleasure; but if they take up their abode with us, not only will all evil feelings vanish, but even their traces will be obliterated. Happy thoughts materialized into generous deeds and noble actions, will furnish comfort and enjoyment alike to the sometime guest or the daily companion.

At all times, in this wintry life, the presence of those we love is like a gleam of sunshine through the clouds, lighting up one particular spot amid the shadows, and giving warmth and lustre and loveliness to all beneath the ray. That passing gleam still seems brighter than the full sunshine.

Nobody likes to be nobody; but everybody is pleased to think himself somebody. And everybody is somebody; but when anybody thinks himself everybody he generally thinks everybody else is nobody.

TO-DAY witnesses the words of Hugh Miller true, viz: "The battle of the evidences of Christianity will certainly have to be fought out on the field of physical science."

Huxley, Hallam & Co.

NEW YORK, August 6, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Humphrey does me the honor to call me the "Allied Power," with capital letters. Will he show me the papers for that statement? He also says I misrepresented him—called him no gentleman, and a monster. Allow me to say I intentionally did no such thing. I said if he was correct in his justification of murders, then Christianity was to blame for his being what I intimated. But as he does not justify the crimes of the early Church, he remains what I supposed him to be. It is the principle of whitewashing everything done by the Church that I hate, not the men who do it. For Mr. Humphrey himself I entertain a profound respect, but for Mr. Humphrey's Christianity I do not.

I saw by a proof-sheet in your office that Mr. Humphrey makes use, in a slurring manner, of the expression "callow stripping." From circumstances not altogether disconnected with Mr. H. and myself, I think he means me. Now, "callow" means "destitute of feathers," "unfledged," "naked." That's all right, Mr. Humphrey—but am I to blame for not being as old as the fables from which you borrowed your religion? Because some men are idiots at seventy-two can't a fellow know anything at twenty-two? Was the multiplication-table less true when you were four than when you were forty? I may be callow—I don't deny it—but I hope to go to a Presbyterian heaven if I'm callow enough to believe that John Calvin was a saint. I may be destitute of feathers—probably am—but I'm thankful I'm not so destitute of brains that I cannot see that a religion which had first to be stolen, then propped up with a sword, and ever since supported by lies and sophistry, is not a good thing for a man to believe in. It takes ministers to—but I forbear. Mr. Humphrey is not callow. If I live long enough perhaps I won't be. I would refer Mr. H. to Wm. Pitt's speech on this subject.

Mr. H. says it is easier to call names than to refute reasoning. I called no names, and I did not undertake to refute his reasoning, because what reasoning he used I knew would be so completely annihilated by yourself that it would be not only superfluous but cruel for me to attack on "antagonist" already gasping. Besides, it is not my funeral.

He says he only repeated what Huxley, Hallam, White and others said about those murders. Who cares what they say about the "extenuation" of crime? If they tell the truth about the facts, they may draw their own inferences and leave us to draw ours. Because Mr. Humphrey dares not think beyond his creed, must I also be bound to think just as some historian does? If Mr. Huxley, with a "marvelous flexibility" of conscience, can extenuate a crime, must I also get mealy-mouthed and mincing? If Mr. Hallam says certain bigots were earnest but deluded in their persecutions, must I mumble a mass for the repose of their souls, regardless of what I myself think? That they were deluded I know, and their earnestness is well attested by the number of men and women they killed. Mr. Humphrey's skill in glossing over crimes committed for Christ's sake is only equalled by his remarkable assiduity in collecting and crediting what I would call insinuating prevarications.

Mr. Hallam as a historian I believe to be worthy of confidence, and Mr. Huxley as a scientist, especially in the field of fossils, is entitled to respect, but I must be allowed to entertain an opinion of my own about murders committed on account of religious opinions. Is it necessary to know the difference between an anthropoid and an anthropoidal ape to know that it is cruel to kill? or be able to point out the connecting link between an alligator and an ichthyosaurus, to know that torture is inhuman? Mr. Huxley can trace man back to protoplasm, and Mr. Humphrey may wriggle around facts till Doomsday, but neither can make the Inquisition out to have been a Charity Hospital nor an Institute of Learning.

The theological ship, which Mr. Humphrey loves, is like the one launched a short time ago at a neighboring shipyard, and which at its launching killed many men. When once started for the water it slid down the slippery ways, dragging with it a huge iron chain which jammed the workmen beneath it, crunching and snapping their limbs like twigs. No effort could turn it, and the cries of the men were unavailing to avert their death. When it finally rode the waters its course down the ways was marked by the flattened, bleeding bodies of the men who had made it. And so it has been with the Christian ship. Built in the dark yard of the Catacombs, and furnished with its motive power by the machinery of the Inquisition, it started slowly down to the broad ocean of time on the ways of faith made slippery by ignorance, dragging with it the iron chain of bigotry, and has gathered headway at every foot, resistlessly crushing every one in its path, unable to turn from its creed-bound course, feeling nothing but its own motion, heeding nothing but its own will, hearing nothing but the sullen swash of the waves which waited to greet it, till it rode triumphantly on the surging sea of humanity, a machine of iron and wood, with a heart of steel and a conscience of steam. And so it will ride for years. But like everything made by man, it will sometime sink. Barnacles will cling to it; worms will gnaw it; its iron will rust, and its wood will rot; its fuel give out; its rudder be broken; its captain and crew will die, and as it lies decaying and useless, anchored to a dogma, it will go down, and the gurgling, whirling waters will close over it, hiding it forever from the sight of man. It will make whirlpools as it sinks, and may leave bubbles on the troubled sea; efforts may be made to raise it, but Science will build a ship of knowledge with timbers of fact and armor of truth, surpassing it in strength and beauty as it surpassed the clumsy craft of fetishism, and it will be left to rest in the mud of the past as something which has served its purpose but is useful to man no longer.

If Mr. Humphrey wants to take passage on that craft, let him. He pays his money and goes on the line which best suits him. For myself, I will wait till I see some safer craft which will not have a hole knocked clean through it by every bomb-shell thrown from the guns of science. Bon voyage, Mr. Humphrey.

EUGENE MACDONALD.

"Old-Fashioned Honesty."

"WORD" OFFICE, PRINCETON, MASS., July 31, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Many readers will warmly respond to your sensible remarks in the TRUTH SEEKER of the 28th, on "The Reign of Terror," depicting the disturbed present and the stormy future which awaits us. But the "old-fashioned honesty" which you suggest as a remedy (though in many respects much better than the fast living of to-day), sanctioned rent, usury, and other speculative profits which were the evils that flower out in fire and blood today. Property in land which begets rent, and credit-monopoly which makes usury possible, are as old as human society, yet both are hostile to natural liberty and essential equity. The result is a progressive inequality of wealth, property playing out of the hands that produce it into the hands that have no moral right to it.

Existing "law and order" deny, 1st, the natural right to land and its kindred resources. 2d, by authorizing money, tariff and transit monopolies they invade the natural right of exchange. Since that "takes life which takes the means of living," the existing system of organized invasion and robbery of labor destroys life in a wholesale, incessant and merciless sense. Revolt against it is natural, inevitable and beneficent. Destruction of life and property, as you truly say, is always reprehensible; but the invading party are responsible for it rather than those whom they force to resist unto fire and blood. The eleven "Molly Maguires" whom Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, hung on June 21st, last, stood for the natural rights to land and their earnings thereon and therein, as John Brown when he killed Virginia slave-holders, stood for the natural rights of negroes to liberty. The "strikers" who burned railway property at Pittsburgh, July 22d, have an honorable precedent in colonial rebels who threw the British tea into Boston harbor, and in all defensive war measures. The fact that they scrupulously protected private property meanwhile from fire and theft, shows a clear moral discrimination guiding that retributive tornado.

Personally a Non-resistance, I would not take another person's life to save my own. But while I seek the solution of the labor question by peaceful evolution, and choose what I deem to be the best methods to reach it, in this issue, as in every other, my sympathies are with the invaded as against invaders, and with the defrauded as against those who plundered them. As there could not be slaves without slave-holders, so now where there are impoverished working people there are invasive capitalists who legally possess property which does not morally belong to them. While with you I indorse all that is just in "old-fashioned honesty," let us proclaim the true essential honesty which hastens the day when no one will have the power or wish to own more property than he or she personally earns.

Thanking you for your manly utterances, I rejoice that THE TRUTH SEEKER admits discussion of the momentous issues involved in the great railway strike.

Truly yours, E. H. HEYWOOD, Sec'y N. E. Labor Reform League.

REPLY.—We agree with Bro. Heywood in several of his positions, but not in all. While we think the laboring classes have rights that capitalists and monopolists ought to respect, we do not approve of the conduct of the strikers at Pittsburgh. The wanton and senseless destruction of property cannot be productive of good, the precedent of the destruction of tea in Boston Harbor notwithstanding; neither do we wish to see mobs rule the country. A worse rule cannot be devised. It is always reckless, senseless and mad. Far better would it be to educate the working classes up to exercise the legal means already in their possession—the ballot—to effect such reforms as the country needs. In our country, where the power of making and amending laws rests in the suffrages of the masses, there is no excuse for resorting to violence and lawlessness. If every man will see that he is honest himself, and will vote only honest men into office, a very great step will be taken in reforming the abuses under which our country suffers. —Ed. T. S.

Letter from Dr. Franklin, of Ithaca.

SALAMANCA, Aug. 3, 1877.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I just received the following interesting communication from Dr. B. W. Franklin, an intelligent Freethinker, of Ithaca, N. Y., which, I am sure, is worthy a place in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

H. L. G.

MR. H. L. GREEN, Dear Sir: Your letter inviting me to attend the gathering of Liberals at Wolcott, the 17th, 18th, and 19th of August, was received last evening. I expect to start tomorrow for Canada, New York city, and Long Island, on a four-weeks' trip on important business which I cannot defer.

I cannot refrain from expressing my regrets at the utter impossibility of my attending the meeting. I am in accord with the objects intended, and believe lasting good will result therefrom. As our Christian friends would say, "I pray that no uncertain sound may go forth." The time has fully arrived when all men and women who have outgrown the degrading dogmas of a "God Creator Slain" should stand forth and proclaim their unspeakable abhorrence and contempt for the bloody, wicked fraud.

The priests have become alarmed, and every reference made by them to the growing infidelity of the times awakens in the minds of their mentally-oppressed flocks an idea that all is not of Jesus that goes by his name.

Now, my friend, I believe that the so-called Infidels are more Christ-like in their lives, characters, and daily walks and conversation, than members of the Christian churches, and I believe the day is coming in the not far distant when all those who now so complacently bear the intended opprobrium of "Infidel" will be regarded as the true lights of the world.

Be not discouraged; declare the truth as you understand it, remembering that Jesus was persecuted by the same class of interested hypocrites that now labor to poison the minds of their followers against every one who exercises his reason, and especially if he gives utterance to his honest convictions.

May the proposed meeting at Wolcott be a success. May the noble men and women who participate in its deliberations be strengthened and encouraged, and be made to fully realize that thousands of intelligent and truly good, but timid people are anxiously looking and waiting for some plan that shall cement all liberal minds into one harmonious unit. Thanking you for remembering me as being worthy to be called "Infidel," I am very truly Yours, &c., B. W. FRANKLIN.

On to Wolcott.

BROTHER BENNETT: The other day I was one of the many who met at the Phoenix yearly meeting, to hear Bro. G. B. Stebbins expound the Gospel, meet and greet friends, and form new acquaintances.

For the benefit of those who wish to attend the Wolcott meeting I now write to tell them the best way of getting there. Those from the East should leave the New York Central railroad at Rome, then take the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg railroad direct to Wolcott; from Syracuse, the Northern railway by way of Pulaski; from Rochester to Charlotte, six miles (branch of Central), where one strikes the Rome, Ogdensburg and Watertown railroad. Anyone going by either of these routes gets return tickets free. My choice from Syracuse is to Oswego, and twenty-five miles west to Wolcott. Fare $1.75 each way. Yours with highest esteem, R. W. SCOTT BRIGGS.

Bran, Shorts, Chaff, etc.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 17, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Mr. Humphrey in his eighth letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER, says: "There has always been, and there is to-day, so much poor stuff passing under the misnomer 'Science,' that suspicion and shy acceptance of it, and that only after close scrutiny and careful sifting, is quite excusable. There may be wheat in the pile on the threshing floor, but that is no reason why everybody should be required to gulp it down with 'blind credulity,' bran, shorts, chaff, cockle, thistle, smut, and all."

Now, in all discussions I like to see charity, humility and fairness. We are at all times willing to admit that not nearly all that is called science is indeed science. There is, and all along has been, much scientific quackery. As Herbert Spencer says: "We see then that from the first, the faults of both religion and science have been the faults of imperfect development." Then again: "As religion has fallen short of its function in so far as it has been irreligious; so has science fallen short of its function in so far as it has been unscientific." Are not these plain and frank admissions, and altogether true? Will the Rev. gentleman who discovers imperfect development on the one hand put forth an effort to discover the same condition on the other? Or is it possible that he can see nothing but complete development and perfection in the Church from its very earliest infancy? We would like to have from him an expression on this point. If he is a good, charitable, whole-souled Christian (which, no doubt, he claims to be), he will favor us with an opinion of religion as he has so plainly and freely done upon science. I dislike the juggle position—all on one side—or the style of carrying our own faults on our backs, while those of others are kept in front before our eyes. I notice that Liberals are too much inclined this way, as well as our opponents. Let us discard the name Liberal or else beliberal. I don't believe in being hypocritical. I think it would be to our good to try to get more into the spirit of such writers as Herbert Spencer. We would thus become less dogmatic and uncharitable. Yours for the truth, J. H. DENSLOW.

A Challenge.

MR. EDITOR: I have not read your discussion in the last two papers, for want of time, but feel like shouting at the good effect already visible. I received a card mailed at N. Y., July 9th, the reverse side of which read thus:

"HELL AND DAMNATION! Purgatory snuffed out. Every form of Liberal Twistedness, commonly mis-called 'Liberal Christianity,' exposed and refuted. A pamphlet in advocacy of the strictly orthodox doctrine of eternal punishment in a liberal and local hell.—N. Y. Evening Post.

"The little book will be found to be thorough in its character.—Christian at Work.

"The theories of Annihilation, Purgatory, and Universalism are subjected to a rigid analysis, and the Calvinistic doctrine of eternal retribution is upheld in its most aggressive form.—N. Y. Tribune.

"Its statements are clear—its arguments conclusive.—Earnest Christian.

"A trenchant and cogent argument.—Princeton Review.

"Price 50 cts. a copy, $5 00 a dozen. For sale by the Author, Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, 81 East 10 st., N. Y."

"O, ho!" I said, "so Rev. G. H. Humphrey has written a pamphlet, and snuffed out Purgatory, and snuffed in Hell and Damnation in old-fashioned Calvinistic form on us poor rebel Liberal sinners, and wants to induce me to pay him fifty cents for reading in his pamphlet how he has done it."

Now, I don't propose to be cheated out of fifty cents in that way. If the Rev. Calvinistic Humphrey will send me the book free of cost, I will read it and return it if he desires me to, if he will promise to read my answer to the same in private, and afterwards to his congregation. Now the Rev. Humphrey will do no such thing. I challenge him to read my reply to his congregation. I promise it shall be respectful and free from abuse, though he may call it blasphemous. Since he, or his agent, took so much notice of me as to send me one of his advertising cards, I thus notice him. Will he accept my challenge? Mr. Bennett, please publish the same in THE TRUTH SEEKER that he may be notified of it. Yours truly for the truth,

ELLA E. GIBSON.

1312 Olive st., Philadelphia, Pa.

From an Appreciative Friend.

STOCKTON, CAL., July 15, 1877.

MR. EDITOR: I am a stranger to yourself, but you are not so much of a stranger to me, although I have never seen your face or your picture, and know not how you look. But I know what you think.

I cannot tell if I shall have much to say, but for the last six months I have been within reading reach of THE TRUTH SEEKER. A high admiration of the editor thereof prompts this letter, that I may tell him so. I office with my brother, Dr. A. T. Hudson, hence one subscription answers for two readers (with several outside).

I admired your pluck in starting THE TRUTH SEEKER. I then thought you must have more money than wisdom. The times then seemed, perhaps, more uninviting than unpropitious. A moderate judgment could see that a paper of that stamp must begin without the props of popular surroundings. The fact that you have succeeded thus far, and accomplished what you have in these few years of your literary industry, is a commendation of no small magnitude. It seems, too, that while Abbott, of the Index, has done well, you have done more than well. Writing as I am to D. M. Bennett, and not to THE TRUTH SEEKER, I can say this much without invidiousness.

The paper is furnished to subscribers at a low price. There are little touches of finish about it that must result, and have resulted, in actual benefit, as well as adding to its appearance. The edges are trimmed, the leaves securely gummed in durable book form. It puts the reader to the least possible trouble in looking it over. I doubt not that many a paragraph of THE TRUTH SEEKER has been sanctified by the grace of personal, yes of re-perusal, even, through the agency of these minor finger-conveniences.

I regret that the first letters of your able discussion with Rev. Humphrey I have not seen. The clear intellectually which the disputants confer upon the subject is engaging; but the good nature, the fair-dealing each with the other is remarkable. In this item you seem to be the equal of Mr. Underwood, and Rev. Humphrey tries to be as much of a gentleman as his opponent.

The best letter I have seen from the reverend gentleman was the one to which your No. 7 was an answer, wherein he made a good showing of the part Christianity has taken in civilization through sectarian colleges. While he does not tell all the truth he might, and while he strains his "therefore," orthodoxy may well thank him for that letter in their behalf. It may be that that letter will prove his climax. I felt trepidation that yours to follow must prove among the weakest of your efforts. However, on reading your No. 7, the feeling that we must drop some of our apples if our hands hold more than belonged to us passed away. It was plain we had not our due. The wealth of both your technicalities and generalizations made me feel rich in our cause, even by contrast. Allowing Rev. Mr. Humphrey nearly all he claims, you still leave him standing on a peninsular of Christian ground so pinched that, when compared with the realms of territory Christianity has wasted or condemned, it would furnish only about earth enough on which to build another Noah's Ark, and yard the animals.

Well, I am glad to see it. That is an able discussion. It cannot but do good. It must open the eyes of many a dreamer, and set them to thinking. The final outgrowth is improvement, and a better state of affairs among men. It detects and defines the difference between rubbish and things honored. Believe me yours truly.

A. S. HUDSON, M.D.

More Information about the Wolcott Meeting.

BRO. BENNETT: I hope I may be pardoned for taking so much of your valuable space in THE TRUTH SEEKER, writing about the Wolcott Grove-Meeting, and if you will find place for this letter I will not trouble you again in some time. And in the first place allow me to correct an error that appeared in my comments at the close of Mr. Terwilliger's letter last week. The name Rome in both places should be Owego. Then it would read, "The railroad fare from Binghamton to Wolcott and return by way of Owego is five dollars and thirty-four cents in all. At Owego you will get an excursion ticket to Sterling and return by the S. C. R. R. for three dollars and seventy-two cents, and the Ontario Shore Road will return you to Sterling free."

For the convenience of those who desire to attend the meeting, I will give the rates of fare agreed upon from the following named places and return to the same. Remember, the figures cover the fare both ways. Rome, $3.50; Syracuse, $2.69; Ogdensburg, $4.65; Cape Vincent, $3.30; Suspension Bridge, $3.00; Buffalo, $3.50; Auburn, $1.38; Owego, $4.03; Freeville, $2.66; Rochester, $1.67; Oswego, 78 cents; Charlotte, $1.32; Utica, $3.52; Albany, $7.36. As stated above, these figures pay fare both ways.

The speakers who may be surely expected to address the people at Wolcott are Horace Seaver, the indomitable and veteran editor of The Investigator; Miss Susan H. Wixon, the talented authoress; D. M. Bennett, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER; Prof. C. D. B. Mills, the scholarly and editorial contributor of The Index; Giles B. Stebbins, the distinguished Spiritualistic orator of the West; Rev. J. H. Harter, of Auburn, more humorous than Gough; Rev. Dr. M. Landsberg, of Rochester, a liberal and scientific Rabbi; T. L. Brown, M.D., an able, enthusiastic Infidel of Binghamton; Mrs. M. J. Gage, who has a national reputation as a woman's rights lecturer; A. B. Brown, Esq., a fine liberal speaker and writer, of Worcester, Mass.; H. L. Green, not an able, but a deadly in earnest Freethinker; Rev. N. H. Mann, a radical Unitarian minister of Rochester; J. P. Mendum, the distinguished Infidel publisher for the last forty years of the Boston Investigator; and Mrs. R. W. Scott Briggs, a fine speaker of Syracuse. There are a number of other speakers who will be present, and there are fair prospects that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll will be present and inspire the multitude with his burning eloquence. Prof. P. O. Hudson, of Indianapolis, one of the finest vocalists in America, has been engaged to entertain the multitude with his splendid singing.

The liberal veteran host, Mr. J. M. Cosad, is making the most extensive preparations to entertain liberally all who attend. Those who can, should provide themselves with tents, as lodging-room may be scarce.

Friends of humanity, you who love men more than gods, truth more than fiction, this earth more than mansions in the skies, righteousness more than piety, assemble at Wolcott on the 17th, 18th, and 19th inst., and unitedly gather strength for the great conflict against Christianity that is sure to be inaugurated in the near future as it has never been before.

H. L. GREEN.

Note from Isaac Paden.

WOODHULL, ILL., Aug. 1, 1877.

FRIEND BENNETT: I see the last letter of Rev. Mr. Humphrey is a mere repetition of former charges of individual wrongs, really having no connection with the point in debate, raising entirely a distinct question, which may be covered with these words: "Infidelity is in harmony with and leads to crime and shame; Christianity is in harmony with and leads to moral goodness and social purity." I for one accept his proposition, and most cordially ask him not to back down, but submit his proposition to a fair and honorable test, and as all courts of justice refuse to admit verbal testimony when written documents can be reached; so let it be in this case. Let the written records of crime decide the question, and if Infidelity has more representatives within the United States in her penitentiaries and upon the gallows (than its proportion with Christianity), then, friend Humphrey, you are justly entitled to the argument, and let it be announced upon the housetop, Infidels beware of your legitimate end. But should Christianity have more than her proportion of representatives, let your argument lay upon the floor, and let it be announced upon the housetop, Christians beware, your profession of faith is more dangerous than Infidelity!

If this is not accepted on the part of our Christian friends, then let this challenge stand as a perpetual monumental evidence that they are hypocrites and do not believe what they profess to believe. Respectfully submitted,

ISAAC PADEN.

Forthcoming Review.

The second number of The Radical Review to be issued August 15th, will present the following Table of Contents: "Female Kinship and Maternal Filiation," by Elia Reclus; "Walt Whitman," by Joseph B. Marvin; "Nirvana," by Dyer D. Lum; "System of Economical Contradictions," chap. i, of the Economic Science, by P. J. Proudhon, Editor's translation; "The Labor Dollar," by Stephen Pearl Andrews; "The All-Loving," by Sidney H. Morse; "The Orthodox Basis of Revivalism," by John Weiss; "Paul at Athens," by B. W. Ball; "The Law of Prices: A Demonstration of the Necessity for an Indefinite Increase of Money," by Lysander Spooner; Current Literature—Harriet Martineau's Autobiography, Landor's Imaginary Conversations, Spencer's Principles of Sociology, Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Foerster's Collection of Philosophical Discourses, Brinton's The Religious Sentiment; "Chips from my Studio," by Sidney H. Morse.

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Publisher, New Bedford, Mass.

THE EVOLUTION, No. 12. CONTENTS.—The Great Strike; Civil Service Reform; Newspaper Thought and Feeling; The Chinese in California; Free Discussion; A Song of Hope; The Evolutionism of Descartes; Opium and the Opium Eaters; Lectures from Darwin, Conway, and others; To Liberals, Deists, and Patriots. Book Reviews; Lewes' Physical Basis of Mind; Remedial Effort, etc., etc.; Evolution; A Humorous Poem. The Evolution is the best review of Science and Literature, $3.00 per year (26 numbers), single numbers 15 cts.

A. K. BUTTS, Publisher, 34 Dey St., N. Y.

Phonetic Spelling.

I notice that both you and Robert Taylor quote St. Paul as saying that the truths of God abound through his life. Now, though I am an out and out Atheist, I go for giving the Devil his due. It seems to me Paul did not any such thing. It would take too much paper to make an extended commentary on two or three chapters; but I think if we will study the place carefully we will see that Paul institutes a dialogue between himself and a Jew who expected salvation from being a Jew, a lineal descendant of Abraham. Paul tried to show him there was no difference between the Jew and the Gentile; for he was a Jew that was one inwardly, and circumcision was that of the heart, that justification was not by keeping the law but by faith; that where sin abounded grace did much more abound. The Jew wanted to know why he was judged a sinner if by his sin or by the truth or grace of God had more abounded, etc.

This I believe to be a fair construction of the third chapter of Romans and connection. All ministers understand this so, and hence would say your application of it shows inattention, and, of course, of no effect.

But what I care most about is that though Dr. Webster says: "The progress of arts and sciences is sensibly retarded by the difficulties of mastering an irregular orthography, and is a friend of science and yet will not mend the first word where he can as well as not. He is our master. Of whom are we afraid? It must be from fear or from choice that we knowingly perpetrate absurdities; as if every man is not morally bound to promote science, and thereby to cultivate common sense. What would you think of a man who should know the present theology to be false and damaging to the human family, yet would cling to it, support it, and practice its nonsensical rites because others did, and so neglect to support the truth, and displace error, barely because it would be unpopular, and let you and others work hard and alone to bless the world? What would you think of him? Would you not say that he knowingly and wilfully propagated falsehood? Would not this be particeps criminis? What is it short of lying when a man indorses what he knows is false?"

Prof. Max Muller, before the London Institute, said, "I cannot hope to live to see the phonetic system adopted, but as it is a trite saying that truth is mighty and will prevail. I cannot see why it shall not finally triumph. If any one find work for it, he should. If every man and woman would only mend what can be mended without any trouble, such as spelling knife, knowledge, knitting, well, still, pill, laws, crosses, pass, passes and a host of other words. Take the word knowledge. Here are nine letters for five sounds. You see this word both in writing and printing costs three times more than it ought, so that we expend sixty per cent. more than it should cost us. "Eight" costs us one hundred and fifty per cent. more, and "though" two hundred per cent. besides the labor of children and foreigners to learn it. A child or foreigner would learn three words of two sounds each, as "as it is," while it would be learning though, and so on."

If Mr. Bennett cannot do a thing he can't. No word in his paper. Newspapers all dead, as if it was a disgrace to advocate this science. I cannot so much blame the Church, for it labors for another world. If one knows enough to come to Jesus, that will do for him till he gets to heaven, where he will know as he is known, and see as he is seen. Fools can get to heaven. As I make reason my rule, I would like to know the reason for Mr. Bennett's writing his own name with two more letters than necessary, virtually saying here are two n sounds and two t sounds, when he knows it is not so. What is this but telling a lie—a literary lie? May be one can tell a literary lie without any moral quality.

Says Mr. A. J. Oliss of Glasgow, Scotland,

"There is, however, one real and very serious impediment in the way of a speedy introduction of a phonetic system or orthography, which has been generally overlooked; it consists in the great and prevailing ignorance of the science of phonology, the nature of speech sounds, their varieties, their analysis and their synthesis. It is rare to meet with a single elementary work which contains even a tolerably correct account of this important subject, and even scholars and professed teachers of pronunciation and elocution are generally very ignorant of the latter."

This I have found to be true. I have written no other myself for twenty-five years, and have examined all the elementary books I could find, and have found no one that meets the people's necessity. I have visited hundreds of schools and have never found a teacher that could tell me what reading is. I often think of Paul. He said he felt the spirit stir within him when he saw the people of Athens wholly given to idolatry. Our taxes must be paid to support schools and yet employ a method that no man can give a reason for; and yet we are a civilized people when we pay millions of dollars for our literary superstition. Oh how I wish there was a God that cared for mankind. I wish I knew who is our master that tells us we must spell our name with two n's and two t's.

A. B. PIRARD.

Friendly Correspondence.

C. E. HOWD, New Haven, Conn., writes: I enclose advance pay for the paper another term. We are largely availing ourselves of the privilege of purchasing your publications at the Free Lecture Association rooms here. The regular Sunday course will begin again Sept. 1st. You get decidedly the best of Rev. Humphrey every time. I mightily enjoy the way you sling ink and facts at him. Please increase the doses, overwhelm him, abolish him.

O. H. LAW, Moulton, Iowa, writes: Please send me a specimen copy of your paper. I am going to get you up a club if I can. Do you make any deductions for clubs? If it is handy please send a catalogue of Liberal books. I saw a few pamphlets you sent to a friend of mine. N. B. Smith. Smith is waking up the theologians on all sides. He has held several debates and by the aid of your pamphlets and discussions has warmed them, and set a great many to thinking. He is called the Ingersoll of Appanoose county. In his graduating oration he closed with a quotation from your "Thirty Discussions," which brought down the house with cheers and applause. Give me investigation or give me death!

URIAH MILLS, Salem, Ill., writes: In this Egyptian land where darkness has covered the land and gross darkness the people, the schoolmaster is now getting abroad. Wisdom, knowledge, and understanding are beginning to take the place of faith and dogma. We have seven churches here, not one of which could keep up a year without the aid of the "hell-deserving wretches," as the godly call us Infidels. Infidels are the only people who will pay for being abused. Tickets for the orthodox heaven can now be had at low figures. Simple assent to a system of faith founded on a dream is all that is required. But the tickets are now becoming like watered railroad stock and nearly worthless. The masses are coming to understand the cursed influence of a Church whose path through the past is paved with the skulls of fifty million human beings slaughtered in the name of Jesus Christ. I don't suppose the heavenly tickets will be wanted in the next century, for people will have progressed beyond hankering for a heaven that overlooks a horrid hell, and the worship of a fiendish God who sits up on a throne of gold, gloating over the torments of his children writhing in the flames of eternal woe. And if the Liberals of the land are but faithful to their duty and keep the schoolmaster and THE TRUTH SEEKER abroad, it will be as impossible for the old rotten hulk of theology to drift on through this century as for an iceberg to float down through the tropics.

MRS. ANNA M. BROOKS, Nashua, Iowa, writes: My supply of TRUTH SEEKERS is nearly exhausted, and I must be furnished with them till I go to my new home in Texas. I am thinking if I shall find the people of that State as ignorant and superstitious as Di Vernon finds them in Florida. I hope not. I attended church this morning for the first time in a year; so you see I have been neglecting the privileges of the sanctuary of late. Of course, I went only out of curiosity to-day. The Methodist parson had promised the children of the Sunday-school that he should preach without saying a word. At the close of the regular exercises he took the stand, and remarked that circumstances over which he had no control obliged him to postpone his performance until his next appointment; but in view of the disappointment would proceed to illustrate Daniel in the lions' den. He then opened his Bible, and partly read and partly related the story. When he came to the scene of Daniel in his chamber, some of the people thought he had been taken suddenly ill. He abruptly closed the Bible, walked twice slowly up and down the room, then dropped on his knees in the doorway. After twitching the muscles of his mouth a couple of seconds, he arose, took a few more turns up and down, watch in hand, then knelt again, and still a third time, in imitation of Dan. He then reported him to king Darius. Being the only actor in the play, he tried to personate all the characters. Oh! it was so ridiculously funny! to see him petting the imaginary lion, and like a little child at play, trying to "make believe" everything. Referring to Daniel's accusers who were thrown into the den with their wives and children and destroyed by the ferocious beasts, he wished the children to answer him, whether they thought it a piece of cruelty on the part of God to save Daniel and destroy all the others. He pressed them for an answer, but receiving none, he appealed to any one in the congregation to answer. Unable to endure it any longer, I replied that should the children speak their minds, they would say that it was cruel, especially the destruction of innocent women and children. But didn't I get a pious damning! That parson pitched into Infidels, and for a few minutes he raked them fore and aft the hardest I ever heard, and made a bigger fool of himself than I thought he was capable of doing. But, thanks to the spread of Liberal ideas, they cannot now burn nor imprison me for opinion's sake. I trust THE TRUTH SEEKER will flourish till the people shall no longer tolerate such superstitious stuff as that which is now given them from the pulpit.

HIRAM WILBUR, Green Island, N. Y., writes: I have lived in this benighted region thirty-six years, and all that time have taken The Boston Investigator. The rest of the people here are too pious to read such a paper. They all think as the ministers do, and would not suffer a man to think for himself if they could prevent him. Out of the twenty-five who have lived here as long as I have, only one has called on me to inquire about my spiritual welfare, and he had an axe to grind. But I call upon them occasionally. In the course of conversation with one the other day, he told me he was utterly unable to control any of his passions only as he got help from God in answer to prayer. I replied that my experience had been quite different; that I made several unsuccessful attempts to leave off the use of tobacco while I was a Christian, but after becoming an Infidel, and losing all confidence in my scapegoat, I was enabled to stop short upon the first attempt without the help of any God. He said it was the other fellow—the Devil—who helped me. "Why," said he, "the Unitarians of Boston are among the most friendly, honest, and benevolent people in the world, but it is the Devil that deceives them and makes them such." Comment is unnecessary.

WM. H. COFFIN, Longmont, Col., writes: Our Liberal Bro. Mr. Barnabas Smith, of Jamestown, is with me to-day and desires me to write you for him, which I gladly do, as he can write but little himself. He has received from you a box of books, and has first to pay express on it, and has not now as much money as he desires to send you, but wishes to forward you what he can before he returns home, or very soon. Friend Smith had thought his work in this world done, and he wanted to die, but now he desires to live and do all the good he can by selling your Liberal works. And for myself, I desire to express my thanks for the confidence you reposed in Bro. Smith and the kindly manner of dealing with him, and I can assure you it is all worthily bestowed on a worthy man, and duly appreciated by him. I knew friend Smith twenty-five and thirty years ago, when I was a boy, and he was a man in the full vigor of life and doing much hard work in the temperance and anti-Sankey cause, and opposing oppressions in every form. Then he was an able public speaker and very zealous in advocating his views. He was formerly a Methodist and was thus brought up, but got out of the woods of sectarianism over twenty years ago, since which time he has been a Spiritualist. He used to be a healing and writing medium. He was one of the Lincoln electors of Missouri in 1864, and has always been an active and prominent man in his section of the country. Friend S. is poor, and you will need to continue to trust him for books mostly until he can sell them. I am not in circumstances to advance money to him to any great extent, or I would be more than willing to do so. Mr. Smith says he will send you what money he has in a registered letter. You are doing a good work, and I trust you may be spared to continue in it for many years.

A. R. LILLY, Pictou, Nova Scotia, says: I mentioned some time ago the dissatisfaction that existed between the writer and members of a temperance society on account of his Atheistical opinions. Then I belonged to the order of British Templars. Since that we have become known as the United Temperance Association, uniting ourselves with other organizations so that we will have a broader basis to work on. Our object is to try and unite all other bodies that are working under different charters so that we all will be under the jurisdiction of one great national association; for it is believed that the amalgamation will be the means of extending our influence. The question which we are personally interested in, and which, perhaps, should claim the candid consideration of others, is, that we believe it is inconsistent for Infidels or Atheists to consent to the following: To steadfastly believe in the power and existence of Almighty God as the supreme ruler of the Universe, and the hearer of prayer; and the Bible as his revealed will. That is what every man and woman must accept before they can join the association. I ask, can Infidels be true to their own principles and believe in such a confession of faith? I cannot, for one, and for that reason I have withdrawn from the order. Temperance associations should embrace the whole brotherhood of man, independent of party, sect or creed. If otherwise, we are selfish and partial in our benevolence, and only interested in the welfare of the few or many that think or believe as we do. We can sympathize with a Christian and love his humanity, though we may dislike his theology. We are on the defensive when he uses his accepted belief as a means of persecution. What we want is free toleration; free to unite for the good of all. If our workmen, statesmen, and philosophers would take an independent and definite stand, no more parties will claim our future Washingtons, Jeffersons, and Franklins, for they will leave no debatable ground for men to stand on to prove what they believed or disbelieved. Such an honest, manly course through life cannot but claim the respect and approval of every impartial thinker.

Gems of Thought.

DEFEAT is not failure, nor is disaster disgrace.—Susan H. Wison.

THERE is a youth of the soul growing out of the age of our life.—Anon.

THOUGHT is a form of force. We walk with the same force with which we think.—Ingersoll.

WHILE superstition builds walls and creates obstructions, science opens all the highways of thought.—Ingersoll.

MODERATION in temper is always a virtue; but moderation in principle is a species of vice.—Thomas Paine.

ENTHUSIASM is the leaping lightning, not to be measured by the horse-power of the understanding.—Emerson.

IF life be a pleasure, yet since death also is sent by the same hand, neither should that displease us.—Michael Angelo.

TRUTH scorns the assistance of miracle. Nothing but falsehood ever attests itself by signs and wonders.—Ingersoll.

Errors, however beautiful and gold-enameled by time, must be extracted from the human mind by the archangel of Eternal Truth.—A. J. Davis.

For the vagaries of the clouds the Infidels propose to substitute the realities of earth; for superstition, the splendid demonstrations and achievements of science; and for theological tyranny, the chainless liberty of thought.—Ingersoll.

Who shall number the patient and earnest seekers after truth, from the days of Galileo until now, whose lives have been embittered and their good name blasted by the mistaken zeal of bibliolaters? Who shall count the hosts of weaker men, whose sense of truth has been destroyed in the effort to harmonize impossibilities, whose life has been wasted in the attempt to force the generous new wine of science into the old bottles of Judaism, compelled by the outcry of the same strong party? It is true that if philosophers have suffered, their cause has been amply avenged. Extinguished theologians lie about the cradle of every science as the strangled snakes beside that of Hercules, and history records that whenever science and orthodoxy have been fairly opposed, the latter has been forced to retire from the lists, bleeding and crushed, if not annihilated—scotched if not slain. It learned not, neither can it forget; and though at present bewildered and afraid to move, it is as willing as ever to insist that the first chapter of Genesis contains the beginning and end of sound science, and to visit with such petty thunderbolts as its half-paralyzed hands can hurl those who refuse to degrade nature to the level of primitive Judaism.—Huxley, Lay Sermons.

Of human life the time is a point, and the substance is in a flux, and the perception dull, and the composition of the whole body subject to putrefaction, and the soul a whirl, and fortune hard to divine, and fame a thing devoid of judgment. And, to say all in a word, everything which belongs to the body is a stream, and what belongs to the soul is a dream and vapor, and life is a warfare and a stranger's sojourn, after-fame is oblivion. What, then, is that which is able to conduct a man? One thing, and only one—philosophy. But this consists in keeping the daemon within a man free from violence and unharmed, superior to pains and pleasures; doing nothing without a purpose, nor yet falsely and with hypocrisy, not feeling the need of another man's doing or not doing anything; and besides accepting all that happens, and all that is allotted, as coming from thence, wherever it is, whence he himself came; and finally, waiting for death with a cheerful mind, as being nothing else than a dissolution of the elements of which every living being is compounded. But if there is no harm to the elements themselves in each continually changing into another, why should a man have any apprehension about the change and dissolution of all the elements? For it is according to Nature, and nothing is evil which is according to Nature.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.

THE great sun is not conscious of its own existence. Its vast magnitude has no germ of thought. It knows nothing of the grand Universe of which it is itself a part. Though it may rush through space with incredible swiftness, it knows nothing of the laws of motion and though it may illuminate innumerable planets and satellites, it has no conception of the amazing rapidity with which its own light flashes from world to world. But mind, that mystery which can exist in an atom, and comprehend a law, and account for the motion of a thousand suns, can that be blotted out, and be regarded as a pure emanation of mere matter, which it is alleged cannot be annihilated? How difficult it is to decide the priority of matter or of spirit! Are they co-eval? Is spirit but refined or greatly sublimated matter? Can mind itself be an entity? If it be but the emanation of matter, how wonderful that mind be the controlling power and matter subservient! Who can decide? Is there an Everlasting? Can we have a proof of the immortality of a single soul, or of the forever of a created intelligence? Forever! O the immensity of that unending of which time itself is but the shadow! O, the increasing changes of that Forever! Generation after generation to pass away, the mighty works of man to crumble, immense rocks to become dust, great mountains to melt away, the vast ocean to become dry, and the whole earth itself to be dissolved into its original vapor. . . . O that incomprehensible word, Forever—that overwhelming idea of duration—Eternity.—Wm. McDonnell.

Odds and Ends.

"THAT point is not well taken," said the schoolmaster when he sat down on a pin.

A COUNTRY editor in his financial article says, "Money is close, but not close enough to reach."

"CHANGE cars," is what a bootblack said to a countryman, when he had finished one of his brogans.

A MILKMAN was asked if he had plenty of milk in his cans. "Chalk full," was the appropriate reply.

"DIDN'T you guarantee, sir, that that horse wouldn't shy before the fire of an enemy?" "No more he won't. It's not till after the fire that he shies."

A ROMAN remarked the other day: "I try mighty hard to be honest, but sometimes a poor man cannot be honest unless he steals the money to be honest with."

JOSH BILLINGS says: "The mowl is a larger bird than the guse or turkey. It has two legs to walk with and two more to kick with, and wears its wings on the side of his head."

SHARP—"I would advise you to put your head into a dye-tub, it's rather red," said a joker to a sandy-haired girl. "I would advise you to put yours into an oven, it's rather soft," said the girl.

COMPARISONS are odious. The major (rocking Nelly on his knee, for aunt Mary's sake)—"I suppose this is what you like, Nelly?" Nelly—"Yes, it's very nice. But I rode on a real donkey yesterday—I mean one with four legs, you know."

WHILE she sat in the twilight expecting her beloved, her hand wandered wistfully over the keys as she sang, "Somebody's waiting for thee." She was right. The old man with a new pair of uppers and a club was waiting for him behind the front door.

THE Bloomingfield Democrat says: "A Worthington girl, while out walking lately, lost one of her shoes on the railroad track. Half an hour later a freight train ran into it and wrecked sixteen of the cars, knocked the ends out of the engine boiler, and killed 200 head of cattle. And of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"I've made the fire all the week!" shouted Jones; "This false," cried his wife, in most positive tones; "And, unless you would witness me fighting a bar, You'd better get up and be fighting a fire!"

A DUTCHMAN, in describing a pair of horses he had lost, said: "Dey was very much alike, specially the off one. Von lookt so much like poth I could not tell them together from which. When I went after one I always caught the oder one, and I whipped one almost to death because the oder one kicked me."

A CURIOUS thing is love,
That cometh from above,
And lighteth like a dove
On some;
But some it never hits,
Unless it gives them fits,
And scatters all their wits—
Oh, hum!

"AND have you no other other sons?" asked a curious lady of a bronzed old sea captain. "Oh, yes, madam, I had one that lived in the South Sea Islands for nearly a dozen years." "Really! was he bred there, and what was his taste—the sea or land?" "No, madam, he wasn't bred; he was meat—leastways, the niggers ate him; and as for his taste, the chief said he tasted of terbacker." The lady walked to another part of the ship, and the captain smiled and took a fresh quid.

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollections present them to view—
The shingle my mother carved out of the wild-wood,
To wallow my —trousers until it was blue!
The old cedar shingle, the iron-bound shingle,
The moss-covered shingle that hung on the wall.

JOSH BILLINGS' PHILOSOPHY.

There is nothing that should worry a man so little as to be abused by a loafer.
Whisky haz dun sum good in the world ennyhow. Old Burbanks gave away 75 dollars when he was drunk, and then when he got sober he sued for the munny and got beat.
Yu kan inherit munny and disease from yure ancestors, yung man, but yu kant inherit either branes or virtue.
The man who ain't a hunting after mischief seldom finds enny.
What the world wants now iz less religion and more kkommen sense.
Watch and pray iz the price of living in this world, and yu are going to git cheated 3 times out of 5 even then.
We were surprised to hear one of our young men utter these words a few days ago: "I have recently gin up all idea of the wimmen folks, and come back to perlitical life. I am more at home in this line than in huntin' the fair sects. Angels in petticoats and kiss-me-quickers are pretty to look at, I gin in, but they are as slippery as eels; when you fish for 'em and geta bite, you find yourself at the wrong end of the hook—you're ketched yourself; and when you've stuffed 'em with fruits, pastry, dogger-types and jewelry, they will throw you away as you would a cold potato. Leastwise that has been my experience. But I've done with them. Queen of Sheba, Pompey's pillar and Lot's wife, with a steam-engine to hold 'em, couldn't tempt me. The very sight of a bonnet riles me all over."

Special Notices.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygeine Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12419

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeian Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN,
Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.
BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."
"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"
In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Sexual Physiology.

[BY R. T. TRALL, M.D.]

This work contains the latest and most important discoveries in the Anatomy and Psychology of the Sexes; Explains the Origin of Human Life; How and when Menstruation, Impregnation and Conception occur; giving the laws by which the number and sex of offspring are controlled, and valuable information in regard to the begetting and rearing of beautiful and healthy children. It is high-toned, and should be read by every family. With eighty fine engravings. AGENTS WANTED.

SYNOPSIS OF TABLE OF CONTENTS.

The Male Organs of Generation.
The Female Organs of Generation.
The Origin of Life.
Sexual Generation.
The Psychology of Menstruation.
Impregnation.
Pregnacy.
Embryology.
Parturition.
Lactation.
The Law of Sex.
Regulation of the number of Offspring.
The Theory of Population.
The Law of Sexual Intercourse.
Hereditary Transmission.
Philosophy of Marriage.

This work has rapidly passed through twenty editions, and the demand is constantly increasing. No such complete and valuable work has ever before been issued from the press. Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, says it is the best work of its kind published. Price, by mail, $2. Sold by

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," "EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will reprove the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty.—Martin Luther First published in the Canadian Monthly rise 10 cents, by mail.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.
Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d St., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk, no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postage paid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology.....$2 00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book.....1 00
Health and Diseases of Women.....25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses... 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York. 11

THE

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors

OR,
CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
& HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 33. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, August 18, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

RABELAIS' WILL.—"I have nothing, owe much, and leave the rest to the poor."

THE TURKS have been described as "sleepy," but the Russians do most of the "retiring."

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S apostate son, John W. Young, has "reformed" and taken another wife.

ONE of the Boston street railroad companies has on file six thousand applications for the positions of drivers and conductors.

THERE are now in Philadelphia 450 co-operative and building loan associations in which workingmen have nearly $70,000,000 invested.

THE French Academy of Sciences has elected Dom Pedro a foreign member. This distinction is enjoyed by only seven other foreigners.

YEARS ago Sam. Johnson and Sam. Longfellow made a Unitarian hymn-book. Theodore Parker jocosely named it the "Sam Book," which name it still unofficially bears.

DODGE CHESTER, of Kentucky, aged 25, recently married his step-grandmother, aged 45. James Parton, the biographer, married his own step-daughter, but Dodge "saw him" and went one better.

ANOTHER WARNING.—M. de Ladone, Bishop of Nevers, France, died lately of apoplexy, while celebrating mass. Will people never desist from this dangerous practice of celebrating mass? Verily, the wrath of the Almighty is terrible.

A CLERGYMAN says that certain bishops of the Methodist Church who use free or half-fare passes on the railways draw full fare from the church funds. They preach religion in business, but practice rather questionable business in the service of their Lord.

THE Swedish Lutheran Church, in Jamestown, N. Y., was struck by lightning, on the 12th inst., during Sunday-school. One boy was killed, and an old lady and two girls were prostrated. God sends his thunderbolts alike upon the saint and sinner, but he will have to answer for his misdeeds, on the last day, if there is any justice in heaven.

STEPHEN GIRARD'S precautions against Christian ministers in his college in Philadelphia, seem to have been in vain. Ministers, it is true, may not enter, but the Christian lay-teacher can, and the Gospel is preached there. The Sunday-school Times says that Christian influences prevail there, and services of Christian worship are regular and well-conducted.

BEROBER, whose heretical opinions are no secret to his special friends, is said to have once committed to paper his reasons for doubting the inspiration of the Scriptures and his belief that all moral law is the logical product of man's social state. He lacked the courage openly to proclaim these sentiments, although he did not disguise them from those with whom he was most intimate.

WHY doesn't the Lord help them? The N. Y. Witness, a daily started in the interest of God, and conducted with an eye single to his glory, asks: "Why is it that this attempt to serve the Lord by publishing an evangelical temperance daily newspaper in N. Y. is left to struggle with continual difficulties, until we are almost fainting, like the Children of Israel when they had to make bricks without straw?"

Mrs. S. P. ANDREWS, in a recent address in Boston, said, in speaking of the recent crisis between labor and capital: "I know elements enough in the single city of New York, if they were rightly met by the rich and great, to renew in a week's time all the horrors of the French Revolution. It is dangerous sitting in a powder magazine, smoking the best Havana cigars at your ease, and carelessly throwing the burning stumps around you."

Gov. BROCKMEYER, of Mo., when somebody said to him, "You can't expect a man to work for a dollar a day," answered: "Why not? When I came to this country a boy of 18 years, I worked as a bootblack in the streets of New York. Thirty years ago I worked in a foundry for three dollars a week, and I saved my money until I had enough to buy a piece of land, and then I was independent. I should have spent the balance of my life on this piece of land, but was routed out by the war."

A RARE CHANCE FOR A GOOD PRAYING MAN.—Owing to the present long-continued drought in California, farmers are offering one half of their stock to any one who will keep the other half until they get rain. This liberal offer gives that class of men who believe in the efficacy of prayer a splendid chance to make a fortune in an honorable way. All who wish to enter into a contract will please send in their names at once.

A LIVELY controversy has been carried on for some time past, in the columns of the London Times, between Prof. Tyndall and Charles Bastian in regard to the origin of life. Prof. Tyndall maintains that life can only proceed from preceding life. Dr. Bastian claims that he has demonstrated conclusively that life originates spontaneously. This subject has constituted one of the great battle-fields of science for many years. The present discussion has failed to produce any satisfactory results.

SAYS the London World of July 4th: "On the walls of the bedrooms in the Granville Hotel are to be found large placards illuminated with Scriptural texts. Surely, such things, though imparting somewhat of a cheerful aspect to the blank whitewash of hospitals and jails, are out of place at the Granville. This is a further manifestation of the fussy Christianity which induces hotel-keepers to occupy part of the meagre space on your toilet-table with a beacon Testament, and railway companies to hang their mangy waiting-rooms with fluttering stripes of Bible quotations of the most fulminating and denunciatory character."

HARVEST DAYS.

O, the mellow harvest days are here,
When the parsons are out of town;
When the Devil puts on a face of cheer,
And gaily goes up and down.
The spider spins his cobweb high
O'er the door of the fast-locked church;
And the worshiper wanders idly by,
Like a soul left in the lurch.
O, the mellow harvest days have come,
When the reaper is out on the lea;
But far from the fold the shepherds roam,
And Satan sings jubilee.

PROF. YOUNG, in the Popular Science Monthly, refers to the recent cases of punishment for heresy. The turning out of the Rev. A. Blaauvelt, of the Dutch Reformed Church, the suspension of the Rev. Mr. Miller, of Princeton, N. J., and the especially remarkable case of the Rev. Robertson Smith, of the Theological Seminary at Aberdeen, Scotland, are dwelt upon at length. He says: "Among the presidents of our colleges, where there is one man of science there are ten doctors of divinity. A system of education dominated by theology is one which embodies the theological spirit in its methods of culture. What that spirit is, as respects freedom of thought, and the duty of its teachers in the formation of their opinions, we have seen in the recent treatment, by large and authoritative bodies, of Blaauvelt, Miller, and Smith. Truth was not permitted to be their object. The right of private judgment, and the consequent right of free expression of its results, were made crimes to be punished. The liberty to doubt, and from that starting-point to go on to something more true, is something not only not to be encouraged, but is prohibited."

A REMARKABLE SERMON.—The colored folks held a camp-meeting at Reading, Pa., recently, at which their bishop, J. R. White, of Philadelphia, presided. He delivered a sermon on the stupendous power of the Almighty, and in a loud, clear and resonant voice gave a lively description of the temptation in the Garden of Eden. Comparing the devil to a toad, he proceeded: "See de toad sittin' in de Garden of Eden. Dar he sets. Along comes Michael wid a big sword. He unsheathes dat sword; and, hauling off, wid one tremendous effort, he is just about lettin' fall dat awful knife, when a good angel says, 'No, don't do dat.' De life ob de devil is spared, and de entire creation is saved. O de woman was not satisfied to eat dat fruit alone. Dare it was. She must do something worse. What does she do? She gives it to de man. And de man eat dat fruit, and dare is de foundation of all sin. And God got mad! And what a terrible thing it is for him to get his back up! We see it every day. Look at him in de clouds when de storm comes and shakes down de hickory nuts, twists off de trees, tears up de houses and shakes down de barns. Oh, I tell you unless you repent you'll all be damned. You'll all be like de silver fox dat went through de fire and had his tail singed. Look out, de time is short! I only had intended to make a few remarks, but de grace of God got right into me, and here I am. Can't help but talk to you. Mus' do it. It's boilin' right up through de top of my head, and I'm gwine to tell you of Jesus. Don't forgit him! If you do he may forgit you. If he does you are deader than de deaderst horse dat ever was hauled out to de boneyard."

ONLY the men who read the current literature of our time, and weigh its arguments, are aware how powerful and how strenuous are the exertions of the opponents of Christianity. We are told that Darwin himself is not an ostensible enemy to the faith which solaces so many millions of our race. He is a man of blameless life, a fond husband, and a careful father, and takes pains not to personally antagonize the rector of his parish. Yet, after all, Darwin is the apostle of a scientific system which is utterly hostile to Christianity, as we know it. His personal virtues only serve to make his assault the more difficult to meet, for we know he is working for a cause, and not for himself. Mr. Huxley and Mr. Tyndall are men of the same sort—the advocacy of their skeptical doctrines brings them no material advantage. Perhaps they might do better if they conciliated the average religious faith of their contemporaries. It is useless, therefore, to assail these opponents of our received theology, as if they were seeking their own honor, rather than the true things, of which they set out to find the clew. The proper way to meet them is the fair and honorable one; and our discreet correspondent indicates it when he says that personal abuse is unavailing, and that really stalwart men of antagonistic views will not try to whip the infidels, so strong in their following, by sounding manifestations merely, but by conclusive arguments. We sound the note of alarm to the Church, assuring its champions that never since the birth of its sublime Founder did they stand in greater need of manning the wall of Christianity than now. The prevalent Materialism may glove its hand, and extend it with apparent cordiality, but it is none the less the implacable enemy of the faith founded in Galilee.—Sun.

NEW YORK SABBATHS.—Every Sunday you may take one of a dozen steamboats, and take your communion with Nature instead of at the table of the Eucharist. The children of the world are wiser in this generation than the "children of light." On Sundays they offer to poor sinners attractions which the preachers and churches do not. Perhaps the preachers and churches are not to blame. They are in certain ruts which it is hard for them to get out of. The preacher offers you a warm church, old hymns, long prayers, and a drowsy sermon. Moreover, he is often so constituted that if damnation had a bright side to it he would be sure to ignore it. The people of the world, on the other hand, offer you Nature, with all the good you can get out of her. They say to you, "Sail in our ships, ride on our railroads, eat, drink, bathe, stretch yourself at your ease, and have a glorious, good old time." The religious world looks grimly on and says, with nasal disapproval, that is not religion. There are plenty of the descendants of the stout old Calvinists among us who maintain that we should not think our own thoughts upon the Sabbath. They frown upon the efforts which the poor workingman and the tired working girl and the consumptive washerwoman make to catch a glimpse of green fields and rolling waters. They insist that the fourth commandment means incarceration in a church and the perusal of the Bible, the Catechism, Baxter's "Saint's Rest," Doddridge's "Rise and Progress," Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and other soul-refreshing works. They do not recognize that there is a spiritual oxygen which the soul needs and which these excellent books do not contain. But orthodoxy has discovered an irreconcilable foe in the needs and instincts of man. The preservative impulses of human nature combine to make the Sabbath a holiday as well as holy day; and, consequently, every fine Sabbath of Summer there is always a larger congregation at Coney Island than in all the city churches taken together; and the Coney Island congregation does not go to sleep.—N. Y. Telegram.

Events of the Week.

Our friend G. L. Henderson has arrived in this city from the West.

THE strike is increasing daily at the mines of the Schuylkill Company at Shamokin.

MARK M. POMEROY, proprietor of the Democrat, has obtained a divorce from his second wife.

ABOUT four hundred quarrymen and paving-block makers of Weehawken, N. J., struck for higher wages Monday.

WE are having a long spell of wet weather. This causes great loss among peach growers and dealers.

JOHN MURPHY, a coachman in the employ of J. Mintford of N. Y., was killed in a carousal in a drinking saloon at Long Branch.

DESPATCHES have been received announcing the loss of the steamship Eten on the coast of Chili, South America. One hundred lives lost.

TWO big stones came crashing through the windows of Mr. Talmage's tabernacle, Sunday. If the congregation were asking for bread, some one gave them stones.

THE Republican State Convention in Maine, held last week, had quite a stormy time. Blaine did not indorse Hayes; ex-Governor Chamberlain did. Blaine held his ground.

ON Tuesday John E. Daily, a stock broker, was killed by Leslie C. Hanks, Consul-General for Guatemala, in San Francisco. Hanks has since committed suicide in prison.

THE trial of W. C. Pike for the murder of S. S. Jones of the Religio-Philosophical Journal took place last week. He was acquitted on the plea of insanity, and will be sent to an insane asylum.

CONDUCTOR T. WILSON of the Brooklyn, Bath, and Coney Island Steam Railroad, while attempting to step from one car to another, on Saturday, missed his footing, and had his brains dashed out.

LYDIA THOMPSON and her troupe of radiant English blondes arrived in the steamship City of Chester on Sunday 12th inst. They commence an engagement at Wallack's Theatre Saturday evening the 18th.

A PASSENGER train near Long Branch, at Oceanport Creek, was precipitated into the water and wrecked last Wednesday. Many persons slightly and several seriously injured. Cause of disaster not known.

SAMUEL G. RICE, Chairman of the Greenback Party's State Central Committee, has called a meeting of the Committee and of the most active members of the party in this State, to meet at Rochester, August 23d, at noon.

THERE was a reunion of the Free-Soil Party at Downer's Landing, a rural retreat ten miles from Boston, on Thursday, 9th inst. Charles Francis Adams was present and delivered a speech. Many of the original members of the party were present.

COL. JOHN GIBBON, U. S. A., Montana, has had an encounter with the Indians on Big Hole River. It was one of the hardest Indian fights on record. Gen. Gibbon fought against immense odds. He lost from eighty to a hundred men, but got possession of the Indian's camp.

IN the National Republican (Wash.), an article appeared last week reflecting on J. K. Wheatly of this city. Mr. Wheatly demanded a retraction, which was refused, thereupon Mr. Wheatley laid in wait for Mr. Murtagh, proprietor of the paper, and gave him a sound cowhiding. Mr. Wheatley has been arrested.

THE latest war news gives continued evidence of the most inhuman barbarities on both sides. The Turks destroying and burning hospitals containing hundreds of wounded and sick soldiers; and the Russians, disregarding the flag of truce, and shooting down the Turks who attempted to remove the wounded from the battle-field. This war of religion seems to be developing all the most horrible passions of those engaged in it. The latest barbarity of the Turks is the condemning to death all the male Christians at Eskhi-Saghra, sparing only women and children.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. X.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: Your letter No. 10 contains a great many words, displays a good deal of ingenuity, a respectable amount of skill and ability in quibbling, evading, and dodging, but, candidly, I cannot see that it has much bearing upon the subject under discussion. I cannot see that you have refuted any of the arguments I have advanced, or disproved any of the facts I adduced. With all respect for your ability, I must say, you seem to me more like a shrewd lawyer who, conscious of the weakness of his case, artfully defends it with sophistry and clap-trap, than like a solid reasoner, who is firmly convinced that his cause is founded on eternal truth, which needs not cunning nor sophistry to defend it. Permit me to remark, that I think you have the faculty of proving the most from the least amount of evidence of any person I remember to have met.

It seems hardly worth while to follow you through your wild meanderings and floundering, and I will stop only to show you some of your deficient arguments, and how entirely you failed to rebut my assertions—for instance, I said Girard did not make his wife crazy. To refute it you quote that he married the daughter of a shipbuilder, that the union was unhappy, that he was eccentric, ungracious and ill-tempered. Did those qualities cause his wife's insanity? or did her insanity produce those qualities in him? One is as reasonable as the other! Insanity is a disease. Girard was no more responsible for any disease that his wife was afflicted with than you or I would be for any disease, mental or physical, that our wives might be suffering under.

I said you had no grounds to insinuate that Paine lived in adultery with Madame Bonneville. To refute it you quote Vale to the effect that one of her children was named after him, and that he was godfather to another, which amounts to just no refutation at all. If the fact that one of Madame Bonneville's children was named after Mr. Paine was a proof that he was father to it, what a great number of illegitimate children Franklin and Washington must have been fathers to! Was it a criminal affair in Paine that the child of a friend should bear his name? Let me ask you, why is it that you are so much more inclined to condemn Paine for offenses of which he was not guilty, than you are to try and refute his arguments? What is the reason for your wishing to make him appear worse than he really was? Do you not find it easier to make false charges than to refute solid arguments? What you said about Chesterfield, Goethe, and John Stuart Mill virtually exonerates them from all your slanderous charges.

You seem, however, so fond of stirring up these charges of adultery, etc., against Infidels, that I feel constrained to fulfill the promise made in my last to give you more cases of clerical derelictions, if that kind of literature proved interesting to you. I will, then, continue the recital, where I left off, with the assurance that if you still want more I will endeavor to accommodate you.

You err in supposing I am actuated by a spiteful spirit in the reference I make to the heinous crimes of the clergy. I assure you it is more in sorrow than in anger that I recount the great shortcomings of this pretentious class of men. I would far rather have it in my power to speak in praise of every clergyman in the land. Some of them are very fine men, and were they really engaged in a meritorious cause I could wish them all the success in the world. But it is a sad fact that their profession of godliness does not keep them from the worst of crimes; and inasmuch as they claim to be so much better than unprofessing people who prate less of God and Jesus, I feel it to be only right to show them up in their true colors that their real character may be better understood by the unsuspecting and confiding. Your talk about fallen clergymen acting contrary to the example and teaching of the Bible worthies seems to me mere twaddle, for their weaknesses were precisely in keeping with the prominent Bible characters and those acknowledged to be the favorites of God himself. They certainly acted quite consistently in their adulterous practices with Bible examples. Your attempt to make it appear that the filthy and lecherous conduct of the Christian clergy is in accordance with the teachings of prominent Infidels is slanderously false, and I am surprised that you should have the hardihood to say that it was the practice of Infidel doctrines that made them what they were. I pronounce your aspersions wholly uncalled for. Their conduct was eminently Christian. You speak about the names of the sinful clergymen not being given in some instances. In some of the most horrible cases the names were omitted for obvious reasons; but if you feel anxious to have the names you can be accommodated by calling upon me. You are wrong, as usual, in asserting that some cases are put in twice to enlarge the list. The truth is, on the contrary, that thousands of cases were omitted that might be named. You must know there is more than one Smith, more than one Jones, more than one Thompson, who pretends to stand up for Jesus, and yet lamentably fail to do so.

You must understand that, from a Christian standpoint, it is a much greater crime for an ambassador of Jesus—the shepherd who assumes to fold and feed the little lambs; he who has bathed in the fountain filled with blood drawn from Emanuel's veins; who has the grace of God, the power of the Holy Ghost, and the sweet influence of the Son to aid him; who has sanctification, regeneration, and consecration on his side—for this class of men, I repeat, it seems a much worse offense to commit adultery, sodomy, etc., than for a mere Infidel to deviate from the strictest propriety, when he has nothing to depend upon and help him save his own sinful nature and his own "total depravity"! For a wretched sinner to err is not, perhaps, strange, but for a saint who has experienced the joy of the New Jerusalem, and who has partaken of the manna of the heavenly world, to descend to the slums of filth, of vice and corruption, his crime is far less excusable. You may possibly look on the relative criminality of sins committed by Christians and Infidels in the same light in which another clergyman viewed it whom I heard of when a boy. He was asked what the difference was between a Christian's sinning and a sinner's sinning. "Oh," said he, in pious tones, "a sinner sins willingly and without protesting, but the Christian sins with a most gr-a-t-u-l-i-o-u-s reluctance!"

I admit that it is a foul, offensive narrative, but the guilt consists altogether in the commission of the crimes, and not in the exposure of them. Besides, believing the clergy to be dead weights and dead beats upon the body politic, I conceive it to be a part of my duty to expose to public gaze their hypocrisy, their villainy, and their unworthiness of reverence and esteem, and I give you the positive assurance that for every prominent Infidel who has been guilty of adultery and sexual improprieties, I can furnish the names of fifty—not common members of the churches, but the bright lights, the leaders, the men who spout most about "holiness." Let me resume the offensive recital.

Grafton Brown, one of the saints of the Carroll, M. E. church, seduced a daughter of Mr. Thomas Sellmon. He had a wife and eight children, but insisted that his wife had become too cold for him. His case required one warm and ardent.

Rev. James Bradley, a brilliant preacher of the Ironside Baptist denomination at Huntsville, Mo., seduced one of the church sisters and lived in adultery with her for five years, when the arrival of a little infant brought his guilt to light, and he suddenly had business that called him elsewhere. The girl and her relatives were left to mourn her sad fate.

Rev. Mr. Wolfe, Presbyterian, Brooklyn, N. Y., was placed under bonds to keep the peace, for knocking his wife down with an umbrella.

Rev. R. T. Green, of the English church at Ailsa Craig, Ont., was imprisoned for forging endorsements on a note.

Rev. John J. Thompson, Presbyterian, Washington City, was caught in his night-shirt crawling in the window of a sleeping-room where two young ladies slept. They made an outcry, when he threatened to shoot them if they were not still. He tried to get into bed with them. Members of his church tried to get him clear on the plea of insanity.

Rev. Levi S. Bettinger, in Baltimore county, Md., had placed in his charge a young lady to educate. He seduced her and then deserted her, but was allowed to retain his position.

Rev. A. J. Culver, of the Evangelical Association in Eastern Iowa, a good-looking man and a strong-voiced preacher, whose field of labor was in the moral vineyard of Lisbon, Iowa, he was so zealous in the cause of his Master that he was called a Lieutenant of Jesus. Being a single man, he engaged board with a widow who had a pretty and engaging daughter. It is not strange that Culver loved her, and he ought to have married her, for he was the father of a bouncing big boy of which she was the mother. Previous to the birth of the child she married a fine man in the neighborhood, a Mr. H—. When, soon after marriage the child was born, her husband asked her who was the father. She answered it was the Rev. Culver. He was arraigned before a council of clergymen; he was found guilty and expelled from his church. The conference, however, reinstated him in the holy calling of shepherd to the gentle lambs, and he is now delivering the bread of life to the sinners of Illinois. The girl swore to the paternity of the child before Peter Heller, Justice of the Peace. The husband, not wishing to raise any Culver stock, separated from his unfortunate wife and obtained a divorce from her. Thus her life was saddened and made wretched by the lusts of this pious man of God.

Rev. Mr. Speare, Mason, Ill., an intimate friend of a banker of that city, while the latter was busy with a customer, pocketed a roll of bank bills amounting to $1,000, took the train to Bloomington, deposited the money, and returned as if nothing had happened. He is now under $2,500 bonds to appear before the criminal court.

A colored preacher in Early county, Ga., was fond of watermelons. One night he strayed into the melon-patch of a neighbor, who, having been preyed upon, was on the watch. He fired upon the intruder and killed him on the spot. The colored reverend died with the fruit still in his mouth. Oh! water-melon-cholly affair.

Rev. T. M. Dawson, Presbyterian, San Francisco, Cal., was guilty of the prevailing infirmity—too much "true inwardness." His love for the sisters was too ardent.

Rev. Lorenzo Dow, presiding elder in Eastern Kentucky, son of a clergyman, grandson of a clergyman and namesake of a great clergyman, sent his wife to her father's without money, borrowed all the money he could from the brethren and eloped with a girl, a daughter of another clergyman, at Louisa, Ky. He used a great amount of duplicity and falsehood to carry out his foul designs. It cast a great gloom over the entire community. A particular feature of the case was that the father of the girl could not say much, for years before, when a clergyman, he played the same trick with another man's daughter. Thus they go.

Dr. Harlan, Methodist, in a Nebraska town, was driven from the pulpit for lying, vulgarly and defaming his brethren.

Rev. Alexander McKilvey, of Westfield, N. J., was deposed from the pulpit for criminal conduct.

Rev. R. Petteplace, of Lowell, Mass., was accused by his wife of committing adultery with the nurse-girl in their employ. An inquiry was instituted, when he confessed his guilt, and stepped down and out.

Rev. Wm. H. Lee, Jersey City, was guilty of grossly beating his wife, and was tried for the offense.

Rev. F. D. James, of Somerville, Mass., was guilty of forgery by placing other people's names to deeds and other documents.

Rev. William Henry Jones, pastor of Grace Episcopal Church, Toronto, was subjected to a trial upon fourteen different charges, among which were getting drunk, telling falsehoods, embezzling money, vulgar conversation and other unsightly offenses.

A clergyman of Oxford, England, was sentenced to twenty month's imprisonment for foully assaulting a girl of fourteen years of age whom he had but recently confirmed.

Rev. P. P. Wimberly, of Atchinson, Pa., started out on a grand begging campaign to raise money to pay the debts of his church; but he was overcome by the weakness of the flesh, and spent the money in sinful pleasures.

Rev. N. L. Phillips, Monticello, Iowa, of the United Brethren Church, was guilty of immoral conduct with sister Barnes, wife of Herbert Barnes. After playing a base game with the unsuspecting husband in obtaining money from him, the guilty ones eloped together. The villainous clergyman left a legal wife and children behind, whom he piously recommended to continue family worship and prayer.

Rev. Prof. Wm. F. Black, the leading clergyman in the Christian or Campbellite denomination in the West, and formerly president of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, fell from grace and was guilty of criminal conduct with Miss Corinne E. Voss, a gay and beautiful woman, daughter of a very wealthy lawyer and speculator. She started ostensibly to make a journey and visit some friends in Kansas, and by agreement he met her at Terre Haute and accompanied her to St. Louis, where they stopped over night at the Planter's Hotel, and passed themselves off as man and wife.

Rev. E. Hopkins, St. Johnsbury, Vt., was arrested on a charge of forgery, and was proved guilty.

Rev. Rudolph Weizerbeck, pastor of Bloomingdale German Lutheran Church, was arrested for defrauding the pension agency. When searched, two forged pension certificates were found upon his person.

Rev. Albert Rublete, Hoboken, N. J., was committed to prison for twenty days for fraudulent begging and intemperance.

Rev. Jerome D. Hopkins swindled the people of Brooklyn by falsely representing himself as poor, and as having a sister lying sick at Washington. In this way he raised considerable funds.

Rev. J. H. Foster, whose last field of uselessness was in the First Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., though talented, and prepossessing in appearance, and very popular with the sisters, turned out to be a bold, bad man—in fact, a regular wolf in sheep's clothing. It was proved that he had wives living to the number of five, and that he was a gambler and a dissolute person. He wore a most saintly countenance, but the Devil was too near his heart. He discreetly resigned his charge, and betook himself to other and more congenial fields of labor.

Rev. John H. Morris, who a portion of the time preached at the Passyunk Baptist Church in Philadelphia, proved himself to be a criminal of the most revolting character. In 1875 he lost his wife, and subsequently married her sister. Soon after that he adopted a little girl eight years of age, named Mary Rue, daughter of a widow, and it turned out that for a year the brute—worse than any brute—had been holding criminal relations with that small child. His wife caught him in bed with the child at two o'clock in the night, and in the criminal act. The girl subsequently confessed all about it to her mother, and stated that the pious man by intimidation and threats had subjected her to his vile uses. He was imprisoned for trial which has not yet taken place.

Rev. John C. Simpson, of Oregon, Mo., was convicted of illicit distilling, the jury finding him guilty on all five counts. He is fifty years of age, and has been preaching twenty years.

Elder Samuel H. McGhee, of the Christian or Campbellite denomination, whose last flock attended upon his ministrations at Ashton, Lee Co., Ill., had the weakness to fall in love with a pretty, intelligent young lady of his church, named Lorilla Paddock, and that he might take her to his bosom, he procured poison and administered it to his wife, who died in great suffering. His trial was held in Dixon, and the verdict of guilty was rendered against him. He is now working out his sentence of fourteen years at hard labor in the State prison of Illinois.

Rev. J. P. Roberts, Methodist, of Ulen, Wis., was subjected to a trial for lying and slander.

Rev. J. F. Leak, Methodist, at Troy, Kansas, an aged clergyman, who for many years has been looked upon as a saint of the first water, brought himself into great tribulation by making love to an interesting young lady of his flock, who weekly attended upon his ministrations and drank in the words of piety that fell from his lips. He wrote her a number of letters, and plead with her most earnestly to fly with him to England where, by the side of a beautiful lake, like Como, they could make a paradise of their own, and where the rude eyes of curiosity could never find them out. For some reason, they did not start for that lovely paradise; and an ugly feature of the interesting case is that the young lady has given birth to a child, and the dear pastor is in about as much trouble as he wishes to feel. The mishap is seriously regretted by all the faithful of the church, but such things seem to happen very frequently.

Rev. Mr. Keely, of Madison, was led into trouble by the bewitching airs of a pretty woman, named Clemmens.

Rev. John Moody, Cincinnati, was imprisoned for appropriating to his own use money that he had collected for building a church.

Rev. Dewitt Knowlton, Boltonville, was brought to great disgrace by the persistency with which a sister of the church demanded that he should acknowledge the paternity of her child. The affair cast a cloud over his otherwise fair name.

Rev. A. J. Warren, of the M. E. church, North Vernon, Ind., eloped with sister Stanton, carrying with them all the church and Sabbath-school funds of which he was possessed. He left a wife and four little children.

Rev. Mason Noble, of Sheffield, Mass., a popular Congregational clergyman, was formally charged with seduction by Miss Bella J. Clark, a former pupil of Westfield Normal School, and when she had been employed as a seamstress in the clergyman's family.

Rev. W. S. Crow, Hinsdale, Ill., by his unlawful intercourse with a deacon's family, succeeded in breaking it up and getting himself deposed from the pulpit.

Rev. Dominick McCaffray, of the Church of our Savior, Third avenue, this city, was accused by the pretty Mrs. Leavitt of his laying his hands upon her and kissing her when she called upon him in his study. He denied it, of course.

Rev. Martin Hoernlein, of Buffalo, was convicted of arson in the second degree for setting fire to his own house to obtain a large insurance he had placed upon the property.

Rev. R. W. Pearson, Baptist clergyman in Pittsburgh, had a sad time of it. Before a court of his own church he was proved guilty of lying, drunkenness and numerous adulteries. He had resided in various parts of the country and had sinned in all of them. He was emphatically what is familiarly called a "bad egg."

The case of John D. Lee, Mormon bishop, who was engaged in the Mountain Meadow massacre twenty years ago, and who was shot by United States authorities for his heinous crime, is fresh in the public memory. Although his hands had long been red (metaphorically speaking) with the blood of his helpless fellow-beings, he died full of confidence and love of Jesus and felt sure of going straight to him as soon as his breath left his body. He boasted at the hour of his death that he was not an infidel, but died a good Christian.

Abbe Beaugard, vicar of an important post in Paris, was in 1877, sentenced to fifteen years transportation for criminally assaulting two little girls and communicating to them a loathsome disease.

Rev. G. R. Williams, while preaching in Griggstown, N. Y., was engaged to marry a nice young lady of his congregation, when a former wife very inopportunistly put in an appearance and broke up the little arrangement. The clergyman soon found he had business that called him elsewhere.

Rev. Paul T. Valentine, Ph.D., and D.D., and LL.D. was tried and sentenced to ten years imprisonment by Recorder Hackett in General Sessions in this city, April, 1877, for the most revolting and despicable crimes in the entire criminal calendar—the corruption and vile use of little boys and girls under his charge in what he called a "College for Homeless Children," where he pretended to teach them useful employment and to fit them for the actual duties of life, when in reality he practiced the grossest crimes known to man. Nine witnesses testified in the most pointed manner against him. Recorder Hackett said the case was the most atrocious that had ever come to his knowledge during his long service in the criminal courts of this wicked city, and he was only sorry that the extreme penalty for the crimes was not death. He gave the culprit the full extent prescribed by the law—ten years imprisonment at hard labor.

Rev. Joseph Jones, a Baltimore Methodist clergyman, greatly gifted in revivals, got hold of a bequest of $50,000 which had been made to his church, and diverted it to his own benefit. He got involved, and when the crime was exposed he committed suicide.

Rev. E. J. Baird, a Richmond (Va.) Presbyterian clergyman, Secretary of the Presbyterian Publishing Committee, was tried for embezzling $22,000 of funds belonging to the Committee, and which he was unable to replace and of course was summarily deposed.

Rev. Leaven Fausette, of Port Huron, La., was hung for murder.

U. S. Senator Brownlow, of Tennessee, who was for many years a clergyman, as well as an editor and afterwards Governor of the State, in his book published some years ago, uses this language in reference to clergymen in the South: "I have no hesitancy in saying, as I now do, that the worst men who make tracks upon Southern soil are Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Episcopal clergymen, and at the head of them for mischief are the Methodists" (p. 187). "A majority of the clergymen have acted upon the principle that the kingdom of their divine master is of this world, and as a consequence many of them have embarked in fighting, lying, and drinking mean whiskey" (p. 190). "Here, as in all parts of the South, the worst class of men are preachers. They have done more to bring about the deplorable state of things existing in the country [referring to the war of the Rebellion] than any other class of men. And foremost in this work of mischief are the Methodist preachers. Brave in anticipation of war, and prone to denunciation on all occasions, even in the pulpit, they have been among the first to take to their heels" (p. 392).

To give some idea of the Catholic clergy, let me make some quotations from one who had excellent opportunities for knowing their habits and customs, Father John W. Gerdermann, ex-Catholic priest of St. Bonifacius Church in Philadelphia. After renouncing the hypocritical priest-life which he had led for ten years, in a lecture delivered to an immense audience in that city, in the summer of 1875, drew this faithful picture of the false-hearted fraternity he had forsaken:

"I come now to the last great blot on the character of the Roman clergy, which you will allow me to treat in a cursory manner out of respect to the audience I have the honor to address. Priests are not allowed to marry; would to God they were. They are called Fathers by the people, and unfortunately, with many it is not only a name but a sad reality; not the honored, hallowed name of father, but a name whispering of shame and a broken heart, if not a ruined family. Undoubtedly the young men who are ordained priests are generally pure, sincere, and good; but alas! the system of celibacy, at all times the bane of the Catholic ministry, too often ruins them. I spoke to a priest last year about this time, about getting married and leaving the Church. He called me a fool, and advised me not to leave the easy life of the priesthood, but to do like him and keep a mistress. I thanked him for his advice and told him I was no dog. Bishop Wood told me of more than one priest in his diocese whom he characterized as immoral, and thoroughly bad men, who to this day hold their offices. Marry, forsooth, in an honorable way, the priest is not allowed, but ruin a poor girl he may. It is better, the Pope teaches, for a priest to have two concubines, than marry one woman lawfully. Shame upon such morality! Shame upon the Church with such teaching!

"I repeatedly have heard good and sincere priests say it was a blessing the American people did not know the true character of the Roman priesthood, for if they did, they would sweep them out of the country, and I assure you if you should know them as I do, you would not consider the remark any too harsh. Firstly, they have an inordinate desire for money. The poor people are asked for money at all times and occasions. The more a man gives the better he is liked. He must pay every time he comes to church, and every time the priest comes to him. No matter how poor the family may be, how hard the man may work, how much the mother may slave, how poorly the children are clad, no matter whether the grocer is paid, the priest must have his dues. Baptisms, marriages, and funerals, must be paid for, and woe to the poor Catholic who offers a priest less than five dollars. Too much he can never give. Go to any Catholic church in this city on Sunday, and you hear something about money always. The more a priest returns to the bishop, for the seminary or other purposes, the higher he rises in the bishop's esteem. Provided a priest is sound on the money question his other qualities are of minor importance. I know over five hundred priests and sixty bishops in this country; I have frequently been in priests' and bishops' company, and whenever the question came on the congregations they never asked, 'How are your people? are they temperate? faithful in attendance at church? do they raise their children well?' but always, 'How much pew-rents do you get?' 'What do your collections amount to?' 'What do you get at Christmas?' 'What are your fees for baptism and marriage?' and if the sums did not seem large enough, you would hear a 'Damn it, that's little.' I know priests who have been scarce ten years in the priesthood and who own from $20,000 to $40,000. And the poor people who give are never told where the money goes to. No priest knows what the bishop owns. No congregation hears what a priest receives nor how it is spent. And how is it spent? A good deal of it in gambling, cigars, grand dinners, and good drinks. Priests are, without doubt, the best livers in the country. Whenever you meet a company of priests, be it on Sunday or week day, night or day time, you nearly always find them at a game of euchre, and not for mere pastime, but for money. I often saw, especially Irish priests, play for quarters, halves, and a dollar a game. The German priests were generally content with a game for ten cents. Then come the grand dinners, served in the most approved style, for which the good people foot the bill. Those dinners are not gotten up on a small scale, either, but cost from $500 to $2,500. The bishop gives generally three or four grand dinners a year, when the priests are invited, and God knows how many on a smaller scale. Priests give their dinners on stated occasions—at the funeral of a priest, and the day of a corner-stone laying, or at the dedication of a new church, and annually on the last day of the forty hours. The poor people are in at their prayers, while the good fathers are enjoying their terrapin, canvas-back, and champagne.

"But the great curse of the priesthood in this country is the vice of drunkenness. Of the extent of this vice I can give you no adequate idea. When priests meet, the first and the last thing is a drink; early in the morning and late at night, the whiskey-bottle is their consolation. If you would not offer whiskey and wine—and plenty of it, to your visitors, you would soon be spotted and cried down as a fool. Bishop Wood, who was a frequent visitor at my house, said he did not want any 'Teutonic acid,' meaning good German wine, but insisted on having champagne. And let me show you that his capacity is rather a large one. I was traveling with him in Schuylkill county, three or four weeks before I left the Church, and I will now give you his day's work. Early that morning he confirmed in the German church at St. Clair. After having administered confirmation, a good breakfast was spread before him. He did not touch it but asked for a bottle of wine. Good Father Froude was rather surprised, and said: 'Hullo! wine for breakfast!' After the wine was finished we went to the English church. There the bishop complained of the poor wine of Father Froude, and asked for and received a bottle of champagne. After he had given confirmation there, a few glasses of lager beer were enjoyed. Then came dinner, and a good one it was, and he partook freely of beer, wine, champagne, and brandy to wash it down. Before we left St. Clair for Mahony Plain, on the Superintendent's special car, a few more bottles of champagne were opened and dispatched by him and the priests present. Scarcely had we reached Father O'Connor's house when he asked for goat-milk punch, of which he took two or three glasses, afterward he followed it with a few glasses of champagne. Still he got through with confirming about two hundred people, only complaining of not being quite well; the dinner of terrapin, pheasants, and other choice things served afterward, he did not enjoy, and he went to bed, where I brought to him the last glass of champagne after eleven o'clock. When you hear that a bishop can do so much in that line, and still be able to give confirmation, you will not be surprised to hear that bills for liquors and wines are large with a priest who often enjoys his visits. To be serious, the greater part of the priests who have died in this diocese since I was ordained died of too much drink, and many priests are serving there now who more than once suffered from delirium tremens.

"To see priests drunk in their houses is bad enough, but how much worse, how much more disgraceful is it for them to be drunk in the pulpit and at the altar! Even in September last, I heard a sermon preached at the close of the forty hours' devotion, one of the most solemn occasions in the Catholic Church, by a priest when under the influence of liquor. That man arrived about two o'clock in the afternoon, completely drunk. He slept off, it is true, partly the effects of his debauch, still, when he preached at seven o'clock, he was anything but sober. After the ceremonies were over, he re-commenced his potations, mixing whiskey, beer, wine, and champagne, till he fell on the floor beastly drunk. That man is in the mission to-day, pastor of a large congregation, although it is well known that not a week passes in which he is not drunk once or twice. On another occasion, a priest—who now rests in a drunkard's grave—was so completely drunk when carrying the wafer in procession through his church, that I and another priest who acted as deacons, had to support him to keep him from falling. I might adduce many more instances of the fearful intemperance as prevailing among the Roman clergy; but I suppose enough has been said to convince you that temperance is a virtue almost unknown among them."

The lesson to be learned from all this clerical sinfulness and crime is, that the claim that the religion of Jesus is a protection or safeguard against licentiousness and corruption, is wholly untrue, for the proof is clear that there is no class of men more liable to yield to the allurements of carnal pleasures than the clergy. So far from their religion being a safeguard against the weaknesses of human nature, it is the means of exposing them to the blandishments and temptations which the good sisters so frequently lay in their way. If they were working in the fields—plowing and hoeing—or in the shops at planing and filing, they would be far less liable to be overcome by temptations than by visiting the admiring and bewitching sisters in the absence of their husbands, and conversing with them on the subject of "true inwardness."

You are incorrect when you state that sinning clergymen are always sought out by the Church and deposed as soon as found to be engaged in wrong doing. The truth often is the opposite of this. Their crimes are many times hushed up and smothered, and concealed from the public gaze as long as possible, and very often after the "guide" has been fully exposed, he has removed to some other locality and engaged again in preaching with as much fervency and mock-sanctity as ever.

What if, as you would gladly show, Goethe was a little wild in his younger days, and in mature life lived with a woman—as he honestly believed he had a right to do—whom no priest had declared to be bone of his bone? What if the love between Rousseau and Madame de Warrens was not sanctioned by the Church? What if Chesterfield was a man of the world? What if somebody, in three lines, has accused Voltaire of untruthfulness? What if Paine did act the part of friend toward Madame Bonnevillie? What if John Stuart Mill was a sincere friend to a lady he had reason to esteem? What if Shelley, in the days of his boyhood, did contract a union which he afterwards found uncongenial and impracticable? These are events that are occurring in the world every day of our lives, and though you place the worst possible construction upon them that your enmity can prompt, they are but "a drop in the bucket" when compared with the peccadilloes, adulteries, and crimes of priests and preachers who profess to be sons of God, and to have light and guidance superior to men of the world. As infidels, we have no saints; we make no boast of holiness or heavenly-mindedness. Our highest object is to discharge our duties to our fellow-men, doing naught to infringe upon the rights and prerogatives of others. We have left to the priestly class the entire business of sainthood; yielded to them the monopoly of divine favor and aid, and a pretty mess indeed they have made of it. They have made the terms "men of God" and "shepherds of the flock" a reproach among mankind.

You would fain have it that these sensual priests in their lewd practices have violated the instructions of the Bible. Not so. They have simply followed the example of the favorites of the Bible God. They have done nothing more than follow the common practices with the old patriarchs and favored kings of God's chosen people.

In passing, let me quote a passage from a tribute to John Stuart Mill by Moncure D. Conway: "There was blended in his intellectual work other that required a yet higher nature, work that needed preponderating sensibilities, a deep human sympathy, a rich emotional nature. I have said Mr. Mill always felt what he thought—and whenever he spoke, the blood in his cheeks spoke too. But there were two themes only upon which, as he spoke, his mind caught flame and rose into passionate emotion. One of them was when, before emancipation had taken place in America, he saw humanity enslaved and a Republic fettered by the same chain it had bound around the negro. The other was when he saw women struggling to break the galling political and social chains, inherited from ancients, from a barbarous past. Into their cause he entered with an enthusiasm which brought again the age of chivalry, and the brave efforts he made to secure woman from hereditary wrong made him in our prosaic time the figure of St. George, rescuing the maiden from the dragon. The world has felt a silent sympathy, as in the French town he sat, studied, wrote, at a window overlooking the grave that held that treasure of his soul, beside whom he now reposes; but it has admired as it saw this personal devotion to one noble woman consecrating him to the cause of all her sisters. Ah, ye women, who amid many buffets and sneers are striving to attain a truer position and larger life, to help man raise the suffering world to a higher plane—ye women, what a friend have you lost! Daughters of England, weep not for him, but weep for yourselves and for your children" (Memorial Discourse, pp. 20, 21). Well would it be for our race if the world could produce more men equal in virtue and intelligence to John Stuart Mill. If twenty-five per cent. of your seventy thousand clergymen in the United States were equal to him, what a blessing it would be to our country! It is better to be one such man than a thousand flash-in-the-Pan-Presbyterian Councils of ministers, with their forty-nine modifications and varieties.

In regard to Shelley, in justice to his memory, I will add to what I have said, that he did not forsake his first wife. He made a settlement upon her, corresponded with her during his travels, called upon her on his return, and did all in his power to render her condition comfortable. Their separation was not the cause of her suicide. She indulged in peculiar notions of love which her spinster sister and her father strongly condemned, and he turned her from his door. In a fit of grief at her treatment, she threw herself into the river. Shelley was greatly grieved in consequence. His second marriage was considerably hastened by the advice of Mr. Godwin, father of his second wife (see Keegan Paul's Letters and Peacock on Shelley, as given in the World of July 15, 1877).

You claim to be unable to find anything in Thiers or Chambers indicating that Robespierre was a Christian. I am not particularly anxious to show him to have been a Christian, but that while he was the head and front of the Reign of Terror he assuredly was not an anti-religionist, but a wild political leader, who came to the surface under a peculiar combination of circumstances, and was not a man really so bad at heart as many of his harsh and tyrannical acts would indicate. The French Revolution was brought about by the tyranny and corruptions of the royal family, the nobles, and the clergy. Michelet states the case clearly, thus: "The clergy had so well kept and augmented the property of the poor, that at length it comprised one-fifth of the lands of the Kingdom" (Lewes' Life of Robespierre). The remainder was in the hands of the nobles. It is not strange that, under this state of things, all the land and wealth of the nation engrossed by the nobles and the priesthood, the oppressed masses should revolt. It was but human nature. Even a worm, when trod upon, will turn and show resentment. We have recently had in our own country sad proofs of this tendency. We have seen the working classes uniting in mobs and recklessly destroying millions of dollars' worth of property. It was because they were without employment and were suffering for want of necessary food. It was not because they are Infidels, or unbelievers in the prevailing system of religion. It was the rebellion of human nature against oppression. It was the same in the French Revolution, and it is not strange in the consequent reaction that ensued that excesses were committed. It was not because the actors in the fearful tragedy were unbelievers or Free-thinkers, and it is very unfair in you and your Christian friends to be continually making that false charge. True, the Goddess of Reason was set up by a clique to be worshiped, but, in the ruling frenzy of the hour, Reason was worshiped and followed very indifferently.

As to Robespierre's political and theological character, we can probably get as clear a view of it from his own words as from any other source. "It is true," said he, "that our most dangerous enemies are the impure remnants of the race of our tyrants. I vote in my heart that the race of tyrants disappear from the earth; but can I shut my eyes to the state of my country so completely as to believe that this event would suffice to extinguish the flames of those conspiracies that are consuming us. . . . Is it true another cause of our calamities is fanaticism? Fanaticism; it is dying; nay, I may say it is dead. In directing, for some days past, all our energies against it, are we not diverting our attention from real dangers?" Grappling at once with the question of Religion, Robespierre thus proceeded: "Let citizens, animated by a firm zeal, deposit on the altar of the country the useless and pompous monuments of superstition, that they be rendered subservient to the triumphs of liberty; the country and reason smile at these offerings; but what right have aristocracy and hypocrisy to mingle their influence with civism? What right have men hitherto unknown in the career of the Revolution to seek amidst all these events the means of usurping a false popularity, of hurrying the very patriots into false measures, and of throwing disturbance and discord among us? What right have they to violate the liberty of religion in the name of liberty, and to attack fanaticism? What right have they to make the solemn homage paid to pure truth degenerate into wearisome and ridiculous farces?"

It has been supposed that in accepting the civic offerings, the Convention has proscribed the Catholic worship. No, the Convention has taken no such step, and never will take it. Its intention is to uphold the liberty of worship which it has proclaimed, and to suppress at the same time all those who shall abuse it to disturb public order. It will not allow the peaceful ministers of the different religions to be persecuted, and it will punish them severely whenever they shall dare to avail themselves of their functions to mislead the citizens, or to arm prejudice or royalism against the republic. . . . There are men who would fain go further, who upon the pretext of destroying superstition, would fain make a sort of religion of Atheism itself. Every philosopher, every individual, is at liberty to adopt on that subject what opinion he pleases; whoever would make a crime of this is a madman; but the public man, the legislator, would be a hundred times more insane who should adopt such a system. The National Convention abhors it. The Convention is not a maker of books and of systems. It is a political and popular body. Atheism is aristocratic. The idea of a great Being, who watches over oppressed innocence, and who punishes triumphant guilt is quite popular. The people, the unfortunate, applaud me. If there are any who censure me, they must belong to the rich and to the guilty. I have been from my college years a very indifferent Catholic; but shall never be a cold friend, or an unfaithful defender of humanity. I am on that account only the more attached to the moral and political ideas which I have here expounded to you. If God did not exist, it would behoove man to invent him" (Thiers' French Revolution, vol. ii, pp. 375, 376). I have thus quoted this religious politician at some length to give a fair presentation of his views and motives, deeming this fairer than merely to quote a line or two here and there as is your style.

On page 380, vol. ii, Thiers thus speaks: "The policy of Robespierre and the Government was well known. The energy with which this policy had been manifested intimidated the restless promoters of the new worship, and they began to think of retracting and of retracing their steps. . . . The Convention declared on its part that it had never intended by its decrees to shackle religious liberty, and it forbade the plate still remaining in the churches to be touched, since the exchequer had no further need of that kind of aid. From that day the indecent farces performed by the people ceased in Paris, and the ceremonies of the worship of Reason, which had afforded them so much amusement, were abolished."

Touching Robespierre's religious sentiments, I will quote a few passages from Lewes' Life of that individual: "I attribute it to his sincere religious convictions, rather than to any political foresight, such as Michelet discerns, that he should have relied upon the lower clergy (a powerful body of 80,000 priests) as well as the Jacobins for his support" (p. 148). "On the 16th of June he asked the Assembly to provide for the subsistence of aged ecclesiastics who had no benefices or pensions" (p. 148). He thus quotes Robespierre's words: "How could I be equal to struggles which are above human strength, if I had not elevated my soul to God" (p. 237). French journalists of that period thus speak of Robespierre: "He is a kind of priest who has his devotees, his Marys and his Magdalens." "He has all the characteristics of a founder of religion; he has a reputation for sanctity." "Robespierre is a priest, and never will be any thing else." "He is a priest who wishes to become a God." "On the 7th of May, 1794, when in the height of his power, Robespierre proposed the following decree: 'Article I.—The French people recognize the existence of the Supreme Being and the immortality of the soul. Article II.—They acknowledge that the worship of the Supreme Being is one of the duties of man' (Thiers', vol. iii, p. 13). By these extracts it is clear that Robespierre was no Freethinker or Infidel. He was an ardent religionist, and almost a Christian. He acknowledged himself a Catholic, though an "indifferent" one.

Had it been desirable on your part to claim Robespierre as a Christian, you have far more reason for doing so than for several whom you have claimed. He was far more religious—far more a believer in the dogmas of Christianity—than were Franklin, Washington, or Jefferson.

Of course, there were Freethinkers in those days, and many of them were active in the measures that characterized the time, but they suffered quite as severely from the work of the guillotine as any class, and Thomas Paine escaped by the merest chance. In the National Convention, which ordered and sanctioned so many executions, a majority were believers in Christianity. By this it is easy to see how unjust and untruthful is your effort to throw the odium of the wild conduct of those in power upon the unbelievers. To show the truth of the whole business I have hardly occupied too much space. This dishonest charge against the opposers of the theological dogmas of that era has so often been made by your sort of people that it is time the lie was nailed to the mast.

I made no special effort to convict the Jews of cannibalism, but merely called attention to such texts in the Bible as went to show that they not only practiced human sacrifice but cannibalism also. I will also add that it has been urged by writers more distinguished than either of us that the Bible does show that the Jews were cannibals. Moses told them that unless they observed his ceremonies they should not only have the itch, but that mothers should eat their children. Ezekiel makes a similar threat in chapter xxxix. He tells them that God will not only cause them to eat the horses of their enemies, but the horsemen and the rest of the warriors. Voltaire asked the question: "Why should not the Jews have been cannibals? It was the only thing wanting to make the people of God the most abominable people upon earth." That the Jews did eat human bodies at the time of the siege of Jerusalem we have the authority of Josephus. I give, however, the facts for what they are worth, and it must be admitted that the texts of Scripture quoted, and several others, squint very strongly of Hebrew cannibalism. That they were a race of semi-barbarians I have sufficiently shown, and that Herodotus did not mention them when writing his history of Syria, of which Palestine formed a part, is most clear. If he mentioned it at all it would have been when he was writing his account of what he saw when in that country. It is well known that some of his histories have been lost, but his history of Syria was not one of them. His writings relative to Rome might have been among the lost books.

Your attempt to show that Infidels have died recanting and in terror is a complete failure. It requires but little talent to repeat that stale slander about Voltaire's recantation. Why do you not prove it and thus get the thousand dollars in gold which Col. Ingersoll has offered to any man who will prove it. The N. Y. Observer, the old war-horse of Presbyterianism, it is said, has accepted the challenge and will attempt to prove that Voltaire did recant. Perhaps you can enter into partnership with the Observer and get at least half the money. A similar amount was offered by the same party if it is proved that Thomas Paine recanted on his death-bed. Here is an excellent opportunity for you to make another thousand dollars in gold. Col. Ingersoll is good for the promises he makes, and two thousand dollars would be a very comfortable sum to make these hard times, especially if it can be done easily and in the interest of a God who would be greatly relieved and glorified thereby. Remember, though, the matter must be proved. The stale slanders and falsehoods of Christian clergymen, which for nearly fourscore years have been peddled out from the pulpit for the delectation of the credulous faithful ones of the flock will not answer the purpose. It must be truth and not lies.

You do injustice to the memory of Hume by attempting to show that he died ignobly and improperly. What a deck of cards in his hand could amount to, more than any other pasteboard, is not very clear. They might have served his purpose equally as well as a prayer-book, a catechism, a confession of faith, or even a Testament. The insinuation which you throw out is what I object to. Perhaps he should have had a copy of your "Hell and Damnation" in his hand. No doubt the mind of the dying man would have been wonderfully cheered by its soothing tone. Hume died like a man and a philosopher. In the sequel to his Autobiography is a letter written by Dr. Adam Smith, author of "The Wealth of Nations," addressed to William Strathan Esq., giving an account of the last moments of Hume. In this letter Dr. Smith gives a copy of one which he received from Dr. Black, Hume's physician and friend, the day after Hume's death, as follows: "EDINBURGH, Aug. 26, 1776. Dear Sir: Yesterday, about four o'clock, Mr. Hume expired. The near approach of his death became evident in the night between Thursday and Friday, when his disease became excessive and soon weakened him so much that he could not rise out of bed. He continued to the last perfectly sensible, and free from much pain or feelings of distress. He never dropped the smallest expression of impatience, but when he had occasion to speak to the people about him, he always did it with affection and tenderness."

When he became very weak, it cost him a great effort to speak, and he died in such a happy composure of mind that nothing could exceed it." Dr. Adam Smith closed his letter in these words: "Upon the whole, I have always considered him, both in his life-time, and since his death, as approaching as near to the ideal of the perfectly wise and virtuous man as perhaps the nature of human frailty will admit." In the face of such testimony as this, I will submit it to yourself and to our numerous readers, whether insinuation about the "deck of cards" is not simply contemptible.

You do nearly equal injustice to the memory of Thomas Hobbes, by attempting to show that he died an unhappy death, by saying "he contemplated the inevitable with trepidation." Lord Clarendon describes the personal character of Hobbes as "one for whom he always had a great esteem as a man, who besides his eminent parts of learning and knowledge, hath always been looked upon as a man of propriety, and a life free from scandal," and thus he died. Collins, in his Biography of Hobbes, thus explains his natural timidity of character: "He was naturally of a timid disposition; this was the result of an accident which caused his premature birth, and being besides of a reserved character, he was ill-fitted to meet the physical rebuffs of the world. It is said he was so afraid of his personal safety that he objected to being left alone in an empty house; this charge is to some extent true, but we must look to the mitigating circumstances of the case. He was a feeble man, turned the age of three score and ten, with all the clergy of England hounding on their dupes to murder the old philosopher because he had exposed their dogmas. It was but a few years before that Protestants and Papists complimented each other's religion by burning those which were the weakest, and long after Hobbes' death, Protestants murdered, ruined, disgraced and placed in the pillory Dissenters and Catholics alike, and Thomas Hobbes had positive proof that it was the intention of the Church of England to burn him alive at the stake, a martyr for his opinions. This, then, was a sufficient justification for Hobbes feeling afraid, and instead of its being thrown out as a taunt at this illustrious Freethinker, it is a standing stigma on those who would reëact the tragedy of persecution, if public sentiment would allow it" (page 6).

It has little connection with the subject under discussion, how Robespierre acted when he was arrested at the Hotel de Ville, and whether he attempted suicide; whether Henriot got drunk; whether Los Basas shot himself with a pistol; whether Caution cut his bosom with a knife, and whether St. Just begged his comrades to shoot him. These were not known or distinguished as Freethinkers, and neither of them acted in the way named because they recanted Infidelity. If you have not better proofs of Infidels recanting their views upon their death-beds, your case is weak indeed, and I would advise you as a friend to never make the charge again.

Why did you not represent Edward Gibbon, who has been classed as an Infidel, as having died carousing, gambling, cursing, or trembling with terror? I should, however, be inclined to take the statement of Lord Shaftesbury, the confidential friend of Gibbon, as given in the sequel to the autobiography of the latter. He wrote as follows: "To the last he [Gibbon] preserved his senses, and when he could no longer speak, his servant having asked him a question, he made a sign to him that he understood him. He was quiet, tranquil, and did not stir; his eyes half shut. About a quarter of an hour before one he ceased to breathe. The valet de chambre observed that Mr. Gibbon did not, at any time, evince the least sign of alarm or apprehension of death."

The untruthfulness of Christian representations relative to the death of Infidels may be instanced in the attempt to cast insinuations upon the death of Mirabeau, the Atheist, by the Rev. J. P. Newman who put it in this way: "The dying words of Mirabeau must be the dying words of every man who relies upon science rather than religion—'Cover me with flowers, banquet me with music, delight me with perfume, for to die is to take a leap in the dark.'" In the American Cyclopaedia it is narrated in this way: "After a night of terrible suffering, at the dawn of day he addressed Cabanis, his physician, 'My friend, I shall die to-day. When one has come to such a juncture there remains only one thing to do, that is to be perfumed, crowned with flowers, and surrounded with music, in order to enter sweetly into that slumber from which there is no awakening.' He ordered his bed to be brought near the window, and looked with rapture on the brightness of the sun and the freshness of the garden. His death was mourned by a whole nation. Every one felt that the ruling Spirit of the Revolution had passed away." The reverend gentleman's version had just enough truth in it to enable one to determine positively the falsity of the very point he wished to emphasize, namely, the "leap in the dark." It is the dishonest effort of Christian clergymen to make it appear that unbelievers die terrible deaths; and you are no exception to the rule. But if you fail to make out a case, could these unbelievers at the hour of death be induced to believe for a moment your delightful doctrine of Hell and Damnation, it might enable you to talk with more truth about the terror in which you would gladly make it appear that they have died.

Your quotation of the words of Paul as being his dying words are hardly honestly quoted. You know very well that he was not dying when he made those utterances, but was simply writing a letter to his friend Timothy, and might have been years from the hour of death. When he really did breathe his last he may have been as full of terror as was the founder of Christianity himself when he was forced to face the King of Terrors. Many zealous Christians at the time of death might truthfully have said: "I have fought the bloody fight; I have finished my murderous course; I have caused many poor heretics to bite the dust. I have kept the faith that our Church proclaims, and put to death scores of those who presumed to deny it. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of unrighteousness, or a garment of terrible damnation, which I have justly earned."

Brother Humphrey, you will have to try again before you can make it appear that the deaths of Infidels will not compare favorably with those of Christians.

You are courteous enough to speak of D'Holbach as having "grunted under the burden of showing that Atheism furnished the strongest motives for virtue and justice." Would you represent him as a hog, that he should "grunt"? Let me quote from his works a few specimens of his grunts, that it may be seen whether he grunted well or not: "Be just, because equity is the support of human society. Be good, because goodness connects all hearts in adamant-bonds. Be indulgent, because, feeble thyself, thou livest with beings who partake of thy weakness. Be gentle, because mildness attracts attention. Be thankful, because gratitude feeds benevolence, nourishes generosity. Be modest, because haughtiness is disgusting to beings at all times well with themselves. Forgive injuries, because revenge perpetuates hatred. Do good to him who injures thee, in order to show thyself more noble than he is; to make a friend of him who was once thine enemy. Be reserved in thy demeanor, temperate in thy enjoyment, chaste in thy pleasures, because voluptuousness begets weariness, intemperance engenders disease, froward manners are revolting; excess at all times relaxes the springs of thy machine, will ultimately destroy thy being, and render thee hateful to thyself and contemptible to others."

In short, be a man; be a sensible, rational being; be a faithful husband, a tender father, an equitable master, a zealous citizen. Labor to serve thy country by thy prowess, by thy talents, by thy industry; above all, by thy virtues. Participate with thine associates those gifts which nature has bestowed upon thee. Diffuse happiness among thy fellow-mortals; inspire thy fellow-citizens with content. Spread joy over all those who approach thee, that the sphere of their actions, enlivened by thy kindness, illumined by benevolence, may react upon thyself. Be assured that the man who makes others happy cannot himself be miserable. . . . A life so spent will each moment be marked by the serenity of thine own mind; by the affections of the beings who environ thee, will enable thee to rise, a contented, satisfied guest, from the general feast, conduct thee gently down the declivity of life, lead thee peaceably to the period of thy days, for die thou must; but already thou wilt survive thyself in thought; thou wilt always live in the memory of thy friends; in the grateful recollections of those beings whose comforts have been augmented by thy friendly attentions; the virtues will beforehand have erected to thy form an imperishable monument. If Heaven occupied itself with thee, it would feel satisfied with thy conduct when it shall thus have contented the earth" (System of Nature, p. 234). I could continue "grunts" as good as those to fill hundreds of ordinary pages. It strikes me that Jesus, Peter, or Paul never "grunted" out much better or more sensible moral instructions than these. Seriously, my friend, do you not think you belittle yourself and injure your cause by calling such beautiful sentiments "grunts"?

I perceive that you are anxious to extricate your patron saint, Calvin, from the very unenviable reputation which he enjoys. You ring the changes on "Calvin burned Servetus" with consummate skill, but I am sorry for you that you are unable to relieve him from the disgraceful dilemma in which history places him. I see that honesty forces you to admit nearly all I claimed against him: 1. That Calvin believed in burning heretics—that is, those who did not square their theological lines according to his standard; 2. That his followers and co-reformers entertained the same views; 3. That Calvin instigated the arrest of Servetus. You are quite right in confessing that the transaction was a dark blot on the character of Calvin. The facts are, Calvin not only caused the arrest of Servetus, but he urged on the trial. The accusation was in his own handwriting. He was at the head of the Theocracy, or Council, of two hundred, and it is idle to claim that he could not have prevented the execution. Calvin and Servetus were enemies, and when Calvin had the latter in his power he was the last man to loosen his grasp.

Ingersoll describes the character of Calvin so graphically and forcibly, in connection with this affair and others, that I cannot refrain from quoting him: "This man [Calvin] forged five fetters for the brain. These fetters he called points. That is to say, predestination, particular redemption, total depravity, irresistible grace, and the perseverance of the saints. About the neck of each follower he put a collar bristling with these five points. The presence of all these points on the collar is still the test of orthodoxy in the Church he founded. This man when in the flush of youth was elected to the office of preacher in Geneva. He at once, in unison with Farel, drew up a condensed statement of the Presbyterian doctrine, and all citizens of Geneva, on pain of banishment, were compelled to take an oath that they believed this statement. Of this proceeding Calvin very innocently remarked that it produced great satisfaction. A man named Caroli had the audacity to dispute with Calvin. For this outrage he was banished."

"To show you what great subjects occupied the attention of Calvin, it is only necessary to state that he furiously discussed the question as to whether the sacramental bread should be leavened or unleavened. He drew up laws regulating the cut of the citizens' clothes and prescribing their diet, and all those whose garments were not in the Calvin fashion were refused the sacrament. At last the people becoming tired of this petty theological tyranny, banished Calvin. In a few years, however, he was recalled, and received with great enthusiasm. After this he was supreme, and the will of Calvin became the law of Geneva. Under this benign administration James Gruet was beheaded because he had written some profane verses. The slightest word against Calvin or his absurd doctrines were punished as a crime."

"In 1553 a man was tried at Vienne by the Catholic Church for heresy. He was convicted and sentenced to death by burning. It was apparently his good fortune to escape. Pursued by the sleuth-hounds of intolerance, he fled to Geneva for protection. A dove flying from hawks sought safety in the nest of a vulture. This fugitive from the cruelty of Rome asked shelter from Calvin, who had written a book in favor of religious toleration. Servetus had forgotten that this book was written by Calvin when in the minority; that it was written in weakness to be forgotten in power; that it was produced by fear instead of principle. He did not know that Calvin had caused his arrest at Vienne, in France, and had sent a copy of his work, which was claimed to be blasphemous, to the archbishop. He did not then know that the Protestant Calvin was acting as one of the detectives of the Catholic Church, and had been instrumental in proving his conviction for heresy. Ignorant of this unspeakable infamy, he put himself in the power of this very Calvin. The maker of the Presbyterian creed caused the fugitive Servetus to be arrested for blasphemy. He was tried, Calvin was his accuser. He was convicted and condemned to death by fire. On the morning of the fatal day, Calvin saw him, and Servetus, the victim asked forgiveness of Calvin, the murderer. Servetus was bound to the stake and the fagots were lighted. The wind carried the flames somewhat away from his body, so that he slowly roasted for hours. Vainly he implored a speedy death. At last the flames climbed around his form; through smoke and fire his murderers saw a white, heroic face. And then they watched until a man became a charred and shriveled mass."

"Liberty was banished from Geneva, and nothing but Presbyterianism was left. Honor, justice, mercy, reason and charity were all exiled; but the five points of predestination, particular redemption, irresistible grace, total depravity and the certain perseverance of the saints remained instead. Calvin founded a little theocracy, modeled after the Old Testament, and succeeded in erecting the most detestable government that ever existed, except the one from which it was copied."

"Against all this intolerance one man, a minister, raised his voice. The name of this man should never be forgotten. It was Castellio. This brave man had the goodness and the courage to declare the innocence of honest error. He was the first of the so-called reformers to take this noble ground. I wish I had the genius to pay a tribute to his memory. Perhaps it would be impossible to pay him a grander compliment than to say, Castellio was in all things the opposite of Calvin. To plead for the right of individual judgment was considered as a crime, and Castellio was driven from Geneva by John Calvia. By him he was denounced as a child of the Devil, as a dog of Satan, as a beast from hell, and as one who, by this horrid blasphemy of the innocence of honest error, crucified Christ afresh, and by him he was pursued until rescued by the hand of death."

"Upon the name of Castellio, Calvin heaped every epithet, until his malice was satisfied and his imagination exhausted. It is impossible to conceive how human nature can become so frightfully perverted as to pursue a fellow-man with the malignity of a fiend, simply because he is good, just and generous."

"Calvin was of a pallid, bloodless complexion, thin, sickly, irritable, gloomy, impatient, egotistic, tyrannical, heartless and infamous. He was a strange compound of revengeful morality, malicious forgiveness, ferocious charity, egotistic humility, and a kind of hellish justice. In other words, he was as near like the God of the Old Testament as his health permitted."

"The best thing, however, about the Presbyterians of Geneva was, that they denied the power of the Pope, and the best thing about the Pope was, that he was not a Presbyterian."

"The doctrines of Calvin spread rapidly and were eagerly accepted by multitudes on the Continent; but Scotland in a few years became the real fortress of Presbyterianism. The Scotch succeeded in establishing the kind of theocracy that flourished in Geneva. The clergy took possession and control of everybody and everything. It is impossible to exaggerate the mental degradation, the abject superstition of the people of Scotland during the reign of Presbyterianism. Heretics were hunted and devoured as though they had been wild beasts. The gloomy insanity of Presbyterianism took possession of a great majority of the people. They regarded their ministers as the Jews did Moses and Aaron. They believed they were the special agents of God, and that whatever they bound in Scotland would be bound in Heaven. There was not one particle of intellectual freedom. No man was allowed to differ with the Church or to even contradict a priest. Had Presbyterianism maintained its ascendancy, Scotland would have been peopled by savages to-day."

It relieves Calvin of none of the odium resting upon his name to say that the cantons of Berne, Zurich, Bale, and Schaffhausen concurred in the action of Geneva, and that Melancthon, Beza, Farel, Bucer, Oecolampadius, Zuingli, Viret, Peter Martyr, Bullinger, Turretin, and Co., approved of his damnable and murderous treatment of poor Servetus. It is a terrible commentary on their improved religion that they should be in favor of burning people to death for opinion's sake. It will hardly do to attribute it to their having recently left the Mother Church. The child is no better than the parent, and it was not until the higher and ennobling influences of civilization had time to produce their better results that the desire to burn those who did not graduate their belief according to the Calvinistic standard left the hearts of Protestants.

As your very scathing remarks about "callow striplings that never saw a life of Calvin" evidently were not aimed at myself, I will let them pass unnoticed. I presume you will allow that I am not "callow." Your characteristic observations also about "long hair, weird looks, spectacles, funny clothes, and other eccentricities, all put on," etc., may pass unnoticed. I presume you did not mean them as personal insinuations. What you were driving at, however, I am at a loss to decide.

You advertise the fact that I have presented a copy of Paine's Works to the library of the Cooper Institute. Yes, when you previously remarked that a copy of his works was not in that noble institution, and when I saw that you were endeavoring to argue from that fact that Mr. Cooper did not believe in Paine's writings, I resolved to test the correctness of your conclusions, and to remove the stigma that the Cooper Institute Library did not contain a copy of Paine's Great Works. I accordingly presented it with a copy of Paine's Works and a copy of Lord Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," a work equally as radical as Paine's writings. I am pleased to say that the volumes were kindly accepted, and I have in my possession a letter which I prize very highly, acknowledging the receipt of the two books, and bearing the signature of the venerable and excellent Peter Cooper himself. I doubt not that a copy of the revised and enlarged "Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," which will soon be issued, and a copy of the "Champions of the Church" will be as graciously accepted. I here venture the prediction that Peter Cooper will value both works more highly than you will. Let me ask you, now, whether you are willing to accept the force of your arguments. You strongly took the position that there was not a copy of Paine's Works in that library because Mr. Cooper did not believe in Paine's writings. Now that Mr. Cooper has graciously accepted these works, with others equally destructive to the dogmas upon which your Church is founded, is it not proof positive that he believes them? (!) If your arguments are worth a cent, this is the only conclusion that can be reached. If you refuse to acknowledge the corn, it will be an additional proof of your sophistry and want of candor.

You again refer to the disintegrating character of Infidelity, and aim to make a point in your own favor in that direction. Now, I will humor you to this extent: so far as Christianity is aggregating or unifying, binding a heterogeneous conglomeration of absurdities into a compact system—so far as it is an idol or image which all its devotees, on pain of excommunication, are required to bow down to, acknowledge and worship—so far as this subserviency to a creed or bundle of dogmas destroys the right of individual judgment, sinks the individuality of its worshipers, and makes them mere machines instead of free men and women, free to think according to the dictates of reason and common sense—so far, I say, I freely admit that Infidelity is disintegrating, and I rejoice that it is. It is far nobler and grander than the slavish system which binds millions of human minds to accept a prescribed form of belief nolens volens, instead of being left free to embrace truth wherever presented. Oh, yes; disintegration and individuality are far preferable to stereotyped bondage. The beauty of Infidelity in contrast with orthodoxy is, that it gives the mind liberty and room to act; every man and woman is allowed to decide matters of belief for themselves. None are obliged to accept what they cannot believe and understand. Yes, indeed, for this reason Infidelity, with its disintegration, is vastly to be preferred to the iron mask which orthodoxy wears and insists that all its devotees shall submit to. I rejoice to see this work of disintegration going on, even in the Churches. People are daring to think for themselves. It is taking place in your own Church as well as in the sister Churches. The Rev. Mr. Blauvelt has had his trial and was deposed; the Rev. Mr. Miller has had his, the Rev. Mr. Sagemen has had his, and now the Rev. Mr. Ashenfelter is to have his, and will doubtless be made to "walk the plank," and more and more will follow. Active minds are emerging from darkness into light; the bonds of Church and creed of centuries are being snapped, and the right of opinion is being maintained. Infidelity, individuality, and disintegration, all hail! Spread over the land! Take off the mental shackles and fetters which bind human beings! Remove forever the obligatory edict that everybody must think just according to the prescribed model or go to hell. Let freedom and mental liberty be the rule, though all cannot think alike and contract their minds into one narrow groove. Universal mental freedom is the genius of the age.

I perceive you chafe at having Protestant clergymen classed among priests, and your position strikes me as being a ludicrous one. The clergymen of the Protestant churches are as really priests as those of the Catholic Church, or the Mohammedan or Jewish religions, and all the pagan religions of which the world has seen so much. All that class of men who claim the right to perform the priestly office, to make known the will of the gods to the people, to pray to the gods to be merciful to their own children, and to send blessings to their own creatures, and who take money and other perquisites from the people for the performance of these services, are priests; and Protestant priests come within the category as really as any that have lived within the last ten thousand years. All that other priests do, they do. They claim that they have a freer intercourse with God than the masses have; that God hearkens more benignantly to their supplications, and that by their cries and intercessions he softens his rule over his numerous children. These preachers claim that they have the ability to explain the mysteries of godliness, and that they can tell where God is, what he is, and what his tastes and wishes are. They have grand institutions of learning which cost many thousands of dollars per year to conduct, and here striplings and young men are sent, and by being put through a course of Latin, Greek, the classics, etc., are taught to be priests. It is a curious process, and the support of these 70,000 priests which you say this country contains, costs the people of the nation, it is estimated, $200,000,000 per year! Thus, you see, learning God's will and pleasure is an expensive business. To support this learned and trained priesthood the people are all compelled to labor and toil in the dirt, in the burning sun, the biting frosts, and the pelting storms—all to feed and clothe the fat, sleek priests who are shrewd enough to get the best there is produced, and to demand reverence and obedience from the people who willingly toil for them. The rule of this priestly class is being greatly broken. Many thousands of people are learning that they can get along just as well without priests as with them, and that they can do their own praying and thinking just as well and just as acceptably as the priest can do it for them, and thereby make a great saving of money, food and clothing. It has taken ages to learn this simple bit of information, but at last the light is dawning upon the human intellect. The slavery of thousands of years of priestly rule is being overthrown, and men and women are learning to be free; to be their own priests and their own saviors. Gods and devils and bells are losing their terrors, and the office of the priest is fast being superseded. Glorious day of light and liberty! I pray these may prevail, until not a salaried priest to say prayers, to hear confessions, and to bestow God's blessing upon his own offspring, will be employed in the whole world.

Your "three articles" of the creed of Liberalists, which appear to be an invention of your own fertile brain, and by which possibly you might make a fortune could you get them patented in time, deserve a passing notice. Art. I. "Every individual is the smartest fellow in the world." Now, friend Humphrey, there is a depth of thought, a perfect originality in that which speaks for itself. Indeed! indeed! Is an Infidel more conceited, more egotistical, more positive that he has the truth, than a Christian clergyman? It strikes me in this respect they stand about on a level. Art. II. does not amount to much, and is not worth repeating. Art. III. "It makes no difference what you believe or do—you'll fetch up all right." Really, friend Humphrey, can it be possible that a man like you, who professes to speak the truth, seriously asserts of Infidels that it makes no difference what we do? Why there are no people in the world who hold that actions are a factor in securing happiness so strongly as Infidels. We assert on all occasions that it is our own conduct that decides our happiness or unhappiness, and that it is not decided by the merits or demerits of another. It is your own creed that holds that it makes no difference what you do, "you'll fetch up all right, if you only have faith in Jesus." Here is another instance, my Christian brother, where you are entirely wide of the truth. With us conduct is everything in making up happiness, present or prospective. With you, faith is the only necessary ingredient; conduct, good or bad, has very little to do with it.

You insinuate that in quoting two verses from St. Paul, I took them from the Investigator, and that the quotations are wrong. You are at fault. You have no grounds for such an insinuation. I do not remember ever having seen those quotations in that paper, and there is certainly no difficulty in quoting them directly from the Testament itself. I made the quotations accurately, and I have at least an equal right with yourself to decide whether Paul was advocating lying or not.

You carp again about Infidels not having founded institutions of learning, orphan asylums, etc. It would seem that you had said enough upon that subject to let it rest awhile. I have shown fairly and beyond contradiction that heretics and unbelievers have been munificent in their generosity towards institutions of learning, and that liberal bequests have been made by them. Unbelievers have not been organized into societies as Christians are, and have not anywhere been nearly as numerous. Organizations are, however, now being extensively effected among Infidels in Europe and America, and in a few years we shall become sufficiently organized for all practical purposes. As I said in my last reply, for many hundreds of years Christians were so busy at murdering unbelievers and heretics that they got them pretty well killed off. It will, of course, take some little time for Infidels to "pick up" enough to become as numerous and as rich as Christians, and as able to give to colleges, asylums, etc. There is no good reason why a Liberal should not be as liberal as a Christian, except that the latter gives his ill-gotten dollars with the insane idea that he is buying a front seat in Paradise, and escaping that terrible lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, the idea of which (for the benefit of others, and not yourself) you hug so fondly to your bosom. The notion that parting with his filthy lucre may be counted to him as righteousness, knowing that he cannot take it with him across the river Styx, and the selfish hope that it will make his heavenly crown brighter and heavier, has made many a sordid Christian give up the cash he has acquired by oppressing the laboring man, and grinding the face of the poor. Infidels, I willingly admit, do not give from any motive of this kind. When they give, it is for the earthly benefit of their fellow-beings—the noblest of human incentives.

There are numerous other sophistries and false positions in your letter that ought to be exposed and corrected, but for want of room I will be compelled to pass over for the present. I indulge the hope that you will ultimately come to take a more correct view of things, and will be able to arrive at more correct conclusions. I hope at all events, you will cultivate a spirit of candor and fairness which, pardon me, I fear you are now slightly deficient in. It behoves you to be accurate and to fairly meet the issue we have under discussion, and to make correct representations only.

The various topics touched upon by yourself and myself possess more or less importance, but they are not the subject immediately before us. Let me remind you that the proposition that we should be discussing is, "Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?" So far the subject has not been touched. It seems to me you purposely avoided it. I also made in my last the assertion that the Christian religion is made up of Judaism and Paganism, and called upon you to disprove it if it is not so. I charged that every Christian rite, observance, symbol, sacrament and dogma were directly borrowed from the older systems of religion that had existed in the world, and that not one of them was really original with the Christian Church. If this is not so, I called upon you to disprove it. I stated as a fact that Jesus was not the first demi-god said to have been begotten by a god upon the person of a virgin; that some forty persons of this class were believed in before the time of Jesus, and I hoped you would endeavor to refute it if you could. You took no notice of it. Am I to understand that you acknowledge the truth of the statement? If it is true; if the Pagans for many hundreds of years before the dawn of Christianity believed that their gods co-habited with young virgins; that the progeny were beings half god and half man; that they lived for a time, had little bands of disciples who followed them around and listened to their teachings, and those sons of gods were finally crucified or otherwise put to death for the salvation and happiness of man, it robs Christianity of all its originality and of all its truth. You do not try to refute this. I judge it is because you cannot do so successfully. These are facts too well attested to be controverted. And here, let me say, if the Christian religion is of divine origin; if the begetting, the birth, the life and death of Jesus are facts, and were necessary for the salvation of the world, it is very singular indeed that in getting up such a stupendous system as the only possible means by which God's lost children could be saved, he was compelled to follow in every minutia and adopt in full the myths and fables of pagan systems of religion. If he has no more originality than that, and is under the necessity of adopting old and worn-out legends and vagaries, it is questionable if he is fit to be considered God Almighty, and whether he ought not to resign the position in favor of some god that has originality. Do you believe your God did, in getting up his grand system of salvation, borrow it from the pagans? If not how did he come to pattern after paganism so closely? Will you please answer?

I charged you with defending and supporting a borrowed system of myths and superstitions, handed down from the past ages of darkness, ignorance, and supernaturalism, which system you are pleased to call the Christian religion. It is a serious charge, but you take no notice of it, you do not deny it. I reiterate it now, and again call upon you to disprove it if you are able to do so. If you do not, I and our readers will be justified in deciding that you acknowledge the truth of the charge.

You, in common with your brethren "of the cloth," claim to act under a commission from the King of Heaven to perform glorious deeds in his service. It is perhaps most honorable to be engaged by so exalted a personage; and may I here ask you to show your credentials? If you act by such high authority, you certainly can furnish the papers under which you act. It will not be sufficient to hold up the Bible to me. I have the copy of that antique volume which my mother gave me nearly half a century ago. I can concede no prerogative to you from that book which I do not possess myself. If you can show no authority from the king under whom you claim to serve, is it unjust that you should be regarded as an impostor? I again ask for your credentials.

Again let us revert to the question under discussion: Is the Bible divine? To answer this question in the affirmative you have to assume the existence of supernaturalism. That there is a power in existence greater than the entire Universe, and that the Bible is a divine revelation from this superior power. I hold that you cannot prove this to be true. I hold that the Universe embraces all substances, all forces, all powers, and all existences. That there is nothing above it, nothing superior to it, nothing contrary to it, and that there can be no supernaturalism. I call upon you to prove the existence of the supernatural power. I want other proof than Bible-proof. Before that book can be taken as evidence it must itself be proved—equally as hopeless a task as to prove the existence of supernaturalism.

If this supernatural power is proved, it will be next in order to show that the compilation by different authors, called the Bible, was written or dictated by that Supreme Power. If that power is all-good, all-wise, and all-perfect, his productions must also be all-good, all-perfect, without blemish, contradiction or fault. I call upon you, then, to show why the Bible has hundreds of contradictions, why it is full of absurdities and obscenity, and why it relates the adventures of an obscure race of semi-barbarians instead of giving the principles of science and knowledge, most needed by men of all nations and all time.

I ask you to explain if the Bible was dictated by the various writers, why Moses, Joshua, Solomon, and the rest of them, did not do as much as to say so, and that the divine power controlled them?

If revelation from God is assumed to be a fact to the person to whom it is made known, I ask you to show how it is a revelation to all the world, to whom it is not revealed, but to whom it comes second hand, and who have no authority upon which to base a belief in it save the naked assertion or say-so of the first party, who claims to have had a revelation. If God, in a secret manner, reveals a certain piece of information to me, and I relate it to you, is that a revelation from God to you, or is it simply a narrative of mine, reliable or unreliable as my credibility may warrant? Are you compelled to believe me under penalty of burning in hell forever? Ought God to compel you to believe my assertion without any corroboration when he does not give you the slightest proof that I state the truth? If God wants to reveal anything to you, should he not do it direct, and not by the roundabout way of telling me and then having me tell you?

In order to enable me to believe that the Bible was written or dictated by a being superior to man, I must be convinced that it contains wisdom, knowledge, beauty and perfection superior to the ability of man. As I do not believe that the Bible contains anything that man has not been capable of writing, that the knowledge and literary ability in it is not superior to the Bibles of the Hindoos, the Persians, the Egyptians, and of other nations, and which were written at an earlier date than the Jewish Bible, as well as the productions of Menu, Ossian, Homer and others, I specially ask you to point out wherein that superiority consists, and what there is in the Jewish Bible that man could not have written.

I hold that for every event that has ever occurred there has been a natural cause sufficient to produce it, and that there never has been a result without a natural cause. If you are able to prove to the contrary of this, I ask you to do so. I also ask you to show why I am any more under obligations to accept as divinely inspired the writings attributed to Moses or Paul, than those of Mohammed or Joseph Smith. I ask you to show why I am any more under obligation to believe that Jonah swallowed the whale or that Joshua stopped the sun and moon in their course, than the equally beautiful and intellectual stories about Jack and his bean-stalk and Aladdin and his wonderful lamp.

As the Infidelity we have under consideration is an unbelief in the divinity of the Jewish Scriptures, I call upon you to show how and wherein that Infidelity is more untrue than that the Bible is divine. Before Infidelity can be shown to be false, you must show that the Bible is divine.

Begging pardon for the lengthiness of my reply, which seemed necessary to refute your errors, I remain sincerely yours,
D. M. BENNETT.

Letter from a Generous Friend.

90 OHIO ST., ALLEGHENY, PA.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Enclosed I send you as a free gift fifty dollars, to encourage you in promoting the cause of Rationalism. Were I to express my opinion as to the best way of using it, I would say, endeavor to increase the number of subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, as the best possible way.
JAMES NICHOLLS.

REPLY.—We are most grateful to our large-hearted, liberal-minded friend, and return him our sincere thanks for his generosity. We will endeavor to faithfully use the money so liberally bestowed in the dissemination of truth, and Rationalism especially, as friend Nicholls suggests, in extending the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER. In the effort we are making in opposing the popular theological errors of the day; amid the great financial depression which the country has been groaning under for nearly four years; when the conflict seems a very unequal one, and the means at hand inadequate to the great work needful to be accomplished, it is particularly cheering to receive such material aid as our good Brother in Liberalism has rendered. We are confident we can use the funds advantageously and effectively. It is comforting to be apprised that our labors are appreciated, and that there are some who are disposed to lighten our burdens and to extend a helping hand to us in time of need.

Again we return our thanks to Bro. Nicholls, and again promise industry and faithfulness in the discharge of our duty.

THIS issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER will doubtless fall into the hands of many persons who are not patrons nor regular readers of its pages, and we would take the occasion to say that we would be glad to place their names upon our list and to send the paper to them for a year or more. It has not near as many readers as it ought to have. There are a limited number who feel willing to spare the small sum of two dollars a year to help sustain it in the arduous and unpopular work it has undertaken to perform, in exposing the shams of ecclesiasticism and theological myths and fables. We submit it to every friend of truth and mental liberty whose eyes may fall upon these lines whether they have not a duty to perform in rendering some slight assistance in keeping up the struggle with the giant errors we have to contend with, and in issuing such literature as is calculated to carry conviction to those still resting in the shades of superstition, orthodoxy, and ignorance.

Let all who feel willing to aid the good work of freeing and enlightening our fellow-beings decide to use two dollars a year towards helping THE TRUTH SEEKER. Is it too much to ask of every true Liberal in the country?

MRS. ANNIE BESANT, one of the most brilliant and earnest women now alive, and who has been connected as defendant with Charles Bradlaugh in a trial for publishing Dr. Charles Knowlton's "Fruits of Philosophy," is soon expected in this country. We trust the Liberals of America will extend the hand of welcome to her, and cause her to feel that she has in the United States of America thousands of warm and appreciative friends. Her defense in the trial alluded to was admitted by the leading London journals to be one of the clearest expositions of the doctrines of Malthus, and one of the ablest appeals for oppressed humanity that has been made for a century. She is one of the most talented women living, and is thoroughly in earnest in the great and good cause of Freethought and Reform. She is a clear writer, an eloquent speaker, and is actuated by the highest devotion to the happiness and welfare of her kind. Let all friends of the cause in which she is interested give her a hearty welcome when she reaches our shores.

THE SCIENCE OF THE BIBLE; OR, AN ANALYSIS OF THE Hebrew Mythology; wherein it is shown that the "Holy Scriptures" treat of natural phenomena only. By Milton Woolley, M.D., Streator, Ill.

The author of this work, which is an elegant octavo volume of over six hundred pages, has kindly sent us a copy. We have not yet found time for more than a glance at it, but have seen enough to be convinced that the author has given the subject a great amount of mental labor. He explains the cosmogony, and the narratives of the Bible by natural phenomena—the movement of the heavenly bodies, and the changing of the seasons of the year—the Summer standing for light, day, heaven, happiness, life, etc., and the Winter for darkness, night, unhappiness, death, etc. The twelve signs of the Zodiac are largely employed in explaining the Bible stories, and he enters elaborately into the definition of what has long been regarded as the mysteries of godliness.

We hope to find time ere long to give sufficient attention to this work to enable us to present an intelligible review. Price $3.50.

The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization.—Concluded.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN PAINE MEMORIAL HALL, APRIL 8, 1877, BY W. S. BELL.

Infidelity to man is a greater crime than infidelity to God. "He that loveth not his own brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?" In the light of human virtue, of human morality, Christianity is a system of Infidelity.

The good, upright, moral citizen who attends a revival, and does not get down on his knees, is told that he is doing greater evil than the worst sinner. He is keeping others from Christ—their lost souls will be laid to his account.

Another phrase of immorality in Christian doctrine are those teachings which they play upon human fears. "Fear," says Gibbon, "has been the original parent of superstition, and every new calamity urges trembling mortals to deprecate the wrath of invisible enemies."

Our own observation proves this. We find when war, or famine or hard times come upon us, then the revival business flourishes.

The Moody and Sankey business would not draw a full house if we had plenty of money. We notice he does not scare those who have plenty of it. When one man can operate successfully upon the fears and sympathies of another, he can control him. Hence eternal torments are portrayed to alarm; and stories of sweet children who have gone to Jesus, touch the affections. Every calamity of fire, or flood, or earthquake, or tidal wave, grasshoppers or what not is used by the priests to strike terror into the hearts of their hearers.

These are the threatenings of an angry God. He must be appeased by more feasts, more prayers, more tithes.

Perhaps this is one reason why Liberalism does not spread more rapidly. We have no angry God nor fiendish devil with which to frighten them. And if we had, it would be of little avail—the Infidel doesn't scare worth a cent.

If the Christian had motives set before him, they were purely selfish. The love of heaven is the great central force of Christian power. Salvation means the desire to be saved here and hereafter. But the motive to do good in order to be saved is self-regarding.

It is not seen that man could be as selfish in his love of heaven as he is in his love of earth.

Doing right simply because it is right, has never been a favorite method of teaching among Christians. But on the contrary, the aim is to frighten man into submission; then if he obeys the powers that be, and goes through all the forms and ceremonies he will gain a crown of life.

And one of the chief joys of heaven, as the Calvinist peasant thought, would be "to look down into that other place and see the folk grill" (i. e. roast).

Christianity is opposed to science and civilization in its teaching of a Personal Providence. Providence implies an interruption of the laws of Nature; they may be changed, suspended or abolished by this all-controlling and supernatural power.

Every sudden death or dreadful calamity has commonly been called a mysterious dispensation or interposition of Providence. When a person violates the laws of health and dies suddenly, the disconsolate relatives are told that it is a mysterious providence sent to teach them some lesson.

At last some of us have learned the lesson, namely, that there is no spiteful Providence working misery to man, but that there are general laws which must be obeyed or we suffer.

"Ask and ye shall receive." But we have heard a great many loud and long prayers, yet we have never seen answers to them. Even the prayers of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane were not answered.

Nature admits of no prayers or providences, but obedience to law is the path of virtue which she provides.

Somewhat related to this doctrine of providence, is the duty of Resignation. Resignation is taught to be a virtue.

"Submission, cheerful acquiescence in the dispensations of Providence, is enjoined upon us, not because they are the ordinances of a good being, but because they are ordained for our benefit, and because he has promised that all things shall work together for good to them that love him. We are assured that every trial and affliction is designed solely for our good, for our discipline, and will issue in blessings though we see not how, and that therefore we must bow to it with uncomplaining resignation.

These grounds it is obvious are purely selfish; and resignation thus noticed is no virtue, but simply a calculation of self-interest. Grey's Creed Christian.

"This narrow view," says Grey, "results from that incorrigible egotism of the human heart which makes each man prone to regard himself as the special object of Divine consideration, and the centre around which the Universe revolves."

"When we come to see that submission is servitude, slavery, and that resignation is but another word for selfish and blind hope, stained with despair, we can readily understand the conflict which must of necessity exist between Christianity and the progressive work of civilization.

The genius of Christianity, like the first law of Nature, is self-preservation. Hence Christianity has opposed everything which did not honor its institutions. The Church has never been favorably disposed to reform. It stoned the prophets and burned the heretics, and persecuted and mobbed Reformers.

Lecky remarks: "In medicine, physical science, commercial interests, politics, and even ethics, the reformer has been confronted with theological affirmations, which barred his way, which were all defended as of vital importance, and were all in turn compelled to yield before the secularizing influence of civilization."

In the warfare which Christianity has waged on every new discovery of science, it is scarcely necessary to recall the persecution of Copernicus, Giordano, Bruno and Galileo on account of their discoveries in astronomy, or to the persecution of Descartes for his philosophy, which was called Atheistic. And to Roger Bacon as the advocate of the exponent of Hypatia of earlier times.

The beautiful queen of philosophy, Hypatia, who discussed such profound questions as "What am I? Where am I? What can I know?" was because of her wisdom regarded as a fiend and murdered by those worse than fiends. "As Hypatia repaired to her academy, she was assaulted by Cyril's mob, a mob of many monks. Stripped naked in the street, she was dragged into a church, and there killed by the club of Peter the Reader. The corpse was cut to pieces, the flesh was scraped from the bones with shells and the remnants cast into the fire. For this frightful crime Cyril was never called to account. It seemed to be admitted that the end sanctified the means" (Draper's Conflict, p. 55).

From time immemorial the clergy have tried to deny and belittle the discoveries of geologists. But the science pushed on amidst all opposition until now, when its victories and truths are almost universally recognized. Nothing, either great or small, but met with opposition if it differed from the usages of the past. Somewhere it is recorded that when umbrellas were first made some people positively refused to use them, saying: "God made the rain to come down upon our heads, and we should not hinder him in his ways; this pushing up an umbrella over one's head is nothing less than shoving up an insult into the face of the Almighty."

That the spirit of Christianity is intolerant, many Christians have openly admitted. Guizot does not attempt to deny this fact, but openly avows that "the Christian Church has always ranged herself on the side of despotism." One of the most flagrant illustrations of this was the support which the dominant churches of the country gave to the system of American slavery. It was proclaimed by the clergy to be a divine institution. The Church has opposed every reform. It has opposed the reform known as the "Woman's Right" movement. It has invariably insisted upon the subjection of women.

The subjection of woman, like the enslavement of the negro, found abundant support from the Bible. "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." So says the Old Testament; and the New Testament echoes the same doctrine: "Likewise ye wives be in subjection to your husbands." Therefore the Church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything" (Eph. v. 24).

And the following are the reasons why women are to be held in subjection: "For Adam was first created, then Eve; and Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was the transgressor." We find in accordance with this doctrine, that in the marriage service woman has been required to promise to obey her husband.

The progress of humanity has been achieved not by and through Christianity, but in conflict with and triumph over it. Christianity itself has been subject to modification and progress from the forces without rather than from virtues within itself. The savage doctrine, "believe or be damned," is no longer acceptable or popular. Eternal torment is not now so sweet a morsel under or on the end of the minister's tongue as in the days of yore. Election and reprobation are not in demand. Infant damnation has been relegated to the past. The Devil is not so bad as most persons heretofore have thought. And perhaps, moreover, he may be dead. At any rate, according to the teachings of the more liberal and intelligent Christians, Universalists and Unitarians, we shall get over "in the sweet by and by" into the happy hunting grounds of the New Canaan.

The truth is, civilization has always been the instructor of Christianity. To civilization we are indebted for our highest notions of truth and morality. We have a morality now which the Church itself could never develop. Freedom, intelligence and humanity are terms that the Church never emphasized. It was left to a late date, and to those outside of the pale of the Church to fight the battle of human freedom—to fight against kingcraft and human slavery; and the battle is not yet ended. The elevation of woman, humanity in the treatment of criminals, paupers and lunatics, and many other reforms, have originated with those not connected with any religious organization. Those who espoused the cause of the slave against their Christian masters, were denounced, tarred and feathered, and hanged or otherwise murdered by Christian people; and as a mark of their evil deeds they were called "Infidels." It happened thus to Socrates and Jesus—they were called hard names, then poisoned or racked upon the cross.

In the mythology of Greece there was a story of a sphinx who propounded a riddle to every one who passed, and if they failed to solve it the monster killed them. Oedipus came along, heard the riddle, and solved it. And the Sphinx thereupon threw herself from the lofty rock upon which she was seated, and destroyed herself.

Religion, like the Sphinx, in all the past ages, has been propounding the riddle of mystery, of incarnations, immaculate conceptions, transmigrations, preexistence, future existence, rising from the dead, and many other barren speculations and dreams.

Science is answering the theological Sphinx, and she must sooner or later fall from her lofty supremacy.

The spirit of the nineteenth century is that of inquiry and progress. The acquisition of knowledge and its rapid diffusion is stimulating the mind to independent thought and investigation. This wide-spread knowledge has brought to our acquaintance the history and character of the different religions man has had. We have been enabled to trace the changes which time and circumstances have effected in these religions; we have also learned to trace our own religion back to its primitive human sources, and witness its mysteries and dogmas vanish into thin air. A knowledge of the comparative religions has done much toward freeing the mind from the thralldom of slavish subjection to tradition, but there is another power at work which will surely accomplish in a relatively short period, the enfranchisement of Freethought.

I refer now to the study of the natural sciences. The world of new facts, which these studies are developing, is revolutionizing human thought on all sides, and reconstructing the heavens and the earth; but all things do not rest with these facts or laws of Nature. The study of Nature is by experiment, observation, deduction and verification. This method is inexorably hostile to, and incompatible with, the theological method. He who studies Nature cannot cherish faith in miracles and mysteries. The study of science is the demand for facts and law, and in proportion to the extent of these studies is the decay of Christianity. It is not a little comfort to the Freethinker to know that science is being studied in nearly all the high schools, academies, colleges, and universities in the land. The fog still hangs over the morning sun, but we know, nevertheless, that the sun is rising.

ALL gaming, since it implies a desire to profit at another's expense, involves a breach of common morality.

Gems of Thought.

O RIPPLING river of laughter! thou art the blessed boundary line between the beast and man, and every wayward wave of thine doth drown some fretful fiend of care.—Ingersoll.

THE only true sovereigns of the earth are the laborers who subdue it. These reign over it by the right of conquest—not by war and bloodshed, but by skill and industry.—Luna Hutchinson.

THE crown of physical nature is physical man. Ending the serial chain, he stands related to the deepest rock, the farthest star, the brightest angel, the Infinite Presence.—J. M. Peebles.

WE see no white-winged angels now. But yet men are led away from threatening destruction; a hand is put into theirs which leads them forth toward a calm and bright land, so they look no more backward; and the hand may be a little child's.—George Eliot.

FOR more than three centuries, the decadence of theological influence has been one of the most invariable signs and measures of our progress. In medicine, physical science, commercial interests, politics, and even ethics, the reformer has been confronted with theological affirmations that have barred his way, which were all defended as of vital importance, and were all compelled to yield before the secularizing influence of civilization.—Lecky.

GOD includes all, the heathen, the Hebrew, the Mahometan, the Atheist, and the Christian; nay, Cain, Iscariot, the kidnapper, are all folded in the arms of the Infinite Mother, who will not suffer absolute evil to come to the worst of these, but so temper the mechanism of humanity that all shall come to the table of blessedness at last. Death itself is no limit. Pain is medicine. What is not delight is discipline, the avenue to nobler joys.—Theodore Parker.

ACCEPT no philosophy, system, or religion, that is not based on fact, truth and reason; no God that is not benevolent, merciful, and strictly just; and no tenets that can have the least tendency to weaken our esteem for human nature, or lessen our admiration for the eternal principles of truth and right. Be moral, temperate, industrious and honest; prudent, but not stingy; civil to all, but servile to none; candid and sincere; think every man innocent until proved guilty, and then temper judgment with mercy, remembering that to err is human, to forgive noble.—Col. R. Peterson.

LET us all labor for the security of free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges for all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools and resolve that not one dollar appropriated to them shall be applied to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither State nor nation shall support institutions save those where every child in the land may get a common school education, unmixed with atheistic, pagan, or sectarian teachings. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar; keep the church forever separate.—Ex-President Grant.

I LIKE Voltaire. Whenever I think of him it is as a plumed knight coming from the fray with victory shining upon his brow. He was once in the Bastille, and while there he changed his name from Francis Marie Aloysius to Voltaire, and when the Bastille was torn down "Voltaire" was the battle-cry of those who did it. He did more to bring about religious toleration than any man in the galaxy of those who strove for the privilege of free thought. And he was always on the side of justice. His doctrines have never brought unhappiness to any country. He died as serenely as any one could; speaking to his servant, he said, "Farewell, my faithful friend."—Ingersoll.

ALL the triumphs of truth and genius over prejudice and power have been the triumphs of Athens. Wherever a few great minds have made a stand against violence and fraud in the cause of liberty and reason, there has been her spirit in the midst of them; inspiring, consoling, encouraging; by the lonely lamp of Erasmus; by the restless bed of Pascal; in the tribune of Mirabeau; in the cell of Galileo; on the scaffold of Sidney. But who shall estimate her influence on private happiness? Who shall say how many thousands have been made wiser, happier and better by these pursuits in which she taught us to engage? to how many have the studies she began been wealth in poverty, liberty in bondage, health in sickness, society in solitude? Whenever literature conceals sorrow or assuages pain; whenever it brings gladness to eyes that fall with wakefulness and tears, and ache for the narrow house and long sleep, there is shown in its nobler form the immortal influence of Athens. These are the gifts to man. Her freedom and her power have for more than twenty centuries been annihilated; her people have degenerated into timid slaves; her language to a barbarous jargon; her temples have been given up to the successive depredations of Romans, Turks, and Scotchmen, but her intellectual empire is imperishable. And when civilization and knowledge shall have fixed their homes in distant continents, when the sceptre shall have passed away from England, when perhaps travelers from distant regions shall in vain labor to decipher on some mouldering pedestal the name of our proudest chief; shall have savage hymns chanted to some misshapen idol over the ruined dome of our proudest temple, and perhaps see a single naked fisherman wash his nets in the river of ten thousand masts, her influence and her glory will still survive—fresh in eternal youth, exempt from mortality and decay; immortal as the intellectual principle from which they derived their origin and over which they exercise their control.—Macaulay.

Odd and Ends.

"You are a nuisance. I'll commit you," said an offended judge to a noisy person in court. "You have no right to commit a nuisance," said the offender.

GEO. WASHINGTON never umpired a game of base ball; never sat on store boxes discussing Hayes' Southern policy, and his education was deficient in other respects.

A VIRGINIAN accidentally stumbled and fell. A lady, thinking to commiserate with the mischance, observed that she regretted his unlucky fall. "I didn't hurt my fore paws," he replied. "It was my knee."

A WESTERN paper announces the illness of its editor, piously adding: "All good paying subscribers are requested to mention him in their prayers. The others need not, as the prayers of the wicked avail not."

A LA CROSSE man who committed suicide wrote a note for his wife, which said: "I'm going to a country where red-headed women are never seen." She was so mad that she wouldn't attend the funeral.

"FIVE or six months of married life," says a veteran observer, "will often reduce a naturally irascible man to such a condition of angelic humility that it wouldn't be safe to trust him with a pair of wings."

MOHAMMEDANS do not admit old maids to their Paradise. They think it would be very unpleasant to have a lot of skinny old angels in spectacles poking around for an opportunity to pick up bits of celestial scandal.

Two little girls were lately prattling together, and one of them said: "We keep four servants, have got six horses and a lot of carriages; now what have you got?" With quite as much pride the other answered, "We've got a skunk under our barn."

A MAN went to the theatre for the first time. Just as the curtain descended on the first act, an engine in the basement exploded, and he was blown through the roof, coming down in the next street. After coming to his senses he asked: "And what piece do you play next?"

AN old deacon went to a circus and took his grandchild, remarking to every acquaintance he met that the boy wanted to see the sacred animals, and he could not find it in his heart to refuse him. Arriving at the tent, he cried to go home, and the deacon spanked him to make him go in.

MRS. MCGILL sat in the parlor talking to the minister. "What I do love," said she, "is to see the children enjoy themselves." And yet when, a moment after, a baseball came singing into the room, scattering the remains of a fifty cent glass, do you suppose she leaned out of the window and cried: "Here's your ball, darling; never mind the old glass." Not much! She sailed out the front door like a cyclone, and banged the head of the boy who owned the ball against the railroad until he thought the Fourth of July had arrived two months ahead of time.

"Don't you know the prisoner, Mr. Jones?" "Yes, to the bone." "What is his character?" "Didn't know he had any." "Does he live near you?" "So near that he has spent only five shillings for firewood in eight months." "Does he ever come in collision with you in any matter?" "Only once, and then he was drunk, and mistook me for a lamp-post." "From what you know of him, would you believe him under oath?" "That would depend upon circumstances. If he was so much intoxicated that he did not know what he was saying, I would; if not, I would not."

HERE is a letter which was picked up on a side street: Dear Bill—Doant kum to see me enny moar for a while enny way. Father is awfully skeered about burglars and he sets up every nite til lait with a dubble-barreled shot gunn, watching the backyard. He put moren a pound ovled into Smith's big nufoundland dog wich was kummin over the fens after a bone last nite.

The rose is red; the violet blue.
I wouldn't kum now if I was you.
Yours, as ever, NANCY.

"BUDGE'S" STORY OF NOAH.—Once the Lord felt so uncomfortable cos folks was bad that he was sorry he ever made anybody or any world or anything. But Noah wasn't bad—the Lord liked him first rate; so he told Noah to build a ark, and then the Lord would make it rain so all should be drowned but Noah an' his little boys an' girls, an' doggies an' pussies, an' mamma-cows an' little boy-cows an' little girl-cows, an' hosses an' everything—they'd go in the ark an' wouldn't get wetted a bit when it rained. An' Noah took lots of things to eat in the ark—cookies an' milk, an' oatmeal an' strawberries, an' porgies an'—oh, yes an, plum-puddin's an' pumpkin-pies. But Noah didn't want everybody to get drowned, so he talked to folks an' said: "It's goin to rain awful pretty soon; you'd better be good, an' then the Lord'll let you come into my ark." An' they jus' said: "Oh, if it rains, we'll go in the house till it stops," an' other folks said: "We ain't afraid of rain—we've got an umbrella," an' some more said they wasn't goin to be afraid of just a little rain. But it did rain, though, an' folks went in their houses, an' the water came in, an' they went upstairs, an' the water came up there, an' they got on the tops of the houses, an' up in big trees, an' up in mountains, an' the water after 'em, everybody only just except Noah an' the people in the ark. An' it rained forty days an' forty nights, an' then it stopped, an' Noah got out of the ark, an' he an' his little boys an' girls went wherever they wanted to, an' everything in the world was all theirs; there wasn't anybody to tell 'em to go home, nor no kindergarten schools to go to, nor no bad boys to fight 'em, nor nothin'. Now tell us 'nother story.

Special Notices.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygeine Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygeine Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Reader and Thinker!

Send stamp for E. C. WALKER'S Catalogue of Freethought and Scientific Books, Pamphlets and Tracts, Dealer in

PHOTOGRAPHS, MOTTOES, "RELIGIOUS LIBERTY."

And other envelopes, etc., etc. Agent for ENGLISH AND GERMAN LIBERAL AND SCIENTIFIC PAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Send three cent stamp for "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS" of the National Liberal League. Don't forget to send five cents for seven Lectures by Col. R. G. INGERSOLL, and ARBOR'S "Truth for the Times." Address

E. C. WALKER, Box 59, Florence, Benton Co., Iowa.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN, Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3.00; Leather, $4.00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4.50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL, AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven." Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it. 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."

"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"

In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d St., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. YES Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $3 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINEON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and outfit free. H. HALLELT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1760

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1760

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent post-paid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Sexual Physiology $2.00
Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book 1.00
Health and Diseases of Women25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York. 11

THE WORLD'S

SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red
burnished edges, 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked
head-band, 4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,

141 Eighth street, N. Y.

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by

D. M. BENNETT, Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL BELIEF: or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE,
&
MORALS

FREETHOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 34. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY
BY D. M. BENNETT. }

New York, Saturday, August 25, 1877.

{ SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St.,
NEAR BROADWAY. } $2 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

DR. DEEMS is writing a biography of Commodore Vanderbilt.

MR. BEECHER is out in an able letter eulogizing sparrows. They multiply faster than any other bird.

PROF. J. C. WATSON, of Michigan University, discovered, on the night of Aug. 8th, in the constellation of Capricorn, a planet hitherto unknown.

THE domestic proverb, which applies to the Russian's children, as well as to his wife, is, "Love them as your own soul, and beat them like your fur jacket."

"GAIL HAMILTON is the Mt. Vesuvius of womanhood."—Chicago Journal. "And it is reported that no man has ever been near the mouth of the crater."—Graphic.

A DAVENPORT, Iowa, Irishman, discussing the strike with a friend, protested that he'd "rather stand up and be shot at, and clear kilt, than to live all the while starved to death."

REV. DR. DODS, of the Free Church of Scotland, is to be arraigned before the Glasgow Presbytery on a charge of heresy respecting the revelation and inspiration of the Bible.

THE Rev. Mrs. Hanaford says you can judge of a Christian by the shape of his head. We are glad there is something to distinguish them by. You can't possibly tell them by their actions.

THE American Board of Foreign Missions announces that at the end of eleven months of its financial year there is a deficiency of nearly $20,000. It needs $90,000 during the month of August to meet the demands upon it.

THE Rev. J. S. Kallcock's new church about to be dedicated in San Francisco, it is reported, will be one of the most favored places of amusement in that city. Kallcock is said to possess the finest talent as a theatrical parson.

REV. GLENDENNING, the former friend of the deceased Mary Pomeroy, of Jersey City, has stepped down and out, and will now practice law. How strange! when he had so thoroughly developed all the qualifications of a first-class orthodox minister.

THE Rev. E. G. Watson, curate of an Episcopal Church in England, has been received into the Church of Rome. In a letter to his late charge, he confessed that for twelve years he has been playing the hypocrite in the religious services he has performed.

It is reported that the Rev. Forger Winslow formerly of Boston, is about to reform and become a good Christian, and forge thunderbolts with which to demolish the poor but honest infidel. Had his name and nature been Winslow, he might have been a poor but honest something.

M. GIRARD, of the Academy of Sciences, Paris, proposes the sulpho-carbonate of potash as a remedy for the Colorado beetle. He is not inclined to share the alarm which that beetle has caused in Europe, because, he says, another chrysomelid which feeds on lucerne in France has been easily kept down.

THE viceregent of God for the Greek Catholic Church, otherwise known as the Czar of Russia, and his suite, consume four thousand bottles of champagne per month, costing five dollars a bottle. Whether the Czar does his drinking in his spiritual or his temporal capacity is not known, though the capacity is astonishing.

THE Methodists are having a big camp-meeting at Sing Sing, and they have considerable sing sing at the camp-meeting. This is like carrying coals to Newcastle. Sing Sing is celebrated for its camp-meetings. The sing singers of enforced residence will join their less unfortunate brethren in singing "Hold the Fort"—through the key-holes.

A NEW Roman Catholic society, called the Universal Catholic League, has been formed, which is to absorb such Catholic clubs as the Militia of Jesus Christ. Its objects are the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope; "to expound and demonstrate the dangers of liberty so-called;" "to counterminae the press;" "to demonstrate the fallacy of the right of the State."

PETER L. CORTELYOU, of Rossville, Staten Island, has been, for the last 50 years, the most prominent church-member and business man of the town. Poor people went to him with their hard-earned money to invest for them. Whatever he said they depended upon implicitly. He has turned out to be a complete fraud, and has been arrested for misuse of the funds in his care. He is seventy years old.

ST. AUGUSTINE, the Catholic bishop of Hippo, solemnly asserted in one of his sermons that he went as a Christian bishop into Ethiopia with some disciples of the Lord, to teach the Gospel in that country. "While on our travels we saw many men and women without heads, with two great eyes in their stomachs, and in a country more to the south we met people who had but one eye, and that was in their forehead."

JEWISH circles in Augusta, Ga., are excited by a story that a Hebrew named Sellman Zimmers, who died in the City Hospital on Saturday at the age of eighty years, was baptized by a priest according to the rites of the Catholic Church shortly before his demise. The Sisters of Mercy have charge of the hospital under a contract with the City Council. Upon demand they gave up the body to the Jews, but said that the Catholic Church "would take the soul."

DARWIN married his cousin. His eldest son, William, is a banker at Southampton; the second, George, took high honors at Cambridge, and is now a fellow at Trinity; the third, Frank, who has inherited his father's ill-health, acts as his secretary; the fourth, Leonard, is an officer in the artillery, and distinguished himself as one of the scientific corps sent to observe the transit of Venus; the fifth, Horace, is an excellent mathematician.

A UNIQUE expedition is fitting out in New York to sail in October on an educational voyage round the world. The individual cost will be $2,500. Many eminent professors, scientists and scholars will join the expedition. It goes from New York to St. Thomas and Barbadoes, to mouth of Amazon, Australia, Japan, Mediterranean, France, England, and then home. At different stopping points trips will be made in all directions to points of interest. A regular course of study will be pursued. No such opportunity for combined study and travel was ever before offered.

THE London correspondent of the N. Y. Times writes as follows of the Church of England: No wonder the Church is found to be corrupt, for in all history priests have always kept pace with the giant strides of social vice. It is a sad fact, but nevertheless true, and it denotes a closer intimacy between society and the Church than we are willing to admit. Not only does the "Holy Cross" Society, with its filthy guide to "The Priest in Absolution," prosper in aristocratic circles, but a bastard branch of it has been set up in the army. "The Guild of the Holy Standard" comprises nearly one thousand military members. Major-Gen. Erskine, commanding officer at Chatham, is the President of the local branch at that station, and a brace of colonial Bishops are on the directory. Another branch has struck root in the civil service of the country. The Pope is delighted at these tokens of the return of England to the fold of the Good Shepherd; for these societies pave the way to those animal perversions which form so curious a page in the modern history of the Church of England.

QUARRELING OVER A GRAVE.—The meddlesome officiousness of the Catholic Church has been still further illustrated recently in Vineland, N. J., and a priest, one Father Vivet, has been found guilty not only of bigotry but of downright, deliberate lying. About two weeks ago a respectable Italian named Maggioli died, and was buried in the Catholic cemetery at Vineland without, as is claimed, the knowledge of Father Vivet, who has charge of the spiritual welfare of the Catholic inhabitants of that town. Now Mr. Maggioli had not confessed at Easter, for which grave crime the Rev. Father ordered his disinterment, averring that the deceased was not a good Catholic. As Mr. Maggioli had bought and paid for his lot, the widow refused to comply with the gentle demands of the man o' God, and obtained legal assistance to aid her in preventing the "resurrection of the body" of Mr. Maggioli. The Priest applied to the Bishop for support in his demands, but was refused, on the ground that Maggioli was a good Catholic. Being unable to prove him otherwise, Vivet then claimed to have sold the lot to a Mrs. Gregory previous to Maggioli's purchase of it. This has been proved by the affidavits of reliable persons, and by Mrs. Gregory's contradictory statements, to be an absolute lie, told by the priest to extricate himself from the disgraceful dilemma in which his former conduct had placed him. The lawyer who has charge of the case says he has ample evidence to prove Maggioli's claim to the lot, and that Father Vivet is a priestly liar and a would-be ecclesiastical tyrant.

THE present famine in India is one of nature's powerful arguments for the absolute necessity of the wide dissemination of such doctrines as those which brought on the Bradlaugh-Besant prosecution. A correspondent of the London Times says that half a million of people have died of starvation already, and the famine has only just begun. Malthus, Mill, and others have pointed out the causes of famines, and how they might be avoided, but the Church thinks it would be lowering the dignity of God to use the laws of nature for man's benefit, instead of letting them sweep him to destruction. It thinks it is better that two million should be born in poverty, live in misery, and die of starvation—all for the glory of God—than that only one million should be born in comparative wealth, live in happiness, and die at a ripe old age—for the glory of humanity. While such ideas are held by the Church and enforced by the law, famines will prevail in densely populated countries, and hard times among the laboring classes will be universal.

MR. HYATT, of Merrick, N. Y., well-known for his liberality, has instituted and sustained, on his own farm, a Liberal grove-meeting every Sunday since June. Last Sunday (Aug. 19) several well-known Liberal speakers from this city were present at Mr. Hyatt's grove. The evening remarks were by Mr. King, in which he very humorously and happily criticized modern Christianity. He was followed in a more serious strain by Mr. Bowen, of Brooklyn. In the afternoon Messrs. G. L. Henderson, H. B. Brown, and Henry Evans spoke. Near by, adjoining Mr. Hyatt's place, the Methodist camp-meeting was in session. The interest of the meeting was enhanced by the announcement that the Rev. Mr. Hanson from the Methodist camp was to be present on the Liberal platform to defend his religion from the attacks of the infidels. At the close of his remarks, the above-named gentlemen "went for him," and as they are among the most solid and interesting Liberal speakers, and any one more than a match for any theologian, the reverend gentleman doubtless repented of his bargain before they were through with him. The last seen of him he was sitting on the outskirts of the camp-ground solemnly smoking a clay pipe. It is to be hoped that he will put the truth he heard into his mental pipe and smoke that.

THE successful prosecution of Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant for publishing the "Fruits of Philosophy" has led to one curious result. The Society for the Suppression of Vice, similar to the one presided over here by Anthony Comstock, has commenced proceedings against a number of publishers for selling certain classics. Several of these volumes, issued by Bohn, are now withdrawn from the market. These include such works as the "Count de Gamont," "Rabelais," "Boccaccio's Decameron," and Margaret of Navarre's "Heptameron." It seems that the ruling in Bradlaugh's case followed the precedent established in the prosecution of a book entitled "The Confession Unmasked." The defense in the latter case held that the object was a worthy one, being to show up the corrupt practices of a certain sect of so-called Christians. The court, however, held that as the subject matter was objectionable, the question of motives did not enter into the consideration of the jury. So the publishers and printers were fined. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant are about to go to prison. They are determined to fight the battle of a free press. The suppression of the works published by Bohn is alarming the whole literary class of Great Britain. They say the works of Rabelais and those of a kindred nature did no harm, as they were little read except by scholars. Indeed, in some quarters, it is threatened that Shakespeare and the Bible will come in for their share of the prosecution, if proceedings against these "peculiar" classical works are kept up.

Events of the Week.

THE Russians were defeated at Topkol.

NO TAXES are paid on $137,000,000 of church property in this city.

SENATOR ROSCOE CONKLING arrived home from Europe on Saturday, the 11th inst.

FIVE men were burned to death at a new oil well at Smith's Ferry, Pa., on the 16th.

A FIRE occurred in the oil refinery of Denslow & Bush, Brooklyn, on Thursday night. Loss, $7,000.

JOS. METZLER, of the firm of Metzler Brothers, Chicago, has absconded, taking with him $20,000 in cash besides valuable goods.

DURING a severe thunder-storm, which occurred on the 18th inst., the Methodist church at Goffstown, N. Y., was destroyed.

A. J. SCHAEFFER, Cashier of the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Baltimore, committed suicide on Tuesday, August 14th.

THE steam-tug Mat White exploded on the James River on Friday, 17th inst. Capt. Blunt, Engineer James, and one fireman killed.

CHAS. JOHNSON of this city committed suicide on Tuesday by jumping from the steamer City of New Bedford into Long Island Sound.

THE flag-pole on the German Bank, Fourteenth St., in this city was shattered by lightning during the last thunder-storm.

THE London Standard says a strike is imminent throughout the entire South Staffordshire coal fields in consequence of an attempt to increase the working hours.

THE town of Gayville, Dakota, was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Saturday, August 18th. In three hours some two hundred houses were destroyed. No insurance.

A TERRIBLE storm passed over Olifton, Ill., on the 14th, destroying a church, school-house, mill, and a number of dwellings, besides doing considerable damage to crops.

MOSES STRONG, Assistant State Geologist of Wisconsin, was drowned in the Flambeau river at Stevens Point, Aug. 18th, while making geological explorations. The body was recovered.

A COLORED preacher, at Long Branch, who waits on the table at the West End Hotel week-days and dispenses a spiritual feast on Sundays, has been arrested for robbing the guests of the hotel.

A TERRIBLE hail and thunder-storm passed over the western part of New Jersey, on the 18th inst. A little child at a Sunday-school picnic was killed. "He tempereth the wind to the shorn lamb."

THE two days' celebration at Bennington, Vt., was a complete success. The procession was four miles long, and was witnessed by a hundred thousand people. Speeches were made by many distinguished guests, among whom were President Hayes and Secretary Evarts.

THERE is not much news from the seat of war, and what there is continues to be unfavorable to the Russians. The loss of the Russians during the two months' campaign is only 14,000 killed and wounded out of an army of 300,000, and yet there is complete demoralization among them. A despatch says: "The fever epidemic in the Russian army in Bulgaria is increasing. The troops are in want of food, and threaten to surrender to the Turks unless paid in the coin of their own country."

THE permanent exhibition at Philadelphia was opened on Sunday, the 19th inst., being the first Sunday that visitors have been admitted. Had this measure been adopted at the commencement of the Centennial Exhibition a million dollars' profit would unquestionably have accrued therefrom, besides affording opportunities for poor people to attend who could not afford to take a working day for that purpose. The Methodist clergymen of that city have held a meeting, and have "resolved" to "protest" against this desecration of the Sabbath. About 11,000 people visited the exhibition last Sunday. A sacred concert was given in the evening in the great Music Hall. The big ungodly engine will not be allowed to run Sundays.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER NO. XI.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

Mr. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Owing either to my lack of acumen, or to your paucity of arguments, the perusal of your Reply brought to my mind those words of Shakspeare: "Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. His reasons are his two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff: you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them, they are not worth the search."—The Merchant of Venice.

You have scraped up another installment of men that did not practically believe in the precepts and example of Christ, who have crept into the pulpit under the mask of hypocrisy. Go ahead; you are only showing how that the predictions of Scripture are being fulfilled: "For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock" (Acts xx, 29). As I have no objection to helping you along in this matter, let me suggest that you drag your muck-rake through Dante's Inferno. You will there find quite a number of names which your contemporaneous standards—The Police News, The Reformer & Jewish Times, etc.,—know but little about. What a lean, lank, gaunt, ghastly old spindle-shanks Infidelity must be anyhow, that she is obliged to be continually coloring her sunken cheeks with the blood of papistic persecutions, and to be giving curvature to her fleshless calves, and plumpness to her hollow bosom, with pads made of the fleece that hypocritical wolves have worn!

You have confirmed me in the conviction that Infidels do not hold up the lapses of clergymen because they love Morality, but because they hate the Church. It appears from their journals that they regard Immorality as quite excusable in anybody, provided he is not a Christian. In a "Freethinker" a "peccadillo" is almost admired. As it is the envious and spiteful farmer that is continually pointing out an occasional thistle or tare in his neighbor's fields, never saying a word about his acres of waving grain, so the malignant spirit of Infidelity is revealed by its gabble about the imperfections of the Church, while it is as silent as the grave about her many excellent qualities and innumerable services to mankind.

You will have it that the Jews were cannibals, because they may have eaten human flesh in the desperation of famine. Will you reason after the same fashion, and say that the American people are mule-eaters, because some of our soldiers had to eat mule-flesh in some of the privations of the late civil war? I am somewhat curious to know who those "distinguished" writers are who say that the ancient Jews were man-eaters. Names, please.

Neither did the Jews offer human sacrifices. Abraham did not slay his son Isaac (Gen. xxi, 11-14). Even if Jephthah did immolate his daughter, he was violating the Mosaic Law (Deut. xii, 31). But there are many critics who believe that he fulfilled his vow by devoting her to perpetual virginity (See Lange on Judges xi, 29-40).

You do not seem to know that Herodotus wrote a missing "History of Assyria," or Syria, as the Greeks often called that country. You will see that such was the fact by looking into Rawlinson's Herodotus, London, 1858, vol. i, pp. 29, 240, 321, and vol. iv, p. 63.

Your attempt to show that Robespierre was a Catholic is futile and inconsistent. By your style of reasoning in regard to him it could be shown that others, in whose Infidelity you boast, were Christians. If his belief in a God made him a Christian, it also did as much for Thomas Paine. If his talk about being an "indifferent Catholic" really made him a Catholic, then Voltaire, who talked about reverently kissing the Pope's feet, was a better Catholic still. When you appeal to Robespierre's tolerance and protection of the clergy as an evidence that he was a religious man, are you not reversing the everlasting boast of Infidelity, that Infidels are far more "liberal" than Christians?

You quote rather profusely from Mr. Ingersoll. Poor Ingersoll! His presentation of Paine to an occasional audience will be a greater failure than his presentation of Blaine at the Cincinnati Convention. His "Orations" are mostly slashing tirades—frantic tongue-lashings—tissues of delirious dogmatism—pills, coated with pretty rhetoric, but filled with historical blunders and biographical caricatures. The sickly suckling that swallows them will become sicklier still. Give me Bancroft's, or Froude's, or even Bayle's delineation of Calvin and Calvinism, rather than the ravings of a man who is apparently unable to distinguish reasoning from betting and blustering.

I repeat that Voltaire tried to make up with the priests before his death. Speaking of a hemorrhage that had seized him a short time before the end of his life, the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Voltaire, thinking himself in danger, said he did not wish his body to be cast to the vultures, and bargained with the Abbé Gauthier, to whom he committed it for the rites of sepulture, if nothing else. The preliminaries for duly receiving such a deposit were soon settled; Voltaire had no objection at all to the ceremonies proper to the occasion. He made a declaration that he wished to die in the Catholic religion, in which he had been born, asked pardon of God and the church for the offenses he had committed against them, and received absolution." As Longchamps and Wagnière, Mazure, and Condorcet—an Atheist, who died by his own hand—all corroborate this statement, there is no reason for disputing it. It is true that Voltaire recovered somewhat from that attack of sickness. But it is not on record that he expressed any disapproval of the arrangement with Abbé Gauthier. His last hours are enveloped in a cloud of uncertainty, owing to contradictory testimonies. The majority of authorities state that he approached death with agony and remorse. The Infidel Strauss says that Tronchin, his attendant physician, wrote a letter to Bonnett in which he compared his death to a raging storm, and to the mad ravings of Orestes. The same authority tells us further that he was buried in consecrated ground, and that the usual burial service was said over his grave. It is true that some bishops and other ecclesiastics were displeased with this; but the fact remains that Voltaire was buried as a Roman Catholic (Strauss' Voltaire, pp. 340-3). Thus it is clear that Voltaire did not die an avowed Infidel.

But I waive all claim to Mr. Ingersoll's reward. Mine is a labor of love—a chat with friend Bennett on points of difference between us. As Col. Ingersoll is presumably out of debt, I would suggest that he send his superfluous change to save Paine Hall from sheriff sale. If anything is left after that, he might send a purse to each of the Infidel journals that have of late been lavishing their soft soap on him—possibly with their eyes squinting toward his wallet.

I have already admitted that Thomas Paine died as he had lived, a Deist (Letter iv). But that he did so is surely nothing to boast of (Phil. iii, 18, 19). It would have been far more creditable to him if he had recanted more and decanted less.

I will now take up some of the difficulties that will often occur to thoughtful men as they study the Bible historically and hermeneutically. Infidels are not alone in knowledge of these difficulties. Every minister, of average education, is familiar with them. And they are not unfrequently considered in the higher classes of the Sabbath-school. I wish to treat them with every due respect. I only regret that my time and abilities are not such as to enable me to discuss them more thoroughly.

Let me, however, premise that it is not at all remarkable that the Bible is made the subject of hypercriticisms and objections. As long as men are as they are, such a code of morals as would be exempt from their fault-finding is inconceivable and impossible. They would peck at absolute Perfection itself. There is therefore no presumption in the mere cavilings of men that the Bible is anything less than it claims to be. But let us examine the objections:

1. The question of the Canon is perplexing to some minds. The Bible was written by different men at different times. Many centuries intervened between Moses and St. John. It mentions several documents of high authority which it does not contain, and which are irreparably lost (Num. xxi, 14; Josh. x, 13; 1 Kings xi, 41; 2 Chron. ix, 29; xxxii, 32, etc.). And then there are several books known as the Apocrypha. The Church of Rome has declared those of the Old Testament canonical. And considerable weight has been attached now and then to some of the books composing the Apocryphal New Testament. The Canons of the Old and of the New Testament were compiled and completed some time after their constituent parts had been written. Such are the grounds of the difficulty under consideration.

On this it may be observed (1) That the lost books mentioned in the Old Testament were not of vital importance. They are referred to only on points of history, biography, or natural science. We have no intimation that they contained any new light on moral and spiritual truth. While they might gratify curiosity and elucidate some points of sacred history, they could add nothing to the central idea of the Scriptures.

(2) As to the Apocrypha, they are before us; and their contents show that they would modify the doctrines of the Scriptures in no perceptible degree, even if they should be received as authoritative. Those writings serve to show by contrast the supreme excellence of the Scriptures proper.

(3) It was well that the parts of the Old and New Testaments were not compiled until some time after they were written. If undue haste had been exercised in this matter, the objector would say that other prophecies and epistles may have been thereby shut out. The compilation was deferred only until the prophetic and apostolic writings had indisputably ceased.

(4) The separate books of the Bible were Law and Gospel before they were put together in one volume. They are not authoritative because they are in the Canon, but they are in the Canon because they are authoritative.

(5) We have the endorsement of Christ on the Canon of the Old Testament (Mat. xxii, 29; Luke xxiv, 27; John v, 39; x, 35). And the writers of the New were men personally prepared and approved by Himself. The Apostles spoke of each other's writings as Scriptures (2 Pet. iii, 16). We have thus the Imprimatur of Christ and the Apostles on the Canon of both the Old and New Testaments.

(6) The Bible, taken as a whole, presents such an appearance of completeness that there is no room for doubt about its Canon. Though made up of many parts, it is manifestly a unit. Its contents are abundant without being redundant. There is in it such a correspondence of predictions and fulfillments; types and Anti-type; parts and counter-parts, that we may reverently say of it in the dying words of its Heart and Life, "It is finished."

(7) The Theist, who believes in the overruling Providence of God, rises entirely above all misgivings on this matter. A God that has a personal Being, and that loves his creatures, would certainly make his Will known to those creatures; and he would as certainly take care of that Will after it was given.

The thorough student will examine the works of Gausson, Alexander, Cosin, Jones, Stuart, Ffytst, Davidson, Weber, Credner, and others on this subject.

2. It is sometimes objected that the Bible is no Revelation to us, even if it should be admitted that it was a Revelation to its original writers. This objection is as sophistical as it is old. Suppose a truth, unknown before, is made known to some individual, and he records it in writing, properly attested: is that truth not made known to everybody who reads that record? A number of witnesses in court give testimony in regard to certain facts of which they have personal knowledge: does the jury reject their testimony because those facts are not personally and immediately known to them? Do you reject all history, because you were not an eye-witness of its innumerable events? Do you deny the conclusions of the astronomer, because you yourself can make no use of his observatory, nor comprehend his sublime calculations? In art, history, and physical science, the discovery of the individual is the discovery of the world, and that for all time to come. As mankind came to know of an America through Columbus, and learned of the existence of Neptune through Le Verrier, so it came to understand the mind of God through the inspired Prophets and Apostles.

3. It is frequently urged against the Bible that it contains nothing new. Now, it is true that the Scriptures contain those truths that are common to all mankind—the truths of nature, instinct, and reason. In this the Word of God coincides with many things contained in other sacred books, so-called. And this is an argument for the Bible rather than against it. We hereby see that it is a Book corresponding to all the nobler instincts and sentiments of man, and that it is adapted to all his conditions. As it is no dishonor to American civilization that it has many things in common with uncivilized races, so you cast no cloud on the grand precepts of the Bible by showing that many of them are contained in the Vedas and the Zend-Avesta. This only shows that the Bible, like the Sabbath, was made for man; and that its principles are such as must commend themselves to man's nobler nature everywhere. The Divinity of this Book is shown by the perfection of its Ideal Humanity.

But it is not true that the Bible contains no new doctrines. The Monotheism of Moses was new to polytheistic Egypt at the time of its first announcement. That a Jew should be un-Jewish, and world-wide in the scope of his philanthropy, was a new idea to the Pharisees, and unexpected by the Gentiles, in the time of Christ and his Apostles. And the sight of a dozen Jews that had thus overcome every selfishness and prejudice, was indeed a novel spectacle to the world. The rite of Baptism received a new significance from the lips of Christ. The heathen conception of sanctification by ablutions and expiations, is very different from the New Testament doctrine of Holiness, which contemplates not only the spotless purity of the body, but also of the desires, volitions, thoughts, and conscience (Heb. ix, 9, 14; x, 22).

There must be something peculiar and unique about the Bible, since, wherever it goes, it remodels society, gives a new impetus and direction to the human mind, and deflects the very currents of history. It would be wide of the mark to reply that the Romish Church has persecuted, and done her part to bring on Europe the darkness of the tenth century. While that is granted, it must not be forgotten that she proceeded to do so only after she had taken the Bible from the hands of the people, having abandoned it herself, to follow traditions and commandments of men. Wherever the Bible is freely circulated, diligently read, heartily believed, and faithfully obeyed, the condition of man is at once improved. Most assuredly such a volume must contain not only new doctrines peculiar to itself, but also a new life, inspiration, and motive power in such doctrines as it inculcates in common with other venerated books.

4. Some would fain find fault with the Bible because it is so variously understood and interpreted. They would thence infer that it cannot be the Word of God. Now, it must be admitted that the meaning of the Scriptures is, on some points, differently apprehended by different readers. But this should not awaken a suspicion in regard to its divinity. It could not be otherwise with anything couched in human language. In our day, no sooner is a law passed by the legislature than it is differently construed by lawyers and judges. The Constitution had scarcely been ratified before even the framers of it expressed opposite views as to its meaning. How much contending there is oftentimes over the wording of wills, contracts, etc. All this goes to show that words are inevitably liable to be half understood, and misunderstood.

And this is not altogether the fault of the book or the document. It is because the readers are so different that they read so differently. A man's taste, training, and natural endowments cannot but influence his conception of what he sees and hears. Articulate the word "sound" in a mixed company, and the doctor will think of a surgical instrument; the sailor's mind will run to a narrow passage of water; the ichthyologist will remember a species of fish; while the musician will be reminded of musical strains. The cause of this difference is not so much in the word "sound" itself as in the individuals who hear it. It is on the same principle that men take different meanings from the Scriptures. Like ventriloquists, they throw their own voices into it, and then censure it if they do not like its tone. In the study of Scripture it is necessary to examine every word, sentence, and statement in the light of its age, context, occasion, and aim.

But this objection may be urged against Nature as well as against the Bible. From age to age man has been reforming and changing his theories of the Universe. Is the Universe, therefore, of human origin? Is it to be rejected as a fraud? No. But why not treat the Scriptures—the Christian's Bible—as fairly as Nature—the Deist's Bible?

But, after all, the different interpretations of Scripture bear mainly on unessential matters. They do not refer so much to the facts of Redemption as to the manner and methods of those facts. All Christians are agreed in regard to the Being of God; Redemption through Christ; and the necessity of Repentance, Faith, Love, Righteousness, and Holiness. As men may differ in their notions about the earth, and yet manage to get their sustenance from its ample resources, so the students of the Bible may vary in their theological views, and at the same time be all inheritors of Eternal Life from the riches of Divine Grace.

5. Considerable noise is sometimes made about the "discrepancies of the Scriptures." Some fool has collected and collated a lot of passages and called them "Self-contradictions of the Bible." By following his method it could be shown that Shakspeare was the greatest ass that ever lived; that Gibbon's History contains not "144," but 144,000 "self-contradictions"; and that even Euclid's theorems and demonstrations are not self-consistent.

There are confessedly difficult and obscure passages in the Bible. This obscurity is caused by a combination of circumstances:

(1) Different writers have sometimes used the same words with different meanings. Poets took liberties with language that historians and prophets did not indulge in. Some Hebrew words had acquired meanings in the time of Malachi which they did not have in the age of Moses. The translator had to study each writer's peculiar idioms, mental characteristics, and age, before he could understand him, and clothe his thoughts in another language. In this, doubtless, the profoundest scholar has occasionally failed, or but partly succeeded.

(2) Our present version of the Bible is sometimes misunderstood because the English language has passed through vast changes since the age of King James. Some words have changed their meanings, while others have become obsolete. There is a sprinkling of such words throughout the English Bible. For instance, it has "advertise" for inform (Numb. xxiv, 14); "artillery" for armor (1 Sam. xx, 40); "bestead" for situated (Is. viii, 21); "bonnets" for caps or hats (Ex. xxviii, 40); "by and by" for immediately (Mark vi, 25); "charity" for love (1 Cor. xiii, 13); "convenient" for becoming (Eph. v, 4); "corn" for grain (Luke vi, 1); "daysman" for umpire (Job ix, 33); "hardly" for with difficulty (Mat. xix, 23); "leasing" for lying (Ps. iv, 2); "lewd" for low (Acts xvii, 5); "neesings" for sneezing (Job xli, 18); "prevent" for anticipate (Ps. cxix, 147); "provoke" for incite (Heb. x, 24); "usury" for interest (Luke xix, 23). For more of such examples see Swinton's "Bible Word-Book." Thus the Bible is liable to be misunderstood, or not understood at all, on some minor points, in consequence of a circumstance—the changeableness of language—which is no fault of its own. The forthcoming version will be free from this misfortune.

(3) The language of the Bible is interwoven with customs and modes of thought that are well-nigh unknown to moderns, and especially to Europeans and Americans. This is another source of occasional embarrassment. We must know all about those early times—the fashions of dress; manner of salutation; styles of furniture; social customs; political peculiarities; and religious ceremonies—before we can understand the Bible to a nicety.

But it is certainly irrational to conclude that it is "self-contradictory" simply because it is not everywhere well understood. Let us treat the Bible like any other book. No one affects contempt for Shakspeare because his English is antiquated. We feel that we have in Rawlinson's Herodotus, and Jowett's Plato the important ideas of those authors, though some minute points may be blurred. We always decide that the language of an ancient writer is to be explained from the peculiarities of his own age, and not from those of our own. Apply these principles to the Scriptures, and the phantoms of "self-contradictions" will vanish. A good, scholarly commentator is a great assistance in this matter. Anything that throws light on antiquity is at once an explanation and a vindication of Holy Writ, which is understood only in the proportion that it is understood self-consistently.

6. The remark is sometimes made that the Bible is "coarse," "vulgar," "indelicate," and "obscene." We have already seen (Letter ix.) that Infidels cannot consistently say anything about this. But let us consider the objection for the sake of others that may not be in their predicament.

The assertion that the Bible is more "objectionable" in this respect than other venerated books, proves nothing but the egregious ignorance of those who make it. It is well known that the ancient worship of Venus was nothing but a bestial debauch. Neumann found the Thirteenth Article of the "Catechism of the Shamans" too disgusting to translate (London, 1831, p. 128). The "Asiatic Researches" will show you ad nauseam that the literature and rites of the ancient and modern Hindus and Persians have always been tainted by impurities. The Koran contains many "indelicate" passages (Chapters ii, vii, xi, xii, xv, xxxvii, etc., etc. Sale's trans.). Of all venerated writings the Bible is the freest from what its enemies call "objectionable" plainness. It has given but the minimum of such truth as might pain genuine modesty.

Wantonness is always a feature of vulgarity. There may be plainness and undisguisedness, and yet no indelicacy. The family physician is not coarse because he asks questions and gives directions in his professional capacity, that would be improper at an evening party. A witness may narrate all he knows bearing on a case on trial in a criminal court, without being considered obscene.

The Bible is simply a narrative of facts. Such matters as fell within its province it told clearly, and without evasion. This was necessary in order to show all the aspects of human nature. The Bible is a truthful witness giving testimony as to the character of man. It is also a good physician, propounding plain inquiries and prescribing its remedies without mincing its words.

"Unto the pure all things are pure; but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure" (Tit. i, 15). The nasty-minded will find food for lascivious thoughts in a treatise on physiology. Even a glimpse of a lady's ankle will turn the hearts of some human brutes into Sodoms. There are those whose vile passions will be inflamed by reading Shakspeare. Such as these will, of course, wrest the Scriptures unto their own destruction. But the manly and pure-minded will find in them only a full and faithful narration of Truth. The Bible inculcates modesty on men and women, as you will see by consulting such passages as Ex. xx, 26; xxviii, 42; 1 Tim. ii, 9, 10.

We should instruct children about the Bible as we teach them about the human body. Whilst we talk less to them about some parts than others, and permit them to regard some parts as "less honorable" than others, we should teach them to regard every portion as necessary to the whole, and all as the workmanship of God (1 Cor. xii, 22-25).

7. The charge is frequently made against the Bible, but more particularly against the Old Testament, that it sanctions cruelty and inhumanity. Honest minds have been puzzled over this apparent fact. It behooves us, then, to pause and ponder over it. Perhaps we can best reach the true solution of it by means of a few distinct considerations:

(1) In regard to any given case of alleged atrocity, we should, first of all, see whether it had the Divine sanction or not. The Jews were sometimes guilty of taking vengeance into their own hands. In such an event they were inexcusable criminals.

(2) It is never fair to pass judgment on any seeming severity until its circumstances and antecedents have all been ascertained. You look over a field and see afar off a woman whipping a child. You only see the flogging. You hear the shrill whiz of the lithe switch as it falls thick and fast, every stroke bringing out a more vigorous shriek from the writhing victim. Your sympathies are at once with the little boy. You are ready to pronounce the woman inhuman. But suppose you draw near and inquire into the affair. Suppose you discover that the woman is the boy's mother; that she is an intelligent lady; that her little son has been disobedient, though frequently forewarned; that he has been truant, untruthful, quarrelsome, incorrigible. You change your mind about the matter. You regard the chastigation not only as just but benevolent. It is exactly so as we look back at the slaughter of the Midianites and Canaanites. If we look only at their final destruction, we are apt to say their doom was unmerited. But when we search sacred and profane history, and find that they were the most corrupt, unrighteous, villainous, crime-abandoned, and blood-thirsty tribes in the whole world, we cannot but conclude that their treatment was not so very inexcusable after all. If ever desperate and murderous savages deserved summary punishment, they were the Midianites and Canaanites. The Bashi-bazouks, Modocs, and followers of Sitting Bull are almost gentlemen in comparison with them.

But granting that they deserved the penalty, does it follow that the Israelites had a right to inflict it? I answer that they had, if the Almighty is the Ruler of the Universe; if he has a right to authorize his rational creatures to apply the penalties of his outraged laws; and if he did so authorize Moses and his successors. If the Commonwealth may empower a sheriff to execute a murderer, and that without bringing the least reproach upon his character, why might not the Lord have made Moses and Joshua the executioners of the Midianites and Canaanites? And if they were so made, why charge them with inhumanity, any more than a sheriff and his assistants at an execution?

Will you reply that such severity is unworthy of God? that a Book which records a sanction of such proceedings cannot be superhuman? I will answer by asking, Is Nature then, a human invention? Is she, too, unworthy of a Divine Creator? She is exposed to this objection as much as the Bible. Look at the ravages of her Floods, Droughts, Pestilences, Thunderbolts, Earthquakes, and Volcanoes, and see if her annals are not fuller of judgments and severities than even the Old Testament. It will pay you to read on this subject the third Letter of Watson's Reply to Paine—that book so unfamiliar to Infidels, though they talk a vast deal about hearing both sides before deciding.

Instead of nursing a mawkish sentimentality over the fate of the Midianites, let us rather learn to realize that "sin is exceeding sinful," and that "the wages of sin is death." And let us not lack candor to admit that the Divine Government, like human governments to-day, may have vested men with authority to administer the penalties of its capital crimes.

8. But the commonest objection of all in these days is, that the Bible is at variance with Science. On this objection it is proper to observe:

(1) That it is urged, for the most part, by second-class scientists, and more vehemently still, by men who are no scientists at all. Allusions to this "variance" are comparatively rare in Spencer's, Tyndall's, and Darwin's writings. Such scientists as Bacon, Newton, Boyle, Herschel, Arrschison, Davy, Brewster, Faraday, Morse, Whewell, Agassiz, were not, in their time, alarmed by this alleged "conflict." And at the present day, it seems to arouse no apprehension in the minds of men like Argyll, Gladstone, Sir William Thomson, Guyot, Mivart, Dawson, Prof. Owens, Dana, Henry, Peters, Winchell. So fearless of the result are such Christian gentlemen as William E. Dodge, William Thaw, Henry W. Sage, John C. Green, George H. Stuart, that they have made munificent bequests to promote Science and education. There need be no scare or panic on account of a war of extermination between Science and the Bible.

It should be remembered in this connection that some scientists are at fault, as well as some theologians. They are disqualified by their very position to be the best judges of moral truth. What Tyndall said of Newton will apply to physical scientists generally: "When the human mind has achieved greatness and given evidence of extraordinary power in any domain, there is a tendency to credit it with similar power in all other domains. Thus theologians have found comfort and assurance in the thought that Newton dealt with the question of revelation, forgetful of the fact that the very devotion of his powers, through all the best years of his life, to a totally different class of ideas, not to speak of any natural disqualification, tended to render him less instead of more competent to deal with theological and historic questions" (Adv. of Science). In addition to this disqualifying influence of an exclusively scientific study, some scientific men show a tendency to magnify the discrepancy and widen the breach between Science and Religion. It is noteworthy that treatises on the "reconciliation" of the two come almost entirely from the religious side.

(2) It is unreasonable to speak of an antagonism between the Bible and Science, where Science is not fixed and established. Science, generally speaking, is in a transitional state, subject to daily modifications and readjustments; and this is especially true of those branches of Science that are said to contradict the Scriptures. Even astronomy is, in many respects, vacillating and fluctuating. It is an "exact" science only in a limited sense. Mathematicians have determined the distance of the sun from the earth variously, between five millions and ninety-five millions of miles (Draper's Conflict bet. Rel. and Sci., pp. 173-4); and this question is still unsettled. The great prevalence of round numbers in astronomical calculations is rather suspicious, showing that they are at best but approximations to truth. Geology is more unsteady still. Take up the last edition of any work on the subject, and you will find it to be "revised," "corrected," and "changed." One of Mr. Huxley's Lay Sermons is on "Geological Reform." The Evolution Theory doubtless contains some truth; but it is yet in its infancy. Prof. Tyndall "deems it indeed certain that these views (of Darwin and Spencer) will undergo modification" (Advancement of Science). Until Darwinism finds its "missing links," and stands demonstrated, we are not prepared to alter the Lord's Prayer, and say: "Our father, which art in Africa." It is folly to talk of a disagreement between the Bible and such departments of Science as are continually changing.

(3) Such things as Science has finally settled corroborate the Scriptures. You have incredulously asked questions about the Deluge. I will answer that Geology is a witness for Genesis. The shell on the mountain-top contains still the lingering roar of a former cataclysm. You would do well to read Hugh Miller's "Testimony of the Rocks" on this subject. Layard's excavations in Nineveh have confirmed many points of Biblical archæology. Modern chemistry has proved that "all nations" are, scientifically speaking, "of one blood" (Acts xvii, 26; comp. 1 Cor. xv, 39). Physiology has confirmed that much-fought clause of the Decalogue: "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." And the law of natural generation, transmitting physical defects and mental tortuosities, does not add the important words, too often overlooked, "Of them that hate me"—of those who themselves repeat the sins of their parents. Genuine Science has brought its gold, and frankincense, and myrrh, to the feet of the Bible. Herodotus was formerly disbelieved, almost with hootings, on account of the "incredibility" of his narratives. But recent investigations have changed that sneering incredulity into enthusiastic admiration. It has been so with the Bible. Ignorance has scoffed at its testimonies; but modern delvings into the remains of antiquity and the meanings of Nature, are vindicating it most triumphantly.

(4) Whatever the state of the question may be, it is clearly inaccurate to say that Nature and the Bible are at variance. The exact truth is, that only the human interpretations of each occasionally clash. Grant the commentator the liberty which the scientist claims, and we need hear no more about a collision between Scripture and Science. Let the Biblical critic modify his interpretations, where demonstrated truth requires it, just as the natural philosopher modifies his interpretations, in his department, when new light demands it—let this be done, and all will be peace, good-will, and coöperation.

Put these facts and considerations together—that the best scientists have not recognized a conflict between the Bible, rightly understood, and Nature, rightly understood; that the established truths of Science have corroborated the Scriptures; that theologians and scientists may modify their respective interpretations as new knowledge is acquired—put, I say, these facts and considerations together, and it will become manifest that there is no cause for dispute between the student of God's Word and the student of God's Works.

In my eighth letter I referred you to some excellent works bearing on this subject. Let me again commend them to your attentive perusal.

And now I take my leave of you once again. I entreat of you, dear friend, give this subject a dispassionate, candid, and thorough examination. Many of the purest hearts and clearest heads of the world have pondered and reflected over that singular Book—THE BIBLE. They became convinced that it was indeed the Word of God. It is no more than fair for you to weigh the reasons they have given for thinking so. It is true that there are perplexities connected with believing and accepting the Bible; but to every thoughtful man there are far greater perplexities in connection with disbelieving and rejecting it. The Bible was opened toward the morning twilight. From the very first the capital letters composing the name of THE SAVIOUR WHICH IS CHRIST THE LORD could be easily read. That was the vital matter. Like Simeon, mankind could then say, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation" (Luke ii, 30). But other sublime truths have been becoming legible. Life and Immortality are already brought to light. Dim sentences are appearing more and more distinctly. But there are still some things which we see only as through a glass darkly. No lexicon has ever given all the meanings of that portentous word, ETERNITY! O to know the Christ of the Scriptures as our Redeemer and Example! Clinging to him, we shall penetrate the mysteries of Futurity only to discover new blessedness. "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Cor. xii, 12). Yours sincerely, G. H. HUMPHREY.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1877.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.—No. 31.

Great Jehovah, according to the words of thy Son, in Mat. vi, 28-34, are we not enjoined to take no thought of the future, or the morrow, as to what we shall eat or drink or wear? and are we not instructed to "consider" and pattern after the lilies of the field, which neither toil nor spin? while, according to Tim. v, 8, are we not told with equal emphasis that, if a man does not make provision for the future in preparing for his own household, he denies the faith and is worse than an infidel? In Prov. vi, 22, are we not also told that a man should leave an inheritance to his children?

According to Eph. iv, 26; 2 Kings ii, 24, and Mark iii, 5, is not anger approved, while in Eccl. vii, 9; Prov. xxii, 24, and James i, 20, is it not greatly disapproved?

In Mat. v, 16, are we not instructed to let our light so shine that all men may see our good works, while in Mat. vi, 1, are we not expressly commanded not to do our alms before men to be seen of them?

In Mat. v, 39, are we not told to resist not evil, and if we are smitten on the right cheek to turn the left cheek to be smitten also, while in Luke, xxii, 36, is not an opposite course prescribed?—If we have no sword to fight with, are we not commanded to sell our garment and buy one?

In Gen. xvii, 10, is not circumcision directly enjoined, while in Gal. v, 2, is it not explicitly condemned?

In Gen. ii, 3, and in Ex. xx, 8, is not the Sabbath sanctioned and commended as superior to other days, while in Isa. i, 13, Rom. xiv, 5, and Col. ii, 16, is it not spoken lightly of and represented as no better than the other days?

In Ex. xx, 11, does it not say the Sabbath was established because thou hadst worked six days and needed to rest on the seventh, while in Deut. v, 15, didst thou not say it was established because thou hadst brought thy people out of Egypt with a strong hand?

According to Ex. xxxi, 15, Num. xv, 32, 36, is not the performance of the slightest amount of work on the Sabbath most positively condemned, and was not life to be taken as a penalty for laboring on that day, whereas, according to John v, 16, and Mat. xii, 1, 2, 3, 5, did not thy alleged Son completely disregard the Sabbath and set it aside?

According to Mat. xxvii, 10, is not baptism positively commanded, while in 1 Cor. i, 14, 17, is it not clearly ignored?

In Gen. ix, 3, 1 Cor. x, 25, and Rom. xiv, 14, are not all animals recommended as good, and is not one kind pronounced as clean as another, while in Deut. xiv, 7, 8, are not many varieties of animals denounced as "unclean" and positively forbidden as food?

In Gen. xxi, 23, 24, 31, Num. xxx, 2, Neh. xiii, 25, Isa. lxxv, 16, and Heb. vi, 13, is not the taking of oaths sanctioned and fully recognized as being right, while in Mat. v, 34, are not all oaths positively prohibited?

In Gen. i, 28; ii, 18, Mat. xix, 5, and Heb. xiii, 4, is not marriage clearly sanctioned and approved, while in 1 Cor. vii, 1, 7, 8, is it not clearly disapproved?

In Deut. xxi, 10-14, and xxiv, 1, is not freedom of divorce clearly permitted, while in Mat. v, 32, is it not restricted?

According to Num. xxxi, 18, Hos. i, 2, and iii, 1-3, is not adultery sanctioned and commended? while in Ex. xx, 14, Heb. xiii, 4, and in other places, is it not positively forbidden?

In Eph. v, 25, 29; Eph. vi, 2, and 1 John iii, 15, is not hatred of kindred condemned, while in Luke xiv, 26 is it not positively commanded?

In Deut. xiv, 26, Judges ix, 13, Ps. civ, 5, and Prov. xxxi, 6, 7; 1 Tim. v, 23, and other passages, are not wine and strong drink recommended, as cheering the heart and being good for the stomach, while in Prov. xx, 1, and Prov. xxiii, 31, 32, is it not denounced?

According to Eccl. viii, 2, 5; Mat. xxiii, 2, 3; Rom. xiii, 2, 3, 6, and 1 Peter ii, 13, 14, is not the duty of obeying rulers, ministers, etc., set forth; while in Ex. i, 17, 20; Dan. iii, 16, 18; Mark xii, 38, 39, 40; Acts iv, 26, 27, and other passages, is not the opposite set forth?

In Gen. iii, 16; 1 Cor. xiv, 34; 1 Tim. ii, 12; 1 Peter iii, 6, are not woman's rights denied: while in Judges iv, 4, 14, 15, and v, 7; Acts ii, 18, and xxi, 9, are they not affirmed?

In Col. iii, 22, 23; 1 Pet. ii, 18, is not duty to masters enjoined; and in Mat. iv, 10, and Mat. xxiii, 10, is not the opposite commanded?

In Gen. i, 25, 26, 27, does it not say that man was created after the other animals; while in Gen. ii, 18, 19, does it not state that man was made before the animals?

In Gen. vii, 1, 25, does it not say Noah took the clean beasts into the ark by sevens; while in the same chapter, 8, 9, does it not say they were taken in by twos?

In Gen. viii, 22, is not the promise given that seed time and harvest should never cease; while in Gen. xli, 54, 56, and lv, 6, does it not say that seed time and harvest did cease for seven years?

In Exodus iv, 21, and ix, 12, does it not say thou didst harden Pharaoh's heart so that he would not let thy people go; while in Ex. viii, 15, does it not say that Pharaoh hardened his own heart?

In Ex. ix, 3, 6, does it not state that all the cattle and horses in Egypt died; while in Ex. xiv, 9, does it not say that the Egyptians pursued after thy people, and were not they and lots of horses drowned in the Red Sea?

In Gen. xi, 12, does it not say that Arphaxad was the father of Sala; while in Luke iii, 35, 36, does it not say that Canaan was the father of Sala?

Does it not say in Mat. ii, 14, 15, 19, 21, 23, that the infant Jesus was taken into Egypt for safety; and in Luke ii, 22, 39, in not an entirely different statement made, and nothing said about his being taken into Egypt?

In Mark i, 12, 13, is not an account given of Jesus being tempted forty days in the wilderness, immediately after his baptism; and in John ii, 1, 2, does it not state that the third day after his baptism he attended the marriage of Cana in Galilee, and performed his first miracle? Does either of the other evangelists mention anything about that first and most extraordinary miracle?

In Mat. v, 1 and 2, does it not say that Jesus preached his first sermon sitting on a mount; while in Luke vi, 17, 20, does it not say it was a plain?

In Mark i, 14, does it not say that John was in prison when Jesus went into Galilee; while in John i, 43, and John iii, 22, 23, does it not say John was not in prison when Jesus made that little journey?

In Mark vi, 8, 9, were not the disciples commanded to take a staff and sandals; and in Mat. x, 9, 10, were they not commanded to take neither staves nor sandals?

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Letter from the Editor.

WOLCOTT, Sunday Eve., Aug. 19, 1877.

DEAR READERS: The Three Days' Grove-Meeting has been held, and we are pleased to be able to pronounce it a great success. Between two and three thousand earnest, intelligent people have been in attendance, and they are returning to their homes filled with enthusiasm, and satisfied with what they have seen and heard.

We came via Rochester, near which city we visited a mother and an only sister, and arrived here at Brother Cosad's at about noon on Friday, the 17th, where we found H. L. Green, G. B. Stebbins, and numbers of others who had preceded us. Some of the preliminary arrangements had been attended to, the officers of the meeting elected, etc.

First of all we wish to express our high appreciation for our very worthy brother and friend, J. Madison Cosad, who has displayed a great amount of zeal and public spirit in what he has done for the cause of Liberalism. One year ago he built near his residence, two miles north of the village of Wolcott, a beautiful Hall, and dedicated it to the uses of Freethought, Scientific, and Liberal Lecturers. This he did entirely at his own expense. This year he caused a large tent to be raised in a grove on his land, for the purposes of this meeting, and he has fed and lodged nearly fifty persons for three days, and all free of charge. He is a most worthy man, and his great desire seems to be to do all he can to promote the growth of Liberalism and advance the cause of human progress. His family were all very kind and attentive to their numerous guests, and everything was done for our comfort as much as though we had been patrons of a first-class hotel in a large city. Every person was made to feel that he was welcome, and that he was regarded as a brother in the great church of humanity.

Some rain fell during the afternoon of Friday, but the two subsequent days were very fine. Many were present from different parts of the country. Among those from a great distance were Wm. Sisson, Port Hope, Canada, G. F. Junkermann, Cincinnati, and Dr. M. Woolley, of Streator, Illinois.

The first meeting was called at 2 o'clock, Friday afternoon. The first work in order was the organization of The Freethinkers' Association of Central and Western New York. The Constitution, object, and names of officers were read, after which a general conference was held, and short speeches made by several persons. Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit, acted as Chairman for the day, E. M. Sellon, Sec.

The Editor of this paper was first called upon for a few remarks, after making which he read Eli Perkins' report of his interview with a Chinese priest in a Joss-house at San Francisco. H. L. Green, of Salamanca, G. F. Junkermann, of Cincinnati, G. B. Stebbins, of Detroit, Prof. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, Dr. M. Woolley, of Streator, Ill., Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y., and several others made speeches of moderate length. Selections were also read by Messrs. Stebbins and Mills.

The second meeting came to order at 9:30 Saturday, Prof. Mills as permanent Chairman. The opening address of an hour was by Dr. T. L. Brown, on the "Harmonious System of Thought." D. M. Bennett followed in a lecture of an hour and a half, on the "Religions of the World." H. L. Green followed with some remarks, and then Horace Seaver of the Boston Investigator.

The afternoon meeting on Saturday commenced at 2 o'clock. Mr. Stebbins led off with a lecture of an hour, a considerable portion of which was a defense of Spiritualism. After he had concluded, Horace Seaver addressed the audience for about the same length of time, touching upon a variety of subjects. Rev. J. H. Harter, of Auburn, gave the closing address which abounded in telling humorous hits.

In the evening the large tent was lighted up, and was well filled with anxious listeners. The exercises consisted of short speeches of ten or fifteen minutes each. Among the speakers were Mrs. Gardner, of Rochester, H. L. Green, Mr. Owens, of Ogdensburg, Dr. T. L. Brown, M. B. De Lano, of Orleans Co., Mrs. Post, of Rochester, Mr. Jenkins and others. The meeting was highly entertaining.

Sunday morning at 9 o'clock we gathered promptly at the tent. The work of organization was perfected, the meeting adopting by acclamation the officers that had been previously nominated, the platform, constitution, etc. [These will be given in full in our next.] Then an hour and a half was used up in five-minute speeches by various persons in the audience. Some told of the progress of Freethought in their respective localities. Mr. M. B. DeLano told us how he and Mr. L. C. Harding had built and dedicated to Liberalism and free speech a Hall at So. Barre, N. Y. After this was over two regular speeches were delivered, the first by Mrs. R. W. Scott Briggs, of West Winfield, N. Y., and the other by H. L. Green.

Sunday afternoon the meeting was opened with a song, accompanied by the organ, by Prof. C. O. Hudson, of Indianapolis, who at each meeting after the second, gave us several pieces. He was assisted by his sister, Mrs. J. H. Harter. Their excellent singing cheered and gladdened all present. Regular lectures of about an hour each were given by Prof. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, and Mr. J. P. Mendum of the Boston Investigator, after which nearly two hours were occupied in short speeches from several persons, among whom were Dr. T. L. Brown, D. M. Bennett, Mrs. Gardner, Horace Seaver, Dr. Steele, Mr. G. B. Stebbins, Rev. J. H. Harter, and several others. The Rev. Mr. Ellis, of North Huron, who has recently renounced the fallacies of orthodoxy, and who by reading THE TRUTH SEEKER and other sources of light came to take a different view of the faith of a life-time, greatly interested the audience by narrating how he had been brought to change his views. He is a very candid man, and he impressed his hearers with the struggles he had passed through in discarding the old creeds, which, rather late in life, he had become satisfied were erroneous. No one who heard him could doubt that his course had been marked by the most honest convictions. For twenty or thirty years he had been a preacher in good standing in the Methodist Church.

On this evening the three days' meeting was closed by a gathering in Mr. Cosad's Liberal Hall, where Mrs. Gardner, Dr. Brown, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. Mills, Mr. Junkermann, and others, respectively gave short talks.

The best of feeling pervaded this large meeting. Every body seemed to be filled with enthusiasm and a determination to help extend the cause of truth and mental liberty. It was a happy reunion of the lovers of human progress, and many left the grounds with the resolution to organize Liberal Associations in their respective localities. The moral results of the meeting will undoubtedly be of a very profitable and beneficial character. During the coming autumn many new organizations will undoubtedly be effected, and new zeal infused into the ranks of Freethinkers and Free Enquirers. The general sentiment seemed to be that the time had arrived to make an advance all along the line, and to take the offensive against the allied hosts of superstition, ecclesiasticism and error. Good fruits may be looked for from the Three Days' Grove-Meeting at Wolcott.

We were particularly gratified to take so many friends and patrons by the hand, and to become acquainted with many new friends. We have no doubt the three days we passed with our kind friends from all parts of the country was time well spent on our part, and that the breathing of the pure air of the country and the enjoyment of the real glories of nature will be a real benefit to us.

The only disappointment we experienced was the non-arrival of a quantity of books, pamphlets, tracts, photographs, etc., which a week before we had shipped to Wolcott to sell on the grounds. They failed to get through, for which we were quite sorry, as were also many others.

We have received a letter from A. W. Stephenson, of Rock Island, Ill., announcing the death, on the 10th of August, of his son, our friend and subscriber, Charles Stephenson. We deeply regret the loss of this young and enthusiastic Liberal. He has been known to the reading world through his book of poems entitled "The Cuban Martyrs." He died firm in the faith of the ultimate triumph of Liberal principles; and we trust that the influence of his pure life will have its effect upon those with whom he was intimately associated, and who could not fail to love and admire him for his truth and nobility of character.

THAT is the bitterest of all—to wear the yoke of our own wrong doing.—George Eliot.

A CHILDHOOD passed with a due mixture of rational indulgence, under fond and wise parents, diffuses over the whole of life a calm pleasure and, in extreme old age, is the very last remembrance which time can erase from the mind of man.

Religion.

MR. EDITOR: The Latin root from which the word religion is derived means a binding together again, or re-binding, which sense is not the one now conveyed by the word religion. If it was, the term might be dispensed with, for a re-binding, in a moral sense, is a moral action. Morality is a science based upon human knowledge of the just, true, and useful—its basis, experience; but religion has no other support than awe and wonder, which are weaknesses of the human intellect, felt by men in their attempts to solve the mysteries of the Universe. Sterne says: "Of all cant in this canting world, the cant of criticism is the worst"; but I think it must give place to the cant of religion, which appears to me to be the cant of cants. Like the rod of Aaron, it swallows up all the rest. I think it is as wild to talk about a reform of society while the people are religious as to set about emptying the great Mississippi with hand-buckets. The Mississippi might be emptied with hand-buckets, so might a religious people be made good and virtuous. Both are possible, especially by the aid of miracle; for miracles make anything possible and anything true. Leslie says: "A false religion is but a corruption of the true," which would be splendid information if any man living knew where a true religion could be found, or in what true religion consists. What a pity Christians cannot find an infallible sacred standard of truth, and nail down the opinions of skeptics to the moral plank of the carpenter's son. Then would true religion shine forth in divine splendor, and with such dazzling brightness that Atheists would hide themselves in caves and holes where its light could not enter—as the poet says, "Kneeling, trembling, and adoring." Not only angels but Atheists would weep; discontent would be swept from the land, poverty be unknown, priests sent to the plow, soldiers be put to good business, and lawyers transformed into honest men! Oh! what blessed times!—when all craft would be destroyed, and all men united in one great brotherhood of peace, forgetting their several natures, and filling the air with joy and gladness.

Talk of Atheists, indeed! In those times there could be none such; for a true religion would be a miracle, and none but a god can work a miracle.

Show me a man who pretends to teach true religion, and I will show him to be a fool or a knave. All, no matter what they be called, whether mystery-men, parsons, or priests, who pretend to know the will of a god or gods, must either be knaves or fools, or both.

The people have been flattered into the idea that they are a thinking people. Pshaw! does any one suppose a thinking people would pay millions of dollars to a lot of men called priests to think for them? Of what earthly benefit to a thinking people would be any puppet show? A thinking people, forsooth! Yes, so are Hottentots and Caribs; even idiots are a thinking people, but thinking is one thing and thinking justly another. The truth is, we are giants in science, pigmies in religion; priding ourselves on our philosophy, yet disgracefully revelling in every species of fiction. Science is the glory of the world, but religion is its shame! For by its accursed influence the multitude are kept in gross ignorance, fit victims for vampires of society; only breathe upon them, and they become corrupt masses of brutalism.

Religion is all show, lies, delusion, and imposture. It is a leprosy which insinuates itself into the veins of our moral, political, and social being, poisoning the very source of pure and enlightened reason, which will in time become the delight and glory of mankind. Religion may be compared to powders which are of so corrosive a nature that they not only eat away the proud-flesh of a wound but the sound flesh also, rotting the bones and piercing to the very marrow! Will the people never understand that religion has no other foundation than that of mere belief? Will it never be understood that there can be no religion without faith, no priests without imposters, no churches without mumery and delusions? If such men as John A. Lant, who cannot stoop to say Folly's catechism, or believe in an old Jew book, are to be borne down by fanatics like Anthony Comstock, why, then, there is an end to freedom and morality, and virtue and justice are but empty names.

America is rich, but it is not a happy nation; it has all the means of enjoyment, but enjoyment is beyond the reach of its people. The cause of this is to be found in human error, of which religion, under all its forms, is the principal cause. If this be so, then

How'er disguised,
Idol, saint, virgin, prophet, crescent, cross,
For whatsoever symbol thou art prized,
Thou sacerdotal gain but general loss,
Who from true worship, gold, can separate thy dross?

All religions are of equal value—that is, none of them are of any value, unless we look upon them as crutches for moral cripples. But when society shall have become cured of its moral paralysis, it will throw away its religions.

Robert Owen used to declare that "all the religions of the world are founded upon falsehood," and he might have added all the religions that ever will be founded, whether called rational or irrational. A rational religionist would be as curious a being as one calmly violent, or reasonably insane. It debauches the minds of its professors, and fills them with terror lest too much light be let in upon the human understanding. It minimizes morality while maximizing itself: preaches men into vice instead of out, and betrays its countless dupes by the most arrant nonsense that ever fell from the lips of a lunatic. It splits society into knots of raving imbeciles, who agree in nothing but howling one against another.

Finally, religion is that engine of craft which makes life a burden, death a fear, reducing men to every species of mental servitude, the haters of a tyranny they dare not resist, and lick the feet of the tyrants that tread them in the dust. It has been said of Fontenelle that had he his hand full of truths, he would not open it to the vulgar, thus intimating

That pleasure is as great
In being cheated as to cheat.

Such is my reply to the oft-repeated question: What is religion? I have shown it to be folly—the corrupt fruit of diseased human imaginings. Its history is a history of wild romance, unfolding tales of such horror that he must be brazened by custom who does not shudder at their perusal. Religion is a mere delirium, a species of drunkenness the worst of all; and it is no wonder, as Bacon has remarked, that its rites and ceremonies were attributed to Bacchus by the ancients, when every ungovernable passion grows wanton and luxuriant amid its corruptions. J. PETTY.

La Crosse.

The Freedom of the Press.

About forty years ago Abner Kneeland was imprisoned in Boston for so-called blasphemy. A little later G. J. Holyoake received the "Last Trial for Atheism" in England. Since that time the laws relating to such "offenses" have become a dead letter. The pitfall to which the Liberal press is now exposed is not blasphemy but "obscenity." The discussion of the Social Question by Woodhull and Claflin and John A. Lant, with their incarceration in jail—even in a penitentiary at hard labor, as in the case of the latter—will be chronicled by the future historian and excite as much astonishment as the conflicts of opinion, with the persecution which they engendered, in the past. That the plea of "obscenity" is not altogether a recent one is evidenced by the fact that the pioneers or advocates of what is known as "preventive intercourse" met with much obloquy and persecution some forty or fifty years ago. I refer to the heroic Richard Carlile, the author of "Every Woman's Book," the first book which openly described these measures. Robert Dale Owen, several years afterwards, wrote his "Moral Physiology," for which, with his qualified endorsement of Carlile's book, he received much denunciation. Dr. Chas. Knowlton, of Massachusetts, quickly followed with his pamphlet, "Fruits of Philosophy," but in this case persecution followed with imprisonment. This, however, gave much publicity to the pamphlet, and caused it to sell more widely than would otherwise have been the case. Since then the eccentric Dr. Landis, of Philadelphia, has been prosecuted and imprisoned for publishing and selling a little work entitled "Secrets of Generation." Another notable and original production is that of Mr. John H. Noyes, of Oneida, New York, entitled "Male Continence." This method of Mr. Noyes is the more notable from the fact that it is practically carried out in the Social Community of which he was the leader.

Dr. Knowlton's pamphlet had remained unchallenged in England until lately. It is now objected to on the score of obscenity and immorality. Mr. Bradlaugh has valiantly undertaken the task of publishing and selling it. Already has the opposition been the means of advertising and selling thousands of copies.

These methods of controlling propagation, or at least the supposed necessity for them, were undoubtedly suggested by the famous "Principles of Population" by Malthus, a work that should be read by every reader who feels an interest in these questions. It has been claimed that the reading of this work suggested to Darwin some of the principles which underlie his celebrated theory of Natural Selection.

But my chief object in penning these lines for THE TRUTH SEEKER is to call attention to a work which not only combines all the principles and methods of the foregoing works, but treats this whole question in such an exhaustive and elaborate manner as to leave but little more to be desired in this direction. It is true that the writer does not indorse all the views advanced by the author, but of those views thinking men and women must be the judges. This work was written by a "Graduate of Medicine" in 1854, and is entitled "Elements of Social Science." It has passed through twelve editions, and is published besides in four or five different languages. Should the freedom of the press be curtailed in Great Britain, the interdiction of the publication of this famous work would undoubtedly follow. Several years ago, in our own country, George Francis Train threatened to issue the "Obscene Pagan Bible," comprising all the obscene passages of our so-called "Holy Bible." By giving the public a sample of what could be done in that line in the way of a few extras called the "Train Ligue" he so frightened the Y. M. C. A. that a special law was passed by Congress through their influence to not only cover this case but also works of the foregoing character. Now let any one go to the trouble of making a scrap-book of Train's proposed work, and we will venture to say that he will be astonished at the magnitude of the work he would form. No better argument could be used to illustrate an argument against the use of the Bible in the schools than such collection to be used as an appendix. It is owing to this law that Lant was convicted of obscenity, and Dr. Foote was fined $3,500 for sending through the mail his pamphlet, "Words in Pearl for the Married."

We boast of the freedom of our press, but do not the facts show that even monarchical England has been more tolerant in the discussion of the social question than we have been?

I see that Mr. Bennett purposes issuing an American edition of the famous "Elements of Social Science." It is to be hoped that this work may meet with a cordial reception and be widely read. It is a work written in a conscientious spirit, and cannot help but impart information of real value. It is to be hoped that the free discussion of social and sexual questions may not be hampered by laws which, in reality, have only injustice as their foundation. There is a vast difference between the earnest sober questions and obscene literature as generally understood. May the day soon arrive when no restrictions will be placed on truth telling as well as truth seeking. MEDICUS.

"My Father's Business."

HYGEIAN HOME, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

BROTHER BENNETT: Please allow me to encroach upon the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER in a brief report of Zion's cause in this portion of God's heritage.

In a sermon recently delivered by the Rev. Dr. P. (Presbyterian) of this place, on "The Great Want of the Church," the speaker made the startling announcement that "notwithstanding Springfield sends more people to her churches every Sabbath morning than any other city in the State outside of St. Louis, the church thermometer stands at zero, the evidences being presented at the regular Wednesday evening prayer-meetings."

"Congregations of five hundred membership have four hundred sleepers, and congregations of two hundred have one hundred and seventy-five dead members."

"There are not twenty-five active, working members in either of the (eight) churches in Springfield."

"In a choice between Christianity and the world, the latter has it, and Christians in choosing between places of amusement and the services of God, too often choose the former."

He further continued: "He thought ministers in too many cases had become so modest they could not present facts as they really are."

He referred to a celebrated modern divine, whose speech was chaste and refined, asking pardon for having been so crude as to use the word hell in his discourse. He said he thought ministers should not regard themselves superior to Christ, their great teacher, who was not too modest to say to a wicked people, "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

"The kingdom of Christ," he added, "is making slow progress; where one man is saved ten are dragged down to destruction."

Fearful indeed is it not to contemplate?

He continued: "With the abundant supply of church machinery and sixty-five thousand ministers in the United States, the churches do not average but two conversions in a year, and he saw nothing but a defeat and complete rout unless there was a general awakening in the Church."

The above, coming as it does, from one of Springfield's leading ministers, whose moral, religious and intellectual standing is unquestionable, shows unmistakably the fossilized and lifeless condition of that great system called Christianity, which is to revolutionize the world and bring in subjection all other systems. With the mighty hosts of chosen vessels in God's service, and the innumerable sums of money at their disposal, to say nothing of the great sacrifices of life for man's redemption, it is truly lamentable and quite discouraging to be assured of the salvation only of so few.

Notwithstanding protracted religious meetings are usually held here from one to two months from the beginning of the New Year, this same divine in connection with the above stated that "but one profession of religion had been published in Springfield in a year."

So destitute of the vitalizing principle is theology, that little short of a combined and prolonged effort of the more zealous and energetic members of the church, with their concentrated magnetisms, is found to be sufficient to fully arouse the remaining portion from their stupor to the great necessity of bringing souls to Christ. From the doctor's own statement of the church's lethargy, no greater evidence for something better and more satisfying than the present system of theology could be required.

Interest in the Biblical, mythological stories so oft repeated is largely lost, while there is a growing interest and almost universal desire for the energizing truths of science and common-sense ideas, which, to be understood and appreciated, need only to be fairly and forcibly presented.

In the front rank of those who have the stamina to meet and successfully expose the sophistries of the priesthood and disabuse the public mind of their erroneous teachings, is the Editor of this journal, who justly merits the combined influence and support of all those who desire the moral and mental elevation of mankind, and whose position and intellectual capacity is less suited to such a work than his.

Then include me, Bro. Bennett, with this class of workers, and put me down for a copy of "Lord Amberley's work," six copies of "John's Way," and "The Case Against the Church," for which is enclosed money-order of $5.50 for the amount. Fraternalty yours,

J. S. LYON, M.D.

It is a miserable state of mind to have few to desire and many things to fear.

HE shall be immortal who liveth till he be stoned to death by one without fault.

MODESTY is to merit as shades to figures in a picture, giving it strength and beauty.

AN honest blacksmith, when urged to start a libel suit, answered: "I can hammer out a better reputation on my anvil than all the lawyers in Christendom can give me."

LIMIT your wants; the must is hard, and yet solely by this must can we show how it is with us in our inner man. To live according to our caprice requires no peculiar powers.

ENVY cannot be hid. It accuses and judges without proofs; it exaggerates defects; its conversation is filled with gall, exaggeration, and injury. It stands out with obstinacy and with fury against striking merit. It is hasty, insensible and brutal.

Death of Freedom,

BY GERALD MASSEY.

Smitten stones will talk with fiery tongues,
And the worm, when trodden, will turn;
But, cowards, ye cringe to the cruellest wrongs,
And answer with never a spurn.
Then torture, oh, tyrants, the spiritless drove,
Columbia's helots will bear,
There's no hell in their hatred, no God in their love,
No shame in their death's despair.
For our fathers are praying for pauper pay,
Our mothers with death's kiss are white;
Our sons are the rich man's serfs by day,
And our daughters his slaves by night.
The tearless are drunk with our tears; they have driven
The God of the poor man mad!
For we weary of waiting the help of heaven,
And the battle goes still with the bad,
Oh, but death for death, and life for life,
It were better to take and give,
With hand to throat, and knife to knife,
Than die out as thousands live!
For our fathers are praying for pauper pay,
Our mothers with death's kiss are white;
Our sons are the rich man's serfs by day,
And our daughters his slaves by night.
When the heart of one half the world does beat
Akin to the brave and the true,
And the tramp of democracy's earthquake feet
Goes thrilling the wide world through,
We should not be living in darkness and dust,
And dying like slaves in the night,
But, big with the might of the inward must—
We should battle for freedom and right!
But our fathers are praying for pauper pay,
Our mothers with death's kiss are white;
Our sons are the rich man's serfs by day,
And our daughters his slaves by night.

A Model Deacon.

Jersey City is possessed of model deacons. The following occurrence illustrates some of their peculiarities:

On the first of May last, Dea. John H. —, of the Second Presbyterian Church, was engaged in the pleasant pastime of moving. A load of furniture had just been dumped in a rather careless manner by the cartman upon the sidewalk, by which operation it had been broken and damaged to the amount of about $100. Deacon John was, of course, indignant, and eased his mind with a volume of "cuss-words" upon the poor cartman's head. Just at that moment Dr. P—e came along, and asked the deacon what he was swearing so terribly about.

"Just look there," said the Deacon, pointing to his injured furniture; "see what that G—d d—d blockhead has done!—he's broken more furniture than his d—d head is worth."

"But, John," interposed the doctor, "you mustn't swear so; it's very wicked; and, besides, you must remember that you are a deacon in the church, and are setting a bad example for the members."

"I know it," replied the deacon, "but G—d d—m their souls, too. They had no business to make me deacon until after the first of May; for a man that won't swear then ain't worth a cuss anyhow."

The doctor gave it up, and left the deacon to have his swear out.

My Experience with John N. Maffitt.

SHAKERS, N. Y., Aug. 12, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 4th, I read with sorrow the sad history of a class of humanity which claims for itself the superior virtue to which it so frequently proves untrue. If these men and women ever were exalted to those heavens they declaim so much about, surely the tail of the dragon has drawn a third part to the earth of their sensuous natures. We know your compilation to be very far from complete, but it was sufficiently complete to satisfy any rational human being that Ann Lee's testimony was true: "Poor man in the flesh, is always in danger." By the perusal of that dreadful catalogue, there was a feeling of uncharity aroused within me as I came to the name of John N. Maffitt. I had an experience with him that time can never efface from my memory—one that I seldom permit myself to dwell upon.

I was an eight-year-old Brooklyn boy when, about thirty years since, Maffitt ministered in a revival at Dr. Green's church. Among the conspicuous features of that revival was a tall, spare but beautiful young woman, moving about the church during services, pleading with attendants to become converted by "coming forward." Her endeavors were a complete success, and very many who may read these lines will bear me witness. Maffitt was a powerful preacher, had a very musical voice, and would break forth from discourse into songs and hymns with invariable the desired effect—arousing the revival spirit in many. At his ordination as a minister, one of the attending priests remarked upon his peculiar faculty of effectiveness with the gentler sex, quoting Acts xvii, 12. After services were over and Maffitt had descended from the pulpit, hundreds would flock around him—a great majority being women—and I heard many, upon grasping his hand, tell him he was worth his weight in gold, etc.

To my childish mind he was Jesus come again, and I clasped his hands with reverent awe, and when he kissed me I felt as highly honored as I had thought of the children brought to Jesus! There was some cause for my thinking so. The young and beautiful woman before mentioned was Fannie Pierce (daughter of Judge Pierce), whom I loved, as a child, second only to my sainted mother. My father being a legal gentleman, was frequently under the necessity of visiting the Judge; and I as a little boy of six, always accompanying him, was always welcomed by caresses and most affectionate attentions by "my pretty Fanny," as I used to call her. Fanny's acting coadjutant to Maffitt filled me with admiration for the man. A few weeks after, there was a "great time" in Gold street, none less than the marriage of "my Fanny" to Maffitt. I was there. The furore of assembled hundreds outside alarmed me, as it bespoke the greatest objection to the marriage, which I then could not understand. I kissed Mrs. Maffitt good-bye on leaving Brooklyn, and never saw her again; but only a few months afterward learned to my extreme horror that, forsaken and deserted by Maffitt, she had died of a broken heart! Then "did my love to hatred turn," then did I uselessly weep as I learned of his several previous wives and ungodly liaisons with many dishonored women!

From that time to the present John N. Maffitt's talents, which were wonderfully great, have only made me detest his memory the more! and while admitting of much honor and sincerity among the clerical profession, my doubts are many the more on account of my early, loving experience with Fanny Pierce, and the worse than murderous desertion of her by John Newland Maffitt.

Yours truly,
G. A. Lomas, Ed. Shaker.

Mr. Humphrey's Book.

ANGOLA, IND., Aug. 4, 1877.

BRO. BENNETT: July 11th I received a printed card from the Rev. G. H. Humphrey, headed in large letters, "Hell and Damnation," a book advertisement. I wish to say to Mr. Humphrey that the early part of my life was wholly overshadowed by this terrible cloud of hell and damnation. My health at one time was seriously impaired by this hell and damnation doctrine, and now with due respect to the Rev. gentleman, I will say I have no use for that kind of literature. I am perfectly free from fear of the future—this world to me is very beautiful; the Creator and his works I revere, yet it is something I do not pretend to comprehend. I consider myself but an infant in knowledge, but the little that I have learned of Nature and Nature's laws, and the light of truth that has penetrated the dark cloud that once hung over me has made me happy, not reckless, and I hope that Mr. Humphrey may yet see his error and devote his time and talent to the lifting of the dark cloud of ignorance and superstition from the people. To be bound in the chains of ignorance and superstition is hell and damnation in good earnest. I look forward to the time of my dissolution as calmly as I look forward to the time of retiring for a night's sleep. I have a hope that I may have a conscious existence beyond this life, but I have no knowledge and no fears in relation to that matter. I live for the present, knowing if I do my duty faithfully in the present according to the best of my understanding and ability, it will ever be well with me in the future.

SALLIE J. MINER.

A Prehistoric City.

THE REMARKABLE RUINS DISCOVERED IN THE VALLEY OF THE ANIMAS, IN COLORADO.

Prof. Hayden has given southwestern Colorado a new interest by discovering and describing the ancient ruins in that section, and in southeastern Utah. The stories told about these ruins are very interesting. The fertile valley of the Animas was densely inhabited and highly cultivated by an enlightened race of people centuries ago. The ruins of the houses, corrals, towns, fortifications, ditches, pottery ware, drawings, non-interpretible writings, etc., show that many arts were cultivated by these prehistoric people which are now entirely lost. Their houses were built of almost every kind of stone, from small boulders to the finest sandstone.

The finest of these ruins, and the nearest perfect, are situated about thirty-five miles below Animas City, in a large valley fifteen miles long by seven wide, on the west side of the river. This valley has been covered with buildings of every size, the two largest being 300 by 6,000 feet, and about 300 feet apart. They are built of small blocks of sandstone, laid in adobe mud, the outside walls being four feet and the inside walls from a foot and a half to three feet thick. In the lower story are found port-holes a foot square. There are rooms now left and walls for about four stories high still standing. About the second story, on the west side, there was once a balcony along the length of the building. No signs of a door are visible in the outer walls, and the ingress must have been from the top, in the inside there being passages from room to room. Most of them are small, from 8 by 10 to 12 by 14 feet, the doors being 2 by 4 feet. The arches over the doors and port-holes are made of small cedar poles two inches wide, placed across, on which the masonry is placed. The sleepers supporting the floors are of cedar, about eight inches thick, and from 20 to 50 feet long, and about three feet apart. A layer of small round poles was then placed across the sleepers, then a layer of thinly-split cedar sticks, then about three inches of earth, then a layer of cedar bark, then another layer of dirt, then a carpet of some kind of coarse grass. The rooms that have been protected from exposure are whitewashed, and the walls are ornamented with drawings and writings. In one of these rooms the impression of a hand dipped in whitewash on a joist is as plain as if it had been done only yesterday. In another room there are drawings of tarantulas, centipedes, horses, and men.

In some of the rooms have been found human bones, bones of sheep, corn cobs, goods, raw hides, and all colors and varieties of pottery ware. These two large buildings are exactly the same in every respect. Portions of the buildings plainly show that they were destroyed by fire, the timbers being burned off and the roofs caved in, leaving the lower rooms entirely protected. The rock that these buildings were built of must have been brought a long way, as nothing to compare with it can be found within a radius of twenty miles. All the timber used is cedar, and has been brought at least twenty-five miles. Old ditches and roads are to be seen in every direction.

The Navajo Indians say, in regard to these ruins, that their forefathers came there five old men's ages ago (500 years) and that these ruins were here, and the same then as now, and there is no record whatever of their origin.

Simple Ben's Faith.

Do you think I'm afraid of dyin'
Bees I would rather live
And hang on to my mis'able chances
And what they are likely to give
In the way of good eatin' and drinkin',
With the 'pepasy a-houndin' me so.
And havin' to den up in winter
Like the bear with the airliest snow?
No Sir! I tell you that dyin'
Is leavin' the things that we know
And floatin' out into strange waters,
All dark above un' below!
I kear nothin' for New Jerus'lem;
I kno' 'twouldn't seem like hum—
'Cos where they have things so splendid
They don't expect poor folks to cum!

But O, if the singin' in heaven
Was the hum of the wind in the pines,
Or the noise of the brook and the river
Where the brook and the river jines;
If the birds were to sing halleluyar
As they do in the bushes all day,
And the little brown chippies would chitter
And the locusses chirrup away;

If them streets was all kivered with mosees
And shaded with trees overhead,
With leaves droppin' down in a shower,
Plain purple and yellow and red;
If over that wonderful river
I could go all alone fur to float
In and out through the sweet smellin' lilies,
With only just Maje in my boat;

If I could hear Maje before me
A-barkin' along the trail,
I should know there was somethin' to foller
That wouldn't be likely to fail:
And I'd lay down my head contented
To let the moss over me grow
As it does on the trees in the forest,
And say I was willin' to go.

If the Lord has allers been with me,
And he held me fast by the hand
When the fog kivered up the valleys
And I'd lost the lay of the land,
And 'twas safe to trust him so fur,
I'll trust him the very last mile;
He knows where to look when he wants me
Without hailin' him all the while.

Friendly Correspondence.

I. F. HALDEMAN, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: I love THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is not only a "seeker" but a finder of truth, and a teller of the same. If times were better there would be an immense demand for your publications. I heartily wish you success in all your great and laudable enterprises.

WM. A. RAMSDELL, Meads Mills, Mich., writes: The two copies of "Collection" received, and please send me two more. It is a book that the people of this locality have wanted very much. We can now conduct the funeral service of our friends without being imposed upon by blackguards of the "ragged edge" order.

JOHN CLARK, Arcata, Cal., writes: Orthodoxy is on the wane here. THE TRUTH SEEKER is especially sought by the young and growing minds of this generation, and by all who are beginning to think for themselves. I trust I may live to see the day when the masses will not do their thinking through a priestly proxy.

FRANK HANAN, Oregon, Wis., writes: I have been looking over the "Collection," and I must candidly say that I think it well worth the price, even if there were not a hymn in it. But now we can sing whenever we feel like it; can sing doxologies and songs of truth, and can sing to suit everybody. The getting up of this work is the happiest hit you ever made.

J. R. KERR, Nolans River, Tex., writes: I have read the first volume of Truth Seeker Tracts, and if the other three volumes are as good, they are the best books that ever came into my hands. They contain just the matter for missionary work. I have been a patron of your paper for over a year, and all I ask is that it may continue to be as good in the future.

T. I. STEVENSON, Corydon, Ky., writes: Your writings accord so well with my own ideas that it really makes me happy to read them. I never believed in the Design Argument in regard to the Universe, but I do believe there is design in your tracts. I am located right in the heart of orthodoxy, but shall do all in my power in helping along the good cause by circulating your publications.

S. H. PETERS, Sabetha, Kan., writes: I enclose pay for your plucky little paper another year. I am one of the young men of the times who think that the worship of anything is degrading and a species of fetishism. In this section of the country, the youth are quite skeptical and the majority of the rising generation throughout the land are ignoring the right of any power to control their religious belief.

W. S. WALTER, Rock Springs, Wyo., writes: THE TRUTH SEEKER comes regularly and is read with interest. It is really a feast of fat things. I am pleased at the ease with which you handle your opponent in the discussion. The main arguments, thus far, are mostly made up of quotations. Of course the subject has many commentators, and one can always find quotations to suit his side of the question.

L. H. LYMAN, Buffalo, Mo., writes: For many years I have regarded the popular systems of religion as shams. I have lately been reading some of your publications, and like them very much indeed, especially Ingersoll's lectures, which I pronounce the best book I ever read. The people here are generally ignorant and intensely prejudiced against everything not out-and-out orthodox. I am trying to circulate your books to the best of my means and as far as I can get them read by my neighbors.

DANIEL DAVIS, Fayette, Iowa, in remitting for "The Champions of the Church" and a second copy of the "Collection," thus writes of the latter: I have had to sell my copy to the first Liberal to whom I exhibited it, he was so determined to have it. You ought to have an immense sale of the work, for it really is a necessity in the family of every Freethinker. It is astonishingly cheap and singularly adapted for the purposes for which it was prepared. It now seems quite strange how we ever got along without such a work.

D. MADDEN, Kimberton, Pa., writes: Enclosed you will find amount for "Collection" and renewal of my subscription. Some time ago I wrote you to discontinue my paper when the time expired, but after further consideration have concluded to remain a reader of the noble TRUTH SEEKER. May it prosper! for such papers are doing more good than all the preaching from the thousands of pulpits. They appeal to the reasoning faculties, expanding and developing the intellectual attainments, leaving blind faith to the Church, as a relic of past ages.

MRS. J. H. MORSE, Scott, Ind., writes: The "Collection" was duly received, and notwithstanding domestic duties and poor health, I have managed to read it through; and portions of it were so beautiful that I have read them over and over again. The hymns and recitations are superior to any similar compilation of verses of which I know. It is almost enough to give a person the spirit of prayer to read the Invocations. THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity in many houses, and the reading of it gives one hope that the "good time coming" is not far hence. Do not let the fear of Ludlow street jail nor the gates of hell deter you from the great work before you.

MRS. KATE PARKER, Anaheim, Cal., writes: I am economizing on the can-get-along-withouts to save money for your publications. I look upon THE TRUTH SEEKER as the best of papers, and the only one that dares print truth. Oh how I wish there were more people who would take an interest in it and read and investigate for themselves! The "Sages" seems an ever-new book, and I am extremely well pleased with Amberley's "Analysis." Mrs. Slenker's photo. is received, and every time I look at it I feel like saying, "How do you do, Sister Elmina? Every word from your pen is a gem to me. Give us more of your writings, and may you have your reward here and hereafter."

MRS. M. JONES, Centralia, Ill., writes: I have received a copy of "The Truth Seeker Collection," and consider it one of the most useful books of this age. It is something that has been long needed among the Liberal and Spiritual classes. When members of our families now die we can get along without the preachers, who usually improve the occasion to send the deceased to hell. We have often heard them address the afflicted friends thus: "Take warning from him who lieth before you; he has died in his sins. Live a better life, that the judgment of God shall not fall upon you." And this at a time when the friends have all they can possibly bear without having their feelings outraged by such stuff. It is to be hoped that the services of priests will be now entirely dispensed with among our people.

S. J. KNOWLES, Quincy, Mich., writes: I find after a year's reading of THE TRUTH SEEKER that its advocacy of good and exposure of evil is its most marked feature; and if its readers live up to its moral teachings, as well as Bible believers do to the precepts of their old book, they will become the models of morality. People who accept the Bible as their standard are generally a great deal better than its teachings would make them, for many of its commands are revolting and horrible, and God is described as being a monster of cruelty and immorality. My parents were both Quaker ministers, well known in your city forty years ago. I distribute my papers and find they are doing great good. I also loan my Liberal books. A Baptist minister after reading a copy of Paine's works with which I had supplied him, says they should be read by everybody on account of their moral teachings, and also that many of their criticisms of the Bible are true.

E. G. SMITH, Bath, N. Y., writes: The "Collection" more than met my expectations. I found it fluently bound and filled with forms perfectly adapted to all the public needs of families and societies. It is a gem of Liberal literature. I have just read the "Age of Reason" you also sent me. I believe it to be one of the best mental productions of one of the brightest minds the world has ever produced. Its reasoning harmonizes with the progressive thought of today. No one can calculate the damage done to humanity by the attempted suppression of that work. Had it been permitted to reach the masses and been generally read, mankind today would be as far advanced in science and morals as they probably will be at the close of the next century. By persecuting Paine the Christian Church has covered itself with shame and dishonor. And Mr. Humphrey says we have nothing better to offer at this late day than the "Age of Reason." This is enough. Reason does not grow stale and spoil with age. A fertilizer that produced a good crop of wheat fifty years ago will do the same this year. The decadence of the Christian superstition will be traced by the historian of the future to the publication of Paine's "Age of Reason."

A FRIEND in Clinton, Mass., writes: How we started our Liberal Club will, perhaps, interest your readers, and may cause some others to do likewise. Many a time had we sighed, longed for, and pictured to ourselves the idea of such a club; yea, and even envied those who from time to time sent on word of the formation and progress of their associations. We had long talks with one Liberal who, years ago, had been one of a few that had made the attempt and failed. The prospect looked anything but inviting. True; there were many who, rumor had it, were very radical in their views; but would they come out and show their colors? We decided to try, and then and there wrote out a number of letters, in which we set a date and place of meeting, and sent them to those who were said to be favorable to the cause, and, "tell it not in Gath," some of them went to church-goers. Well, we had a meeting, very small at first. At our second meeting we organized ourselves into the Clinton Liberal Association, and adopted, with some slight modifications, the first form of Constitution and By-laws in the "Truth Seeker Collection." Let me say to the brothers and sisters among your readers, you don't know till you try what you can do in this line. Your field can't look any more barren than ours, and it is not only what more good we can do for Liberalism when united, that should tempt you to join together, but the influence it has individually is very great. "It is not good for man to be alone," holds good in all cases, and sociability is what all true Liberals should endeavor to push forward. One of our members, well advanced in years, tells us that this is what he has been wishing and waiting for twenty years. Think of it. Talk of old Simeon waiting in the temple to see the Christ! And though, like Simeon, he did not take the society up in his arms and bless it, he did better, put his hands in his pockets and helped it. We are few in numbers, but all in unison, and one thing that we should like to see on a large scale we have done, namely, Spiritualists, Materialists, etc., all work harmoniously together; a Spiritualist in the chair, a Materialist as Treasurer, and the Secretary one who is undecided as regards either state. The Banner of Light, the Investigator, and THE TRUTH SEEKER are all represented, and a part of each read at our meetings. Surely, never was a surer sign of the millennium. If this is not too long, I wish to add that the society will be glad to see any who are interested in the cause at their meetings in the Sovereigns of Industry Hall every Sunday afternoon at two P. M.

Special Notices.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this life-wasting disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

Reader and Thinker!

Send stamp for E. C. WALKER'S Catalogue of Freethought and Scientific Books, Pamphlets and Tracts. Dealer in

PHOTOGRAPHS, MOTTOES, "RELIGIOUS LIBERTY."

And other envelopes, etc., etc. Agent for ENGLISH AND GERMAN LIBERAL AND SCIENTIFIC PAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Send three cent stamp for "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS" of the National Liberal League.

Don't forget to send five cents for seven Lectures by Col. R. G. INGERSOLL, and Abbot's "Truth for the Times." Address

E. C. WALKER,

Box 59, Florence, Benton Co., Iowa.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONDEQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN,
Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath."
"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"
In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS:

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU,

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00

ARABESQUE, colored leather, red

burnished edges, - - - 4.00

MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked

head-band, - - - 4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 500 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplied by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B. F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.
Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book, 1 00

Health and Diseases of Women, 25

Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses, 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. Trall, M.D., 102 E. 22d st., New York.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,

141 Eighth st., New York.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," "EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will reprove the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty."—Martin Luther. First published in the Canadian Monthly. Price 10 cents, by mail.

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postage paid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 8,000 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPEA. Price, $1.75.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKBOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d st., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d st., New York City.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GULD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Fall, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, OF THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall this city, in the winter of 1876-7, and were reported photographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person.

The titles of the Lectures are:

- I. Growth of Worlds.
- II. Life and Death of Worlds.
- III. Other Worlds than Ours.
- IV. Other Suns than Ours.
- V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
- VI. Religion and Astronomy.

ALL FOR TWENTY CENTS.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh.
Goethe.	Peter Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. Y. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoake.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Mendum.	Lizzie Fowler.
Seaver.	Mrs. Slenker.
L. Colby.	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare.	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker	Asa K. Butts.
(full figure).	W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar. Neat Albums by mail, to hold 30 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50 $1. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

YES WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk; no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6mo27

Gems of Thought.

As coal is imprisoned or consolidated sunshine, so truth of past ages may long remain concealed from view, until other times shall reveal and liberate its hidden mysteries.—Luna Hutchinson.

Give a hope of immortality, and the anticipation of it will be welcome to thousands whom every description repels, whether it be of orthodox or unorthodox believers. The hope will be accepted where the dogma would be rejected, because the hope leaves full play to the imagination, while the dogma forecloses imagination entirely.—O. B. Frothingham.

A VERY natural curiosity calls us to inquire how it happened that the Romans who were troublesome to all nations on account of their religion, and who suffered even the Jews to live under their own laws and follow their own method of worship, treated the Christians alone with such severity. A principal reason of the severity with which the Romans persecuted the Christians notwithstanding these considerations, seems to have been the abhorrence and contempt felt by the latter for the religion of the empire, which was so intimately connected with the form, and indeed, with the very essence of its political constitution; for though the Romans gave an unlimited toleration to all religions which had nothing dangerous to the commonwealth, yet they would not permit that of their ancestors which was established by the laws of the land to be turned into derision, nor the people to be drawn away from their attachment to it.—Mosheim.

THE first doubt was the womb and cradle of progress, and from the first doubt, man has continued to advance. Men began to investigate, and the Church began to oppose. The astronomer scanned the heavens, while the Church branded his grand forehead with the word "Infidel"; and now, not a glittering star in all the vast expanse bears a Christian name. In spite of all religion, the geologist penetrated the earth, read her history in books of stone, and found, hidden within her bosom, souvenirs of all the ages. Old ideas perished in the retort of the chemist, and useful truths took their places. One by one religious conceptions have been placed in the crucible of science, and thus far, nothing but dross has been found. A new world has been discovered by the microscope; everywhere has been found the infinite; in every direction man has investigated and explored, and nowhere, in earth or stars, has been found the footstep of any being superior to or independent of nature.—Ingersoll.

WHEN man first wandered in the dark forest, he was Nature's serf; he offered tribute and prayer to the winds and the lightning and the rain; to the cave-lion, which seized its burrow for its lair; to the mammoth, which devoured his scanty crops. But as time passed on, he ventured to rebel; he made stone his servant; he discovered fire and vegetable poison; he domesticated iron; he slew the wild beasts or subdued them; he made them feed him and give him clothes. He became a chief surrounded by his slaves; the fire lay beside him with dull red eye and yellow tongue waiting his instructions to prepare his dinner, or to make him poison, or to go with him to the war and fly on the houses of the enemy, hissing, roaring, and consuming all. The trees of the forest were his flock, he slaughtered them at his convenience; the earth brought forth at his command. He struck iron upon wood or stone and hewed out the fancies of his brain. He made the winds grind his corn and carry him across the waters; he made the stars serve him as a guide. He obtained from salt and wood and sulphur a destroying force. He drew from fire and water the awful power that produces the volcano, and made it do the work of human hands. He made the sun paint his portraits, and gave the lightning a situation in the post-office.—Winwood Reade.

THE WIFE'S APPEAL.

Kiss me, husband, I am weary!
Will this struggle e'er be o'er?
Wilt thou learn how well I love thee,
Ere I leave this mortal shore?
Wilt thou turn thy thoughts from business;
From the lures that ensnare;
For one moment listen to me,
And forget thy worldly care?

I have plead so oft, my husband,
For a moment's time with thee;
Begged thee, with a wife's affection,
To remain awhile with me;
Bade thee to forget thy strivings
In the love that should be ours,
With the day to cease thy toiling—
Give to me the evening hours!

Oh, my husband, I am dying!
Dying with an aching heart;
I who dreamed sweet dreams of earth-love,
Of a wife's and husband's part;
I am dying all forsaken,
With my life a dreary waste,
For, my husband, I have never
Of that dream-love had a taste.

Kiss me husband, press me closer;
Save me from this living death,
Come back to me, be my lover.
Shun the world's polluting breath.
Fame may wreathe thy aching temples,
Please thee with its hollow breath,
But 'tis love alone can soothe thee
In the chilling hour of death.

Then, my husband, troth renewing,
Kiss me, I am thine alone;
In my heart thou holdest empire
As a king upon his throne;
Love is all we wot of heaven
In our journey here below;
Dear one, in our hearts, oh, may it
Ever find unceasing flow.

Odds and Ends.

"THIS is what I call capital punishment," as the boy said when his mother shut him up in the closet with the preserves.

SOME one advertises for a "servant girl who would not be above placing herself on an equality with the rest of the family."

A WEST-STREET man says that the longest funeral he ever heard of took place a week ago. His hired girl went to it and has not got back yet.

"No," she said, and the wrinkles in her face smoothed out pleasantly, "No, I do not remember the last seventeen-year locusts, I was an infant then."

A NEW ENGLANDER writes home from the Black Hills that there are as many wise men going out every day as there are fools coming in.

IN a late style of marriage announcements only the names of the bride and clergyman appear. As civilization advances, the groom becomes less and less of importance on such occasions.

HOW WISE is the tramp who sleeps in the fence corner and has no fears of hotel fires and six-story leaps to stone pavements. Go to the tramp, thou architect, consider his ways, and be wise.

ANCIENT Egypt had forty gods, and yet when an ancient Egyptian stepped on a spool and fell down stairs with an ash-pan in his hands, there weren't half enough gods for him to swear by three minutes.

THE Sun recently announced that the Widow Van Cott had nearly lost her voice, and ever since then it is wonderful to note how many men are trying to induce their wives to take an active part in the cause of temperance.

A YOUNG fellow who indulges in the use of strong drink, says at night he feels as if he owned all the property in the world, and in the morning as if he owned none, and was in arrears for his taxes on what he owned the night before.

WHENEVER you see a small boy emerging from the house with his left arm shading his eyes and the other smoothing the basement of his trousers, it is safe to arrive at the conclusion that he has been chasing the boot-jack around his father.

A STRANGER arrived in St. Louis, took a look at the city, and shot himself. In his pockets were found thirty-five cents and a stub of a lead-pencil, which caused the coroner's jury to return a verdict: "Chicago editor—couldn't stand prosperity."

UNTO the good little boy shall be given the pie-nic ticket, but the wicked boy shall recline on his mother's knee. Verily, in the day when she waxeth it to him with her slipper his heart will be full of resistance and his howlings shall disturb the neighbors.

"Don't you think my new hat very becoming?" said Mrs. Van Ity to her "hub" on Saturday evening last, as she spread it over the table for his inspection. And he gently replied, with the loving rapture of a man who had been married for fifteen years: "Yes, it is becoming—devilish expensive to me!"

A CORRESPONDENT wants to know: "Can a Christian go to a circus?" Why, yes, he can go to the circus easily enough, but it will cost him a quarter when he gets there to get in; that's where the shoe pinches. You see a Christian is always too proud to carry water for the elephant, and that's where the sinner has the advantage over him in the matter of free passes.

THE GAME OF LIFE—Man's life is a game of cards. First it is cribbage. Next he tries to go it alone, at a sort of cut, shuffle, and deal pace. Then he gambols on the green. Then he raises the deuce, when his mother takes a hand in, turns him down, and, contrary to Hoyle, beats the little joker with her five till he throws up his hand and begs. Next, he engages in speculation and with his diamonds wins the queen of hearts. Tired of playing solitaire he expresses a desire to assist his fair partner, throws out his cards, and the clergyman takes a ten out of him on a pair. Her honors are easy, and she orders him up and lets him go it alone to make the fines. If he is a knave he joins the clubs, where he often gets high, which is low, too. If he keeps straight, he is oftentimes flush. He grows old and bluff, sees a deal of trouble, when at last he shuffles his mortal coil and passes in his checks, and he is raked in by a spade. Life's flitful game is ended, and he waits the summons of Gabriel's trump which shall order him up.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.—The present Archbishop of Dublin, the gifted author of the work so widely known on the "Study of Words," is not in very robust health, and has been for many years apprehensive of paralysis. At a recent dinner in Dublin, given by the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, his Grace sat at the right of his hostess, the Duchess of Abercorn. In the midst of the dinner the company was startled by seeing the Archbishop rise from his seat, and still more surprised to hear him exclaim in a dismal and sepulchral tone, "It has come! It has come!"

"What has come, your Grace?" eagerly cried half a dozen voices, from different parts of the table.

"What I have been expecting for twenty years," solemnly answered the Archbishop—"a stroke of paralysis. I have been pinching myself for the last twenty minutes, and find myself entirely without sensation."

"Pardon me, my dear Archbishop," said the Duchess, looking up to him with a somewhat quizzical smile; "pardon me for contradicting you, but it is I that you have been pinching."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Ots.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	3
2.	Orations on the Gods. Ingersoll.	10
3.	Thomas Paine.	5
4.	Arrangement of the Church. Ingersoll.	5
5.	Heretics and Heresies.	5
6.	Humboldt.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story.	5
9.	The Story of the Flood.	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt.	2
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass.	2
13.	Arrangement of Priestcraft.	2
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	2
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents.	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead.	2
18.	Slipped Up Again.	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	2
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match.	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton.	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	3
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snodde. Bennett.	6
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sothoran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	1
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	3
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	2
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite.	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System.	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	3
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	2
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist?	3
47.	Ornely and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	8
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	6
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	6
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	3
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	6
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	6
62.	The Jews and their God.	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	6
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologian, D.D.	6
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	6
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	2
71.	Paine's Anniversary. O. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil.	10
76.	Reply to Erasmus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	3
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D. M. Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	2
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	2
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Morley's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hoppe, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons.	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	3
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	The Old and the New. R. G. Ingersoll.	5
101.	110th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et al.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	20
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Caphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
109.	Ghosts. Ingersoll, 4 pp.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsborg. M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	6
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.	5
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	10
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.	10
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.	10
12.	Discount on one dollar's worth is per ct. off; on two dollars' worth 20 off; on five dollars' worth 40 off; on ten dollars' worth 50 off. As few or as many of any given kind, may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED.
By D. M. BENNETT.
Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth.	50
" " and Ex. of Prop. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Antiquity of Christianity. Alberger.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27 00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacollot.	2 00
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and 60	60
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Cause of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis.	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.	1
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.	1 75
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Einstein's Origin of Religious Ideas.	1 00
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Fuerbach. 40 and 80	80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
" Transcendentalism in New England.	2 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
Biography of Satan.	60
Grey's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
Credos of Christendom. 2 Vols.	7 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 30 and 50	50
" etc., Large Edition.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	35
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Life of Thomas Paine. Blanchard, p 50; cl	75
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. Problems of Life and Mind.	3 50
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each.	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 outs.	3 40
" Principles. 2 vols, and maps.	8 00
Monks and Popes. Alberger.	1 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peel's All Around the World.	2 50
Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete, 3.00, 4.00, & 4.50	4 50
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	3 00
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
" Great Works Complete, Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3 00
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1 50
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait. Paper, 50; cloth	75
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion. 2 Vols., 8vo.	8 00
Sexual Physiology. Trail.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3.00, $4.00, and 4.50	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett.	4 50
$3.00, $4.00, and 4.50	4 50
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 & 75	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History.	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

FREE THOUGHT

Vol. 4. No. 35. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, September 1, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE woman question: What are the fashions? MOONLIGHT excursions up the Hudson and up the Sound are now the rage.

HENRY WARD BEECHER's bread-and-water sermon is having a splendid run throughout the country.

THE Rev. Chas. Thompson, pastor of the Baptist church in San Jose, Cal., is under arrest on a charge of incendiarism.

THE loss of watches by robbery at Coney Island on Sundays is heavy. There is a great deal of watching and praying at Sunday watering places.

NEW YORK CITY sends a colored cadet to the West Point Military Academy this year, he having been the successful applicant, and passed the most creditable examination.

BOGUS CHARLEY, the Modoc, has become a Christian, and will now scalp in a more Christian-like manner. He has changed his name for the more aristocratic title of Counterfeit Charles.

A MORTGAGE foreclosure has been enforced against the Sea Cliff Grove and Metropolitan Camp ground. Speculative religion is not a very profitable business this year, particularly the real-estate branch of it.

A YOUNG mother, explaining christening to her five-year-old boy, told him that when he was christened he "would be one of God's little lambs." "And will I have hind legs and baa?" eagerly asked the boy.

THE origin of the phrase, "Getting in the wrong box," has at length been discovered. It originally referred to getting into the confession-box in the church—confession-box and wrong-box being synonymous terms.

HE was making a call, and they were talking of literature. "The 'Pilgrim's Progress,'" she remarked, "always seems to me painful. Of course you are familiar with Bunyan?" He said he had one on each foot, and they troubled him a good deal.

SOME amusement was caused not long ago in an English court by a female witness, who, on the oath being administered, repeatedly kissed the clerk instead of the book. It was some time before she was made to understand the proper—or at least, the legal thing to do.

A WESTERN-MICHIGAN husband explained: "I'm seventeen years older than my third wife, who is on earth; nine years older than the one in Heaven; and the second one is too busy sassing Satan to care whether I mention her or not." Thus does oratory sooth the wounded heart.

MRS. FOOTE, a married woman, of Hackensack, N. J., reports that her pastor, the Rev. Darling Phillips, Baptist, made improper proposals to her, and for making such a statement, a portion of her church are anxious that she should be expelled. Why don't they wait for cooler weather?

DR. CHAS. STAHL, a graduate of the New York University, has nearly cured John A. Kohleph, Brooklyn, of consumption by transfusing into his veins several pints of blood from a healthy man. The transfusion was made at different times. The improvement was gradual and steady. The man who furnished the blood was afflicted with thirst and weakness.

A MINISTER in Connecticut, preaching against extravagance in dress, told the women of his congregation that they ought not to wear any better clothes than those worn by members of his family. And the most exasperated women in his congregation that day were his wife and daughters. "Just as if they didn't dress as well as anybody. They would like to know!"

THE Rev. Mr. Schenck, of Trenton, N. J., who, on his return from the country, found that his house had been robbed of its silverware, evidently had forgotten that he should have laid up his treasures in heaven, where thieves do not break through and steal, every time a man takes a summer vacation. And, really, it wouldn't be a bad idea for him to sell these superfluous articles in these times, and give to the poor.

THE Daily Witness, a religious paper published in this city, is dead. The editor called repeatedly for divine assistance in the shape of money, but it came not. The Independent says the Witness had a great deal of sound moral sentiment, but no news. The Ind. thinks this a mistake: it had news enough, but the news was from two to six thousand years old.

THE Boston papers contain accounts of the rascally transactions of Rev. John R. Smith, formerly a Methodist minister, of Me., but who after removing to Boston became a Baptist—of his forgeries, his obtaining money under false pretences, selling property that he had mortgaged to raise money, and in various ways acting very dishonestly. He must indeed be a black sheep. It will take a large quantity of grace to save this clerical signer.

A YOUNG clergyman in the interior, with not more than average humility, last week telegraphed to a bookstore which is the headquarters of his denomination in New York: "Secure me a pulpit for Sunday." Having some moveable pulpits for sale, the gentleman in charge was able to reply, "Secured one, twenty-five dollars." On the minister's arrival the pulpit was ready for him, but, while he was ready to take one for the sum named, he had no desire to pay out that amount, and concluded to rest.

THE following curiosity in pious advertising comes from England: "Cheap Trip—The Christian Mission Hallelujah Railway is one of the quickest, cheapest and best routes from the Deepest Depths of Sin to the Highest Heights of Glory. Booking office in the Town-hall next Sunday. T. P. Gray, the Hallelujah Guard, and Beaupre, the Happy Engine Driver, will D. V. instruct passengers how to obtain Through Tickets without money and without price."

A CLERGYMAN somewhat startled those around him in a railroad car in Rhode Island the other day, when, in a loud conversation with a brother preacher, he alluded to the intention of a clerical acquaintance to relinquish his parish and become an evangelist, and said, "Why should he not? He has as much pulpit power as so and so" (mentioning a well-known preacher of a different denomination), "and has plenty of assurance and conceit; what does he need more?"

AT 4 o'clock one morning Mrs. Ferguson, hearing a noise in the front room, arose and made an investigation, and was shocked to find her daughter and a young man on one and the same sofa. Mrs. Ferguson burst into tears, but the daughter said soothingly, "Don't be alarmed, ma; it is merely a caucus. We are about to start a new party." Then Mrs. Ferguson was intensely relieved, and went back to bed with her face illuminated with smiles.—Rochester Democrat.

NORWITHSTANDING the hot weather, Miss Sarah Frances Washington, of fifteen summers, appeared one morning this week before the Harlem Police Court and made complaint against the Rev. Willis Treswell Bowman, her minister. She testified that after the festival at the church, on the previous Thursday evening, the reverend gentleman took advantage of her confidence in him as her pastor, and was guilty of an undue amount of true inwardness. He denies the charge, and says he did not do it. The girl ought to know.

THE drinking saloons of Sacramento have odd names, and a knowledge of that fact renders intelligible the following report of a police officer to his captain: "I looked in at the Hole in the Wall, but she wasn't there; heard she had been in Noah's Ark, but had lit out; then I prospected the Iron Jaw and the Woodpecker's Nest, but didn't have any better luck. A fellow in the Calf Pen was sure he heard her singing as he went by the Frog Pond, but when I went there it was all a mistake. Just as I had about given it up as a bad job, I dropped into Blue Blazes, and there she was."

CLERICAL AND LAY BELIEF.—An "Evangelical" clergyman, who was traveling in Italy, wishing to ascertain the exact state of the native mind with regard to the gross superstition of the native church, first went to a priest and asked him as follows: "Is it possible, sir, that you really believe so and so?" "What your signory has said," answered the priest, "is verily the way that the common people believe. But we, the clergy, have for all those doctrines and ceremonies a theological and enlightened explanation." The minister having put this in his note-book, then went to a poor faa-hino, who was telling his beads before a picture of the Virgin Mary at the corner of a street, and spoke to him thus: "Is it possible, my dear fellow, that you really believe?" etc. "What your signory has said," answered the porter, "is verily the way that our priests believe. But we, the common people, have sense enough to take all that our priests say with a grain of salt."

THE following is taken from the Christian Beacon: "Railroad men, strike! For better wages! Put on the brakes! Abandon the trains! Burn the bridges! Tear up the track! Let no man take your run! Break the company! We mean the Bee Line to hell! and all its branches! Quit the service of Satan and serve the Lord Christ. Cease to do evil—learn to do well. We do not promise you surer wages, but better. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. (Rom. vi, 23.) Hands wanted. Information given at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A."

THE Catholic Union of Buffalo, the organ of "The True Apostolic Church of Christ," noticed the Liberal Grove-Meeting held in Wolcott, N. Y., last week, in the following way: "What a blessed gathering that of the 'Free-thinkers' will be. A motley crew of blatant blasphemers will, of course, be gathered, with the foul-mouthed Ingersoll as the 'big injun' talkist. Bold and daring fellows these, who, while the heart of the country is yet throbbing from the effects to which their Atheistic principles surely lead, defiantly announce their intention to spread these principles, hope to wipe out the very idea of God from the universe, and thus destroy the ultimate source of all authority." Truth don't seem to be the characteristic of this class of Christians. Free-thinkers are men and women of brains, and mobs are chiefly made up of members of the holy Church. Infidels are busy studying how to benefit the race and discover better ways of life and government. Free-thinkers are the advocates of education and science; the Church is the mother of ignorance and superstition.

Pack, in its history of the United States, says: The Puritans settled New England, which was the worst blow that region ever received. The Puritans came over to this country bent on the propagation of religious liberty and beans. They wanted freedom of thought, they did, those high-toned old immigrants; they wanted to be let alone to worship God in their own way; to roast witches and stone dissenters and indulge in various other little amusements, untrammelled by the tyranny of a bigoted, superstitious and arrogant papacy. That's what they did. It is needless to say they succeeded admirably. They had things all their own way. Whenever a man disagreed with them they whipped him or pilloried him, or chucked rocks at him and sent him out of the colony. Whenever they found an old woman whose personal appearance displeased their aesthetic taste, they called her a witch and burned her. Also in several other ways they managed to illumine that unquenchable spark of liberty which later burst—not to say burst—into flame in the patriotic breasts of that band of heroes who made the immortal onslaught on a large cargo of Oolong tea—but we anticipate. The Puritans instituted many beautiful customs, and they had some very remarkable laws. They provided strict penalties against Sabbath-breaking. On Sunday they decreed that every able-bodied man, woman and child in the country should go to church three times a day. They forbade reading anything except the Bible, forbade walking in the fields, and generally shut down on amusements. Then they called it the Lord's day; and thus strove to make the Lord unpopular. One of their regulations concerning Sunday was that a man should not kiss his wife on that day. No reference, however, was made to other fellows' wives; and it is presumed that the ungodly profited by the omission. They were beautiful people, the Puritan settlers were, and their descendants inherit many of their most charming traits. Divine Providence, however, that sent the Puritans to New England, decreed in its infinite mercy, that that region should not spread over the whole continent. The Puritans' area of operations was confined to the catarrhal, the beany portion, as it were, of the United States.

Events of the Week.

THE past week has been the hottest of the season.

SENATOR MORTON is said to be recovering from his late paralytic attack.

AN engine and tender and a baggage-car were hurled into the river Thames, Conn.

BROTHAM YOUNG is dangerously ill, and cannot survive long. Think of the wailing of his multitudinous widow.

COUNTERFEIT $50 bills are in circulation. Look out for them. We willingly pass the word of caution along. It is useless to us.

NEARLY 70,000 persons visited Coney Island last Sunday. An immense amount of bathing and lager-beer drinking was indulged in.

THE latest news from the seat of war indicates that the Russians have been gaining some advantages and also have been re-enforcing their armies.

A CANAL-BOAT was set on fire by a boy trying to kindle a fire with kerosene, at Perth Amboy, N. J. One boy was fatally burned, and another drowned.

STEPHEN BARBER and wife near Malone, Franklin county, N. Y., were shot by a tramp whose design was robbery. Barber is dead and the wife must die.

A HEAVY rain storm in Maine raised the Saco river, submerged the bottom or lowlands, and carried off much grain and other valuable property. The losses were heavy.

THE City Hall at Oakland, Cal., was burned last Saturday night. The most important books and documents were saved, and the prisoners removed. Loss, $60,000.

CHIEF JOSEPH has been killing sixteen men in Greaser Basin, Montana. He is on his way back to fight Howard. Gen. Sturgis, with six companies, is on the Yellowstone River anxious to meet Chief Joseph.

MRS. MORRIS, Justice of the Peace, in Wyoming Territory, sentenced her husband to be hung, but upon being informed by the lawyers that it was merely a preliminary examination, she held him in $18,000,000 bail.

THE Rev. Charles P. McCarthy, pastor of the American Free Church, has been declared, by the committee who tried him, guilty of unministerial conduct. He complains bitterly of the decision, and threatens to take his case before the State Convention, and if possible cause the censure to be removed.

A DIAMOND cutter in Boston, named Cohenno, who has for several years been doing a successful business, has been robbed by a recent partner whom he connected with himself, named Hegt, of the sum of $10,000. The villain sailed for Liverpool. Cohenno is a ruined man.

As an indication of an early return of business activity, it may be stated that more grain is now being shipped to Europe than ever before. Four hundred vessels were chartered at this port, within the term of three days, to carry grain to Europe. It must ultimately enliven somewhat the business of our country.

ONE day this week the rush of hundreds of wagon-loads of garden-vegetables in the lower part of the city, near Washington Market, was so great that the thoroughfares were effectually blocked nearly the whole day. Many wagon-loads of vegetables were taken home, the owners being unable to either sell or give them away. The crop of vegetables in this vicinity has been bounteous. Still, while such plenty prevails, many are suffering from hunger.

A LOT of idle youths on Prince street, in this city, annoyed a German truckman, named Ott, while he was moving a family, or carrying their furniture into a house. He bore the annoyance for some time, but becoming enraged, he rushed after them with a drawn knife, and at that moment John Dolan was returning home from work, and Ott, mistaking him for one of his tormentors, rushed at him and cut his throat, severing the carotid artery. Dolan fell to the pavement and was taken to a hospital, where he will probably die. The exasperated but mistaken Ott was taken to prison.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

BENNETT'S REPLY. NO. XI.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Dear Sir: I have thought the arguments in some of your former letters were rather weak and sophistical, but your last letter, in this respect, surpasses all the others. If you have no better arguments to bring in support of your belief, I cannot see how, as a sensible man, you can continue to give your allegiance to it.

You seem at length to be satisfied with the cases of clerical licentiousness and filthiness that I have presented you, and would fain turn and asperse me for enumerating them, when you must well know I did so in self-defense. With a chuckle you paraded the licentiousness of a few Infidels, and argued that because they had done those things their doctrines must necessarily be false. To offset those charges, many of which were untrue, I called your attention to some of the sins of your holy brethren, and I am glad if I have succeeded in satisfying you. If, however, you are not fully satisfied, or if you delight in magnifying the mistakes of some unbelievers, I will try and get you up another chapter of the sins of divine scoundrels who seduce the young and inexperienced and blast their reputations for life, because, under the guise of being shepherds of the flock and servants of Jesus Christ, they have the power to corrupt and despoil the ewe lambs placed under their protection. I assure you there are thousands of glaring cases of this kind that I have not even hinted at. Friends are nearly every day sending in accounts of ministerial lechery and adultery that I have not mentioned. It is in vain that you try to evade the odium of their conduct by calling them wolves in sheep's clothing. There are a large number of cases where clergymen far advanced in life, who have broken the bread of life from twenty-five to forty years, have been so weak as to fall an easy prey to their fleshly lusts, and again, large numbers who have been guilty of the gravest indiscretions are still allowed to serve in the temples as servants of the Most High. It is hardly worth your while to condemn them for the commission of adultery, when your Master failed to condemn it in the case of a person who was "caught in the very act." It is not at all improbable that those sinning clergymen argued that if Jesus did not see fit to condemn adultery when he was on earth he would not now condemn them for committing the same offense.

You affect to regard it as an indication that Infidels hate the Church if they presume to allude to the numerous crimes committed by its priests, when the object is to show that they are hypocrites, pretending to be better and holier than they are, and that they are as sensual and licentious as the worst sinners. If you did not want those heinous cases alluded to, you should not have begun the game by harping about the sins of unbelievers. I repeat that I am glad if at last your taste for that kind of literature is satisfied.

You seem rather to question my statement that distinguished writers have believed the Jews were cannibals, and call upon me to give names. I will mention the name of Voltaire. He is somewhat distinguished, and you will find his remarks upon the subject on page 159, vol. i, of his Philosophical Dictionary.

I do not wish to contend further with you about Robespierre. I showed clearly from his own words and from the opinions of his contemporaries that he was a religious zealot who still retained a portion of his Christian faith and education. He was not at heart so bad a man as his acts would seem to show him. He ran wild in some of his ideas of political reform; and when his entire nation was in a state of frenzy, he failed to preserve that calmness and that high sense of human rights which, as a leader, he ought to have maintained. It gratifies your hatred of Infidels to continue to call Robespierre an Infidel, I shall not attempt to prevent you; but he was not an Infidel in the sense that Mirabeau, Voltaire, and Paine were. He was not regarded as an Infidel, and did not fraternize with them. In a word, he was a wild, religious, political adventurer, who cooperated with Christians quite as much as with Infidels, and whose severity was shown quite as much against Infidels as against Christians. You well know he signed Thomas Paine's death warrant, whose life was spared by a mere fortuitous circumstance, and that he sent many Infidels to the guillotine during his mad career.

You show your venom at Ingersoll, and possibly may think it argumentative and dignified to call him "Poor Ingersoll." He evidently disturbs you as much as he did your clerical brethren in San Francisco. Instead of answering his rhetoric and his logic, they called him hard names. You do the same. Perhaps epithets and slander are the natural weapons of a Christian when reason and argument are not at hand. Despite your hatred of Ingersoll, you cannot successfully deny that his popularity was never so great as at this moment, and that his heavy blows upon this greatest sham which the world has ever known are sending it, tottering and reeling, to the earth. Abuse him as much as you will. Call him hard names if you wish to. His utterances are wielding a powerful influence over the entire land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and you and all the satellites of a false theology cannot prevent it. If you can prove his assertions false, why do you not do so? If he falsifies history, why do you not show it? Probably it is easier to call names and wield epithets and abuse. Perhaps he ought to be grateful to you for telling him how to use his money, but it is doubtful if he is. It is hardly worth while for you to let the indebtedness of Paine Hall trouble you too much. The hundred millions of dollars owing by Christian Churches demand your more immediate attention. If there has been some lack in the management of Paine Hall affairs, the probability is that its seventy-five thousand dollars of indebtedness will be paid long before the hundred millions of dollars of church debts will be satisfied.

You fain would establish it as a fact that at least one Infidel did recant on his death-bed, and you quote a letter from two authorities to show that Voltaire was that individual. There may be a species of cruelty in removing this last peg upon which you would be glad to hang your forlorn hope, but it is better that the truth be told, though you do fail to establish a single point in this discussion. Let me give the whole truth about Voltaire which you but partially disclosed. Voltaire did not recant because he had changed his views or because he was afraid to die with his heresy still clinging to him. He was reared in the Catholic Church, and had never severed his connection with it, and in all he wrote against superstition he had to so write that if tried for heresy he could, like Queen Elizabeth of England, or Cervantes of Spain, make it impossible for men to show that there really was heresy in his writings. In those days to oppose Christianity was to incur the risk of the rack, the gallows or the fagot in this world, and an endless hell in the next. Voltaire was trained among the Jesuits, and he became a consummate master of their art, for he well knew that he wrote with the halter around his neck, and he had to launch his thunderbolts of sarcasm against the Church and the fathers with at least an appearance of outward respect for them and their dogmas.

It was because of this mental tyranny that Voltaire was compelled to die like a Jesuit. He wished to be buried as the other great men of France had been buried, and not as an outcast, which would have been the case had he persistently and outwardly maintained his heretical views. The Abbé Gauthier confessed Voltaire and received from him a profession of faith, by which he declared he would die in the Catholic religion in which he was born. When this circumstance became known, it offended enlightened men more than it edified the devotees. The curate of St. Suplice ran to his parishioner (Voltaire) who received him with politeness and gave him, as was his custom, a handsome offering for the poor. But mortified that the Abbé had anticipated him, the curate pretended that he ought to have required a particular profession of faith, and an express disavowal of all the heretical doctrines which Voltaire had maintained. The Abbé declared that by requiring an abjuration of everything wrong all would be lost. During this dispute Voltaire recovered. Irene was played and the profession of faith was forgotten. But at the moment of his relapse the curate returned to Voltaire absolutely resolved not to inter him if he could not obtain the desired recantation. The curate was one of those men who are a mixture of hypocrisy and imbecility. He spoke with the obstinate persuasiveness of a maniac and the flexibility of a Jesuit. He wished to bring Voltaire to acknowledge at least the divine nature of Jesus Christ—a dogma he was more attached to than any other—and for this purpose he one day aroused him from his lethargy by shouting in his ear: "Do you believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ?" whereupon answered Voltaire: "In the name of God speak to me no more of that good man, but let me die in peace." Voltaire died on the 30th of May, 1778.

The curate was dissatisfied with his recantation—if recantation it can with any propriety be called—and declared that he was obliged to refuse him burial, but he was not authorized in this refusal, for according to law it ought to have been preceded by excommunication. He was buried at Seciers and the priests agreed not to interfere with the funeral. However, two pious ladies of distinguished rank, and very great devotees, wrote to the bishop of Troyes to engage him in opposing the burial; but fortunately for the honor of the bishop, the letters did not reach him till after the funeral, and he consequently made no interference. It is no wonder that the Church hated Voltaire after his death as much as they had feared him while living, for according to their own statement he is now a saint in glory, and yet they admit that he died as he lived—a friend of Reason and the enemy of Superstition; for his last words were that he regarded Jesus—the man-god of the Church—only as a man.

Condorcet concludes his admirable Life of Voltaire with these words: "It ought not to be forgotten that Voltaire, when in the height of his glory, exercised throughout Europe a power over the minds of men hitherto unparalleled. The expressive words, 'The little good I have done is my best of works,' was the unaffected sentiment that held possession of his soul."

Thus let it stand forever recorded that Voltaire did not recant his anti-theological views, but that he made only a formal general confession to Abbé Gauthier simply to have an honorable burial. The great anxiety of Christian maligners to make it appear that the Sage of Ferney died a horrible death, imploring the pardon of God and Jesus, is thus effectually thwarted. It would be a matter of general congratulation could every Christian devotee from this time henceforth desist from placing himself in the ridiculous light of trying to show that Voltaire did what he certainly did not do. Lamartine pays the following eloquent tribute to Voltaire: "If we judge of men by what they have done, then Voltaire is incontestably the greatest writer of Modern Europe. No one has caused through the power of influence alone, and the perseverance of his will, so great a commotion in the minds of men. His pen aroused a world, and shook a far mightier empire than that of Charlemagne, the European empire of a theocracy. His genius was not force but light. Heaven destined him not to destroy but to illuminate, and wherever he trod light followed him, for Reason (which is light) had destined him to be first her poet, then her apostle, and lastly her idol."

I am glad you have the frankness to acknowledge that Paine did not recant on his death-bed, but died a firm Infidel as he had lived. In this respect you are far more honorable than your brethren of the clergy, who every year, for more than seventy-five years, have declared that he died denouncing his unbelief, and calling upon Jesus to save him. More lying has been done by the clergy of America in this one direction than they will ever be able to atone for. The story, however, about Paine's recanting is no more false than that about Voltaire's recanting. Your closing fling about Paine's decanting is rather characteristic of you, but you had better have omitted it. It may show a little wit, but it is devoid of truth. The calumnies that Paine was a drunkard are equally as false as that he recanted upon his death-bed. Both are the reiterated lies of Christian clergymen.

We come now to the consideration of the divinity of the Bible. Before it can justly be assumed to be divine, it must be shown to be superhuman. If there is nothing in it that man could not have written it is the height of absurdity to say that it is so grand that God must have written it. I asked you to give me some proofs of its being the work of God. You have failed to do so. It is impossible for you to give them. Like all other books in the world it is of human origin, and of human origin alone, and of rather low human origin at that. There is not a passage in it that a man of fair literary ability could not have written. There is nothing in it that proves a supernatural power. There is nothing in it worthy of the Supreme Power of the Universe.

I asked you to prove to me that there is a power above, outside of, or independent of the Universe. You did not attempt it, and it is doubtless well you did not, for it is impossible for you to do it. I defy you to present the first item of real proof that such a power exists. As I said before, the Universe contains all substances, all matter, all forces, all existences, and outside of it or above it there can be nothing. If there is, I implore you to give me some proof of it. If you believe there is such a power, why can you not give your reasons for such belief? The Bible will not answer as proof for me. The men who wrote it knew no more about a supernatural power than we do at this day. In fact, they knew much less, for the Universe, in its infinitude, in its eternity, in its omnipotence, and in its omnipresence, was far less understood then than now.

I asked you to show me why, if the unknown writers of the Bible were controlled by God, they did not say so. There is scarcely a writer in the whole eighty books, including the apocrypha, who even claims that he had divine assistance, or that God either moved his hands or told him what to write. The writers did not claim that they were doing anything more than simply narrating the stories they were writing, employing their own language and stating it in their own way. If they were conscious that they were writing for God, or that he was controlling them, they ought at least to have told us so. I insist that the claim set up one thousand years after the books were written that God controlled the authors, is wholly unauthorized and utterly devoid of proof or of probability.

I asked you to show how, if even an individual received a revelation from God, and he repeated it to somebody else, it could be a revelation to a third person. You attempt to evade it by saying "the objection is as sophistical as it is old." Whether old or not, it does not affect its truth or reason. All truth is old. Your efforts to get over the difficulty by talking about a person writing historical facts that come to his knowledge, do not meet the case and are only mere subterfuge. If God spoke to Moses in an audible voice, or if he showed his face to him, or even his back parts, it may have been very satisfactory to Moses, but the story that it was so is not worth a cent to you and me. If God revealed his back parts to Moses and Moses told of it, does that constitute a revelation to those he told it to or to you and me? Moses may have known how those back parts looked, but can you or I have the slightest idea what Moses really saw? Quibble as you will, Bro. Humphrey, a revelation to Moses was a revelation to nobody else in the world, and everybody has the right to believe Moses or to disbelieve him, according to the nature of the story he tells and the character for veracity which he maintained. As there is not a scintilla of proof that Moses wrote a word of all that is attributed to him, every individual has the right to form his own conclusion whether Moses was the writer or not. This is unfortunately another great defect in the Bible, the names of the writers even, are not given except in a very few instances, and the reader only has the guess-work of persons who knew nothing about who the writers were to guide him. A miserable foundation, truly, upon which to establish the divinity of the compilation.

While you take very little notice of the points to which I called your attention and carefully avoid them, you array numerically many imaginary objections, and it is amusing to peruse your efforts to set them aside. Your renewed attempt to show that the Bible is a scientific compilation, or that the Bible and science are in harmony, is simply laughable. Why, those old writers knew but little more about science than the Esquimaux or the Hottentots do. It might as truthfully be said that the gibberish of these about their gods and their devils is in harmony with science as that the tales about the exploits of the Jewish God are. In my sixth reply I examined at some length the science of the Bible, and it seems hardly necessary to repeat the arguments therein used. To me the assertion that the moon is made of green cheese is about as scientific as the yarn about the earth, sun moon and stars being gotten up in six days, about the earth producing plants, herbs, grasses, shrubbery and forests, with fruits and seeds of each in perfection, before the sun was brought into existence; about man being fashioned out of the earth; about woman being made of a rib-bone; about water enough falling out of the atmosphere to raise the ocean all over the face of the earth five miles in height; that all the animals and insects of the varied climes of the earth, living on a great variety of food, could exist together in a close box for over a year; that that vast body of water, equaling nearly half the bulk of the earth, could find a place to go to; that seas and rivers divided and the waters piled up on either side like a wall; that a man was able to arrest the sun and moon in their courses for nearly the space of a day; of another man causing no rain or dew to fall upon the earth for over three years, or that life could exist so long on earth without it, and that at the expiration of that time he produced copious rains; that men were able to reanimate dead bodies; that men were able to soar bodily into the upper air, and survive there—all these and many other equally silly stories have about as much of the elements of science in them as of truth and good sense. It is only a marvel to me how a man of intelligence, like yourself, can believe such idle, senseless talk, and can gain your own consent to attempt to prove them true and that God busied himself in writing them. The only way I can account for it is that they belong to the system that your career and success in life depend upon, and that reason, truth, and common sense must be sacrificed to hold up those old fables and cause the masses to still accept them as truth. But your task is a laborious one. As intelligence gains ground, and as the principles of science are more and more understood, it will be more and more difficult for you to make sensible people accept and swallow such childish nursery tales.

In your every argument you seem to me to virtually acknowledge that the Bible is a human production. You tacitly admit that it contains contradictions, and you apologize for it by saying that Gibbon also contains apparent contradictions. You do not deny that it contains coarseness, indelicacy, vulgarity, and obscenity, but you try to apologize for it by saying that the pagan bibles, and even Shakspeare, contain some obscenity. Indeed, are those the best arguments you are able to advance in favor of the silly old Jew book? Can you do no better for it than to show that it is not very much worse than some other books that men have written? By such kind of arguments do you not practically acknowledge all that I have claimed—that it is a human production, and no more worthy the respect and veneration of mankind than any other book of equal antiquity? These arguments that the Bible compares with tolerable credit with other works proves to me that you really do not believe in its divinity, or that it deserves more consideration than other books produced in various parts of the world. Why should it? It does not treat upon any more elevated subjects; it teaches no better morals; it gives no better nor truer history; it contains no more beautiful poetry; it shows no more sympathy with the world of mankind; it imparts no more information; it tells no more about this world; it attempts to impart no more information about the future world, than hundreds of books that were written by people of very ordinary capacity.

Your effort to set aside the objection against the Bible that it is susceptible of a great variety of constructions and interpretations strikes me as being, like the rest of your arguments upon the same subjects, quite insufficient. A reasonable person must certainly admit that if the God of heaven and earth, the source of all knowledge, wisdom, power and love, should make up his mind to write a book and dedicate it to the inhabitants of the earth, he would couch it in such plain, unmistakable, unambiguous language that they could not by any possibility misunderstand it; that it would not be written in riddles and parables, and that it would not require five hundred thousand priests throughout Christendom to spend their lives in attempting to explain its hidden mysteries, its obscure meaning, its contradictions, and its ambiguity. He would not write it so that his children should be under the necessity of wrangling and quarreling and fighting century after century over its diverse interpretations and commentaries. He would not be likely to write in a language subject to mutation and change, the meaning of the words of which, as you show very clearly, have so changed since the book was written that the original signification is entirely lost. If God wrote that book for our use and benefit he did us great injustice to couch it in language that we do not understand, or that when it comes down to us is so changed and perverted that we are at a loss to know what the original meaning was. This is especially true if he has decided to torment us throughout eternity, or employ his devil to do it for him, because we do not comprehend and believe his obscure language, according to the whim he indulged at the time of writing.

You claim to regard it as no argument against the divinity of the Bible because it contains nothing new, and you even assume that it is an argument in favor of its divinity. You have peculiar modes of drawing inferences and building up your theories. I should arrive at different conclusions from yourself. If the Bible has nothing but what is found in other books, if it contains nothing new, it would argue that it was not a vital necessity to the race, that it was not superior to other productions, and certainly that it would not require an omnipotent God to produce it. There would seem to be just as much reason for claiming that the Divine Being is the author of other reproduced works as this. In fact, there is not a single argument in favor of God's being the author of the Jewish Bible that would not apply with about equal force to almost any other book.

You say "there must be something peculiar and unique about the Bible, since, wherever it goes, it gives a new impetus and direction to the human mind, and deflects the very currents of history." You have no warrant for making this assertion. The Bible has produced no such results. It has never exerted any marvelous influence. There is no proof that the Jewish Scriptures had an existence till a few centuries before the Christian era, and it was not long after they were adopted as a sacred canon before the Jewish nation was broken in pieces and scattered to the four winds. It was nearly three centuries after the origin of Christianity before the books of the New Testament were even known, and it was two or three centuries more before the canon was settled, and even down to Luther's time it was not fully settled. He did not accept the Epistle to the Hebrews, the Book of Jude, and the Book of Revelations. The influence that has been shed abroad in the nations that have acknowledged the Bible, has resulted from the advance of civilization and science far, far more than from any teachings the Bible contains. If the Bible contains little that is new how could it have an effect much more wonderful than the other books that contain the same or similar matter?

The Institutes of Menu, the teachings of Zoroaster, the Zend Avesta, the Vedas and Puranas, the Buddhist Sacred Writings, the morals and teachings of Confucius, the Egyptian Sacred Writings, the doctrines of Pythagoras, the Philosophy of Socrates and Plato, the inculcations of Epicurus, Zeno, and Aristotle, as well as much other of the wise and sage instructions of ancient times, have wielded ten times the influence in the world that the Jewish scriptures have done, and you cannot truthfully deny it. After thousands of years the Bible is accepted by hardly one-tenth of the inhabitants of the earth, and that tenth part has been doing more fighting, killing and persecuting than all the rest of the world. Had you said that the Bible had resisted civilization, that it had been a source of contention and bloodshed, and that it had, in fact, been a curse to the world, you would have come much nearer the truth.

You are wrong in claiming that the Jewish Bible possesses superiority over the sacred books of other nations. Had I the space to spare, I could make copious selections from the Institutes of Menu, the Vedas, the Puranas of the Mahabharata, the Ramayana, the Bhagavad-Gita, the Zend-Avesta, the Shaster, the Buddhist Sacred Scriptures, the Pymander of Egypt, the Moral Instructions of Confucius, the teachings of numerous Grecian sages and philosophers, the Koran of Mohammed, and much else that was written thousands of years ago, which in point of morality, spirituality, elevated thought, beautiful diction, and everything that goes to make up a high order of literature, are fully equal, if not superior, to the Jewish Scriptures, which are in many places so crude and objectionable. Some of the Hebrew poetry in the Bible is very fine, but by no means superior to the poetic productions of other nationalities which were wholly the works of human beings.

You are wrong, too, in supposing that there is no more obscenity in the Jewish Bible than in the bibles of other nations. A much larger percentage of low, vulgar allusions to sexual affairs, so far as my observation extends, is found in the Jewish Scriptures than in the sacred writings of any other nation. In the translations of no other bible that I have looked over have I found such filthy stuff as the incest committed by the drunken Lot and his daughters, the low, unnatural crimes of the Sodomites, the details of Jacob's connections with his wives and concubines, the story of Schechem and Dinah, the amours of Reuben and his father's concubine, the whoring of Judah and Tamar, the licentiousness of Mrs. Potiphar, the instructions about determining the virginity of young girls, the adultery of Zimri and Cozbi, the rules about who shall be admitted into the congregation of the Lord, the story of the sodomy of the Benjamites, the account of the Benjamites ravishing over four hundred young females, the lustful story of David and Bathsheba, the rape of Amnon upon his sister Tamar, the story of Absalom holding connection with his father's concubine on the housetop in the sight of all the people, the story of Solomon and his thousand wives and concubines, the amorous Song of Solomon, the threat about spreading dung over the face and causing urine to be used as drink, and the mixing of cowdung and human excrement with bread, various stories of fornications, whoredoms, and filthiness, and more and more ad nauseam. In fact, there is not a book printed in the English language, except, perhaps, a few, the sale of which is a crime punishable with imprisonment, that contains so much coarseness, indecency, and obscenity, as this old Jewish Bible. It is really a blot upon the civilization of our times that such an objectionable publication should be offered for sale, and more especially, that the children of the country should be compelled to use it as a reading-book in schools. It helps the case very little to say that there are other books containing something of a similar character. If God must be as bad as, or worse than other obscene writers, I wish to cast my vote against his writings being recognized as authoritative, or even as worthy to be placed before the rising generation of our land.

You have the courtesy and mildness to say "Some fool has collected and collocated a lot of passages and called them 'Self-Contradictions of the Bible.'" This is harsh language to apply to a gentleman who has correctly quoted certain passages of Scripture and arranged them side by side, without a word of comment, giving the reader the choice to draw his own inferences as to whether they are contradictory or not. If a man who faithfully quotes passages from that book classifies and arranges them without putting in any of his own comments, is a fool, what a consummate fool that man must be who swallows every word the book contains and swears it is the word of God, and was written out by his divine hand, and that all the absurd, impossible stories it contains are as true as the eternal hills are firm! This last fool is much the most foolish, and by far the most hopeless in his folly. According to your argument, any man who quotes Bible language as showing its character and meaning is a fool, and come to think of it, I don't know but there is a shade of truth in your assertion. Perhaps few things more foolish are done than to quote passages and texts from the old Jewish book with the least idea that it is the language or sentiment of the Great and Eternal Ruler of the Universe.

But in the matter of "Contradictions," are there none in the Bible? Let us take up a few that that "fool" has "collected and collocated," that our readers may judge whether he is wholly a fool, and whether these contradictions are real.

In Gen. i, 31, it says: "And God saw everything he had made, and behold it was very good." In Gen. vi, 6, it says: "And it repented the Lord that he had made man in the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Is there any contradiction there? Was God in precisely the same mood on both occasions?

In 2 Chron. xii, 12, 16, it says the Lord came unto Solomon by night, after the latter had built the temple, and said: "For now have I chosen and sanctioned this house, that my name may be there forever; and mine eyes and my heart shall be there perpetually." In Acts xii, 48, it says: "Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." Is there any contradiction in these passages?

In Ex. xxxiii, 23, it tells how God showed his back parts to Moses. In the eleventh verse of the same chapter it describes how God and Moses talked together "face to face as a man speaking unto his friend." In Gen. xxxii, 30, Jacob says: "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." In Exodus xxiv, 9, 10, 11, it describes how Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu and seventy of the elders of Israel went up to the Mount and saw the God of Israel.

On the other hand, in John i, 18, it says: "No man hath seen God at any time." In John v, 37, it says: "Ye hath neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape." In Exodus xxxiii, 2, it says: "Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me and live," and in 1 Tim. vi, 16, it says expressly, in speaking of God, "Whom no man hath seen nor can see." Is there the slightest shade of contradiction in these passages? and is it only fools who can see it?

In Deut. xxxii, 4, it says that God is a God of truth and without "iniquity, just and right is he." In James i, 13, it says, "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." But in Isaiah xiv, 7, it says, "I make peace and create evil. I, the Lord do all these things." In Amos iii, 6, it says, "Shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it?" and in Ezek. xx, 25 it says, "Therefore, I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live." Is there any want of harmony between these passages? Do they read precisely alike?

In Mat. vii, 8, it says, "Every one that asketh, receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth." In Prov. viii, 17, it says, "Those that seek me early shall find me." In Prov. i, 28, it says, "Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early but shall not find me." In Isaiah i, 15, it says, "When ye spread forth your hands I will turn mine eyes from you; yea, when ye shall make many prayers, I will not hear." In Psalms xviii, 41, it says, "They cried, but there was none to save them; even unto the Lord, but he answered them not." Is there not a wonderful union of sentiment and promise in these passages? Could anybody but a fool see any disagreement in them?

In Rom. xv, 33, and 1 Cor. xiv, 33, it says God is a God of Peace, and that he is not the author of confusion but peace. But in Ex. xv, 3, and xl, 15: Psalms cxliv, 1, it says, "The Lord is a man of war. He is called the Lord of Hosts," and that he "teacheth my hands to war and my fingers to fight." In many other parts of the Bible he is made to take great pleasure in war and bloodshed, and in leading armies to a bloody conflict. Is it not curious to see how completely these passages of the Word of God run together in perfect accord?

In James vi, 11, Lam. iii, 33; 1 Chron. xvi, 34, Ezek. xviii, 32 Psalms cxlv, 9; 1 John iv, 10, and numerous other passages, it is said that God is love, that his mercy endureth forever, that he doth not willingly afflict and grieve the children of men, that he hath no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, that he is good to all, and that his tender mercies are over all his works, and much more in the same line; while in Jer. xiii, 14, Deut. vii, 16; 1 Sam. xv, 2, 3; 1 Sam. vi, 19, Deut. iv, 24, Josh. x, 11, and many similar passages, it is said that God will not pity nor spare, nor have mercy, but will destroy his people; that he should deliver people to be consumed without pity, that he commanded that Amalek be smitten and utterly destroyed, and spared not, but to slay man, woman, child, and suckling; that God is a consuming fire, and that he cast down stones out of heaven and killed lots of his own offspring. Cannot a man who is not a fool see a beautiful agreement in these diverse passages?

In Psalms iii, 8, and xxx, 5, does it not say that God is "merciful, gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy, and that his anger "endureth not a moment;" while in Num. xxvii, 13, Num. xxv, 4, Jer. xvii, 4, Psalms vii, 11, Ex. iv, 24, it states how God's anger was fearfully kindled; that he commanded that the heads of the people who had been beheaded be taken and hung up in the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord might be turned away, that the fire of his fierce anger should burn forever, that he was angry every day, that he sought on many occasions to kill people, and much more of the same character. Is here not a most lovely and heavenly agreement?

In Ex. xxix, 36; Lev. xxiii, 27; Ex. xxix, 18; Lev. i, 9, God commands burnt offerings and delights in them, says they are a sweet savor unto him, and all that, while in Jer. vii, 22; Jer. vi, 20; Ps. i, 13, 14; Isa. i, 13, 11, 12, he says he did not command burnt offerings, that they were not acceptable nor sweet to him, and that he was full of burnt offerings of rams and the fat of fed beasts; that he delighted not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats, and he even coolly asked the people who had required sacrifices at their hands. Is not such harmony perfectly delightful to the sainted clergy who despise the poor fools?

In Deut. xii, 30, 31, God discountenanced and forbade human sacrifices, while in Lev. xxvii, 28, 29; 2 Sam. xxi, 8, 9, 14; Gen. xxi, 2, and Judges xi, 30-39, is not the practice approved and commanded? More harmony and consistency!

In James i, 13, it says God "tempts no man," while in Gen. xxii, 1; 1 Sam. xxiv, 1; Job ii, 3; Jer. xx, 7, and many other passages, it says God tempted Abraham, that he tempted David, that he deceived Jeremiah and was himself tempted of Satan. Of course this is perfect harmony to all but fools.

In Num. xxiii, 19, it says God cannot lie, while in Jer. iv, 10; xiv, 18; 2 Thes. ii, 11; 1 Kings xxii, 23; Judges ix, 23; Ezek. xiv, 9, and elsewhere, it declares that God deceived the people, that he sent strong delusions that his people should believe a lie, that he put a lying spirit into the mouths of his prophets, that he sent an evil spirit, that he deceived the prophets, etc., etc. How blessed it is to find perfect harmony in the "Holy Scriptures"!

It is easy to show, by quoting conflicting passages, that God not only commanded robbery but forbade it; that he sanctioned, approved and commanded lying, and also prohibited it; that he commanded men to kill and not to kill; that he said blood-shedders should die and that blood-shedders should not die; that the making of images was commanded and forbidden; that he commanded and prohibited slavery; that improvidence was enjoined and condemned; that anger was approved and that anger was disapproved; that good works should be seen of men and that good works should not be seen of men; that judging others was forbidden in one place and commanded in another; that non-resistance was both enjoined and disapproved; that public prayer was both sanctioned and condemned; that importunity in prayer is commanded in one part and forbidden in another; that the wearing of long hair by men is sanctioned in one place and condemned in another; that circumcision is commanded in one place and condemned in another; that the Sabbath is instituted in one place and repudiated in another; that baptism is commanded in one instance and not commanded in others; that every kind of animals is allowed for food in one place and many kinds forbidden in others; that the taking of oaths is sanctioned in one place and forbidden in others; that marriages are approved in some instances and condemned in others; that adultery is both sanctioned and condemned; that hatred of kindred is both enjoined and condemned; that woman's rights are both denied and affirmed; that obedience to masters is both commanded and countermanded; that there is an unpardonable and that there is no unpardonable sin, and much more in keeping. Now you will doubtless still insist that there is not the least contradiction in all these instances, except in the minds of fools, and I insist that he must be a fool who cannot readily perceive them.

Among the historical statements of the Bible there is frequently as much agreement as in the doctrinal which we have been glancing at. We will take a peep at a few of the large number: In Gen. i, 25, 27 it says that man was created after the other animals; while in the next chapter, verses 18, 19, it says he was created before the animals. Could both ways be stated without a contradiction?

According to Gen. viii, 22, seed-time and harvest were to never cease, but according to Gen. xli, 54-56 and Gen. xlv, 6, seed-time and harvest did cease for seven years. This would seem to be a contradiction, but only to fools.

In Ex. iv, 2, and Ex. ix, 12, it says God hardened Pharaoh's heart; but Ex. viii, 15, says Pharaoh hardened it himself. Of course both are correct; no contradiction here.

In 2 Sam. xxiv, 1, it says the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go number Israel and Judah. In 1 Chron. xxi, 1, in narrating the same event, it says, "And Satan stood up against Israel and provoked David to number Israel." Can you see any signs of a contradiction here? Are both statements true? Are, then, Satan and God the same individual?

In Mat. xi, 14, it says that John the Baptist was the Elias which was to come; but in John i, 21, it says directly to the contrary. A divine agreement.

According to Mat. i, 16, the father of Joseph, Mary's husband, was Jacob; while in Luke iii, 38, it says it was Heli. It only needs a little faith and godliness to see the perfect agreement in these two statements.

In Matt. ii, 14-23, it says the infant Jesus was taken into Egypt, while in Luke ii, 22, 39, it states that he was not taken into Egypt. More agreement.

According to Mark i, 12, 13; Jesus was tempted in the wilderness forty days and nights, but according to John ii, 1, 2, nothing of the kind took place. How harmonious! It must be divine!

According to Matt. v, 1, 2, Jesus preached his first sermon on a mount, but according to Luke v, 17, 20, it was on a plain. It must have been both ways.

By Mark i, 14, John was in prison when Jesus went to Galilee, while by John i, 43, and John iii, 22-24, John was not in prison at that time. Beautiful consistency!

According to Matt. xx, 30, two blind men besought Jesus to have mercy on them, and called him the son of David, while by Luke xviii, 35, 38, it was but one man. Of course both statements are true.

In Matt. viii, 28, it says two men coming out of the tomb met Jesus, while Mark v, 2, says it was but one man. Do one and two in Christian theology mean the same as one and three do?

According to Mark xv, 25, Jesus was crucified at the third hour, but John xix, 14, 15, says it was the sixth hour. Probably three hours is not much of a mistake for Deity to make.

According to Matt. the two thieves reviled Jesus, while according to Luke it was but one. The exactness of the divine author is reassuring indeed.

Matthew (xxvii, 34) says vinegar with gall was given Jesus to drink on the cross; but Mark (xv, 23) says it was wine mingled with myrrh. Both true of course. God undoubtedly knew what he was talking about.

John (xiii, 27) says Satan entered into Judas while at supper, but Luke (xxii, 3-7) says it was before supper. Which of them saw the entrance made?

Matthew says (xxvii, 3) that Judas returned the thirty pieces of silver, but in Acts i, 18, says he did not return the money but invested it in real estate. Of course both were correct.

Matthew says Judas hanged himself, while in Acts it says he fell headlong and burst asunder and all his bowels gushed out. In an ordinary newspaper account of a similar catastrophe a reporter would not be allowed to make such a blunder; but God, in getting up statements, is not governed by any ordinary rules of accuracy. The statement in Acts is not credible. Judas might have fallen headlong, but he would hardly burst asunder and all his bowels gush out. When men fall from house tops and other heights, and suddenly kill themselves, they do not burst asunder, nor do their bowels all gush out. Still, God ought to know how to report the case, and both ways must be true. Perhaps Judas hung himself first, and the rope breaking suddenly, he fell very heavily and burst asunder and all his bowels gushed out. It is probable he did not survive the injury.

John (xx, 1) says but one woman came to the sepulchre; but Matthew (xxviii, 1) says there were two; but Matthew was liable to stretch things a little, and perhaps his statement should be discounted about one Mary. But no, that will not do. It is the Word of God, and it must be correct. The heavenly harmonies must not be disturbed. Mark (xvi, 1) says there were three of the women, while Luke has it that there were five or six. This beats the celebrated "crow" story; but the correctness of the four different statements can be doubted only by fools; a few women more or less make but little difference.

Matthew says the women came at sunrise, but John says it was before sunrise and while it was yet dark. As neither of them were there, perhaps they should not expect to agree to within hour or two.

Luke says two angels were seen at the sepulchre, but Matthew shrinks the number and says it was but one angel. John and Mark say the one angel, and the two angels were seen within the sepulchre, but Matthew insists that it was without the sepulchre, for he rolled back the stone and sat upon it. These little discrepancies of course are not essential. They must all be accepted as the exact truth.

Matthew and Luke say the women went and told the disciples about the resurrection of Jesus, but Mark says they said not a word about it to anybody. Of course you can see nothing but perfect agreement here.

Mark and John say Jesus appeared first to Mary Magdalene only. Matthew says he appeared to the two Marys, while Luke says he appeared to neither of the Marys. A godly man can see that each of these statements must be true.

According to Mat. xii, 40; Jesus was to be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, but, according to the testimony of the other evangelists, he was in the sepulchre but two nights and one day. The agreement here is again perfect. Possibly Jesus found the heart of the earth so intensely hot that one hour counted for two, and thirty-six were the same as seventy-two. It must all be correct, by some process of reasoning.

In Acts i, 8, and ii, 14, it says the Holy Ghost was bestowed at Pentecost, while John says it was bestowed before Pentecost (xx, 22). As the Holy Ghost is rather an uncertain quantity, perhaps we ought not to expect that all accounts of him will perfectly agree.

According to Matthew, the disciples were commanded, immediately after the resurrection, to go into Galilee, while according to Luke, they were at the same time commanded to tarry at Jerusalem. But it is only fools that will mind these apparent contradictions.

According to Luke and John, Jesus first appeared to the eleven in a room in Jerusalem, while, according to Matthew, it was on a mountain in Galilee. This discrepancy is only apparent; the real harmony is deific. When a slight allowance is made for Matthew, who sometimes told the truth by accident, the agreement is truly wonderful.

According to Acts i, 9, 12, Jesus ascended from Mount Olivet. According to Luke (xxiv, 50, 57) he ascended from Bethany. According to Mark (xvi, 14, 19) he went up in the presence of his disciples as they sat at meat in a room; while Matthew does not say anything about his going up at all. It is almost a wonder he did not have the ascension made feet foremost. Who can doubt that God wrote these different accounts? Probably if there had been a few more "Evangelists" to write up the wonderful affair, not only Jesus but all his disciples would have "gone up," and never been heard of more. Many evangelists are "going up," even at the present day.

In Acts ix, 7, we learn that Paul's attendants stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man. In Acts xxii, 9, it says they heard not the voice, and in chap. xxii, 14, instead of saying they stood, it says they fell to the earth. Possibly the Great Being who instructed the writers forgot just how it was.

It is generally understood that Abraham had two sons—one by his wife Sarai, named Isaac, and one by his hand-maid, or concubine, Hagar, named Ishmael—but in Heb. xi, 17, it speaks of Isaac as Abraham's "only begotten son." Perhaps Ishmael was not begotten. He might have been a divine bastard, like Christ.

According to Gen. xxi, 2, and Rom. iv, 19, Abraham begot his son Isaac when a hundred years old, by the assistance of God, but after "getting the hang of the business," he was afterwards able to get six more children without any particular help from the Divine Power, notwithstanding his great age. "Never to old to learn."

By Gen. xiii, 14, 15, and xvii, 8, and many other passages we learn that God promised the land of Canaan to Abraham and his seed forever, but according to Acts vii, 5, and Heb. xi, 9, 13, Abraham never so much as set a foot on it, and the promise was never fulfilled. "A bad promise is better broken than kept."

According to 2 Chron. xxxii, 1, Ahaziah was the youngest son of Jehoram, while by 2 Chron. xxi, 16, 17, we learn it was not so. Those who pay their money (to the preachers) can take their choice.

By 2 Kings, viii, 17, 24, 26, we learn that Ahaziah was twenty-two years old when he began to reign, being eighteen years younger than his father; but by 2 Chron. xxii, 1, 2, we learn still further that Ahaziah was forty-two years old when he began to reign, two years older than his father. Probably according to theological science a man may be a few years older than his father. At all events, the little difficulties should not be questioned. "All things are possible with God."

When David numbered the people, according to 2 Sam. xxiv, 9, there were 800,000 of Israel and 500,000 of Judah; while according to 1 Chron. xxiv, 10, there were 1,100,000 of Israel and 470,000 of Judah—a difference of only 300,000. But God did not have the advantage of a common-school education, hence these discrepancies—apparent only to the poor fools who have not studied divine mathematics in a theological seminary. There is nothing like divine exactness. We always know what to depend upon when we read a book that God wrote with his own finger. In point of reliability and mystery it is on a par with boarding-house hash.

According to 2 Sam. x, 18, David, on a certain occasion, slew 700 Syrian charioteers; but according to 1 Chron. xix, 18, it was 7,000 Syrian charioteers. Probably the latter are David's own figures, but both must be true. There can not be an error in that Great Book.

By 1 Sam. xxiv, 24, we learn that David paid fifty shekels of silver for a certain threshing-floor; but 1 Chron. xxi, 25, it says he paid six hundred shekels of gold. This was too much—don't believe David paid it. Divinity must have been mistaken. He ought to be reasonable, at any rate.

According to 1 Sam. xvii, 4, 50, we find that it was David who slew Goliath; but by 2 Sam. xxi, 19, we further learn that it was Elhanan who slew the giant. The words, "the brother of," are not in the original, but were supplied by the translators to avoid a contradiction. They should have played that card much oftener, if they meant to reconcile all the discrepancies.

In the speculative doctrines there is little better agreement between the various parts of the book. For instance, Jesus said his mission was peace and he also said it was not peace; that he was all-powerful and that he was not all-powerful; that he was equal with God and that he was not equal with God; that he did receive testimony from man and that he did not receive testimony from men; that his witness was true and that it was not true; that it was lawful for the Jews to put him to death and that it was not lawful; that children are punished for the sins of their parents and that they are not so punished; that man is justified by faith alone and that he is not justified by faith alone; that it is possible to fall from grace and that it is not possible to fall from grace; that no man is without sin, and that Christians are not sinners; that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, and that there is to be no resurrection of the dead; that rewards and punishments are bestowed in this world, and that they are not bestowed in this world; that annihilation is the portion of all mankind, and that endless misery is the fate of a large part of the race; that the earth is to be destroyed, and that the earth is never to be destroyed; that no evil shall happen to the godly, and that evil shall happen to the godly; that worldly good and prosperity is the lot of the godly, and that worldly misery and destitution is the lot of the godly; that worldly prosperity and blessing is a reward for righteousness, and that worldly prosperity is a curse and a bar to future rewards; that the Christian's yoke is easy and that it is not easy; that the fruit of God's spirit is love and gentleness, and that the fruit of God's spirit is vengeance and fury; that prosperity and longevity are enjoyed by the wicked, and that they are denied to the wicked; that poverty is a blessing, and that riches are a blessing—also, that neither poverty nor riches is a blessing; that wisdom is a source of enjoyment, and that it is a source of vexation, grief and sorrow; that a good name is a blessing, and also that a good name is a curse; that laughter is commanded and that it is condemned; that the rod of correction is a remedy for foolishness, and that there is no remedy for foolishness; that temptation is to be desired, and that it is not to be desired; that prophecy is sure and that it is not sure; that man's life was to be one hundred and twenty years and that it was to be but seventy years; that miracles are a proof of divine mission, and that they are not a proof of divine mission; that Moses was a very meek man, and that he was a very cruel man; that Elijah went up bodily through the air into heaven, and that Christ was the only one who had thus ascended into heaven; that all the Scriptures are inspired, and that some Scripture is not inspired (to which opinion I decidedly incline); that servants are taught to obey their masters, and also that they are to be the servants of no man; again, that they should be subject to their masters with all fear—not the good and gentle alone, but also to the froward—and that they should worship the Lord God, and him only should they serve; that those who blaspheme against the Holy Ghost have never forgiveness, and that all that believe are justified from all things; that Jesus and his father were equal, or one, and that the Father was greater than he. It is said that Jesus was the Prince of Peace, and again, that he did not come to bring peace but a sword; that God is a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the third and fourth generations, and that the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; that there is not a just man upon the earth that doeth good and sinneth not, and that he that committeth sin is of the Devil.

And thus that perfect divine book, direct from the mansions of bliss, goes on almost interminably on both sides of almost every subject that may be named. I could cite many more positive contradictions, but perhaps I have named enough to satisfy our readers that the book is full of palpable incongruities, if I cannot satisfy you of the fact. They may see, too, that the man who arranged them without a word of comment was not necessarily a fool, and that the foolishness consists in believing that such a mass of contradictions and absurdities are an emanation from the great source of truth, harmony, and intelligence. The marvel is how so intelligent a man as yourself can believe that the old book had any higher origin than the minds and hands of men, and that you can so easily see the hand and intellect of a God in it. I would repeat, that the absurdity of ascribing to a superhuman power a book, or a collection of books, that most assuredly are not superior to human production almost transcends comprehension. If the Jewish Scriptures, with all their foibles, contradictions, absurdities, and senselessness, is the best their God can do in getting up a book, he certainly is not a success in that line, and had better give his attention to killing people, conducting wars, etc., and leave book-making to those who possess a greater degree of skill in that direction than himself. Can you possibly believe that a being who could speak the earth, the sun, the solar system, and the entire Universe, with its constellations of suns and stars and its vast congeries of constellations and systems, causing all to move together in wonderful beauty and harmony; who was also able to organize and perfect the equally wonderful microscopic world—the vast kingdom of minute, invisible animation—the infinitesimal leviathans that disport in a drop of water, and the herds of minute animals or beasts that feed upon a single leaf, all the systems and grades of life being conducted with consummate skill—could not produce a more perfect book than the Jewish Bible? If that is the best that such a Deity can do in book-making, had I his private ear I would say, "Confine yourself to world-making, to devising the various systems of vegetable and animal life, but don't try again to write a book. It does you great discredit."

As serious as the subject is, I can hardly help being amused at your efforts in trying to extricate your Bible God from the odium connected with the villainous slaughter of the Midianites, and I cannot understand how so amiable and peaceable a man as yourself can apologize for and justify such a murderous, cruel and damnable transaction. Can it be possible that you can think that the adultery of the Hebrew Zinri with the Midianitish woman Cozbi, or even that a thousand such instances would justify the plundering, despoiling, robbing, massacring and exterminating an entire peaceful nation, or five nations rather, for they had five kings? It would seem that the Midianites were eminently a peaceful, agricultural people. They seemed not to understand the arts of war, for they appeared to fall an easy prey to the twelve thousand red-handed murderers that Moses sent over to slaughter them, and they seemed so incapable of self-defence that they killed few or none of the brigands that despoiled them. That the Midianites were an agricultural people is evident from their great herds of sheep, cattle and asses. They were just such prey as the Jews and their blood-thirsty God were partial to.

Of all the murderous details of which history informs us, there is nothing so utterly monstrous and cruel as the treatment of the Midianites by God's chosen people. The males were all put to the sword, in the first place, and all their wealth, their jewels, their wearing apparel, their 675,000 sheep, 72,000 beef cattle and 61,000 asses. They then burnt their cities, their goodly castles, despoiling their homes and spreading devastation and despair over the entire country. The robbers, it seems, possessed a moiety of humanity, and saved the women and children alive, but when that man of God, Moses, learned this, he flew into a rage, shrieking out in demoniac rage, "Have ye saved all the women alive? Kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him, but all the women-children that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves." Was ever any order from any tyrant or murderer so merciless, so cruel, so monstrous? And that devilish order was carried out. From fifty thousand to one hundred thousand—as near as can be estimated—of women and male babies were murdered in cold blood in the sight of the young girls who had never laid with man, and thirty-two thousand of the latter were turned over for the indulgence of the base, lustful passions of the men who had murdered their fathers, their mothers and their little brothers. O, was anything ever so shocking, so villainous? Did devils ever do anything so bad as this? Were Turks or savages ever so lost to every fine feeling of the human heart? And yet the Rev. G. H. Humphrey—a professed follower and teacher of the meek and lowly Jesus—stands up in this day of culture, civilization and refinement and attempts to justify this most abominable and damnable business! I am truly sorry that he has espoused a religion that makes it necessary for him to do a deed so abhorrent to every noble feeling and sympathy of his nature. Good grounds had Theodore Parker for saying to an orthodox clergyman, "My friend, your God is my Devil." If there was nothing else vile and abhorrent in that old book, the thirty-first chapter of Numbers is alone sufficient to eternally damn the compilation in the eyes of every kind-hearted, just and sympathizing man in the world, and to cause him to contemplate with perfect abhorrence a being capable of ordering and approving such a bloody, diabolical piece of business. I never will love nor worship such a monster, and it is only a wonder to me how any good man or woman possibly can.

Among the great objections that the Hebrew Scriptures should be accepted as the infallible word of God is the monstrous, unlovable character it gives to that being. By the chapter just referred to (Num. xxxi,) we get a vivid and, in fact, a lurid picture of him, and, as I remarked, it constitutes him a fiend incarnate. There are other parts of the Bible not much behind in painting him as a most grotesque and horrible monster. Let me quote a few passages. "Smoke came out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth, so that coals were kindled by it" (2 Sam. xxii, 9). "He had horns coming out of his hands, and these were the hiding of his power" (Hab. ii, 4). "Out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword" (Rev. i, 16). "Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword" (xix, 15). "The Lord shall roar from on high. He roareth from his habitation. He shall shout as they that tread the grapes" (Jer. xxv, 30). "He awakened as one out of sleep, and shouldesth like a man drunken with wine" (Ps. lxxviii, 65). "In his anger he persecuted and slew without pity" (Lam. iii, 45). "His fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him" (Nah. i, 6). "He became angry and swore" (Ps. xcv, 11). "He burns with anger; his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire" (Is. xxx, 27). "He is a jealous God" (Ex. xxxiv, 14). "He stirred up jealousy" (Is. xlii, 18). "He was jealous to fury" (Zach. viii, 2). "He rides upon horses" (Hab. iii, 8). "He cried and roared" (Is. xlii, 13). "He laughs in scorn" (Ps. ii, 4). "The Lord is a man of war" (Ex. xv, 3). "His anger will be accomplished, and his fury rest upon them, and then he will be comforted" (Ezek. v, 13). "His arrows shall be drunken with blood" (Deut. xxxii, 42). "He is angry with the wicked every day" (Ps. vii, 11). "They have moved me to jealousy; I will provoke them to anger. . . A fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell. I will heap mischief upon them; I will spend my arrows upon them. . . They shall be burnt with hunger and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction. I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of the serpents of the dust. The sword without and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling also, and the man of gray hairs" (Deut. xxxii, 21-25). "If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment. I will render vengeance to mine enemies" (Deut. xxxii, 41). "The Lord said I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets" (1 Kings, xxii, 22). "The Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouths of all his prophets" (1 Kings, xxii, 23). "I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you" (Jer. xviii, 11). "I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh" (Prov. i, 26). "I myself will fight against you with an outstretched arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath" (Jer. xxi, 5). "He reserveth wrath for his enemies" (Nah. i, 2).

Hundreds of similar passages from the Bible might be cited, were it necessary, to show the malicious, vindictive, and merciless character of Jehovah, whom we are commanded to love as a being of transcendent excellence, goodness, and love. Such an idea of God could only be devised by cruel, barbarian minds, and it cannot be natural and easy for refined and intelligent people to love and worship such a monster. Truthfully did Ingersoll exclaim: "There can be little liberty on earth while men worship a tyrant in heaven."

It is a consoling view in considering the Bible character of God that the picture drawn of him there must not be regarded as the true one. The crude and undeveloped race of men have been making gods for many thousand years, and they have all made their gods after their own models. Warlike, fighting nations have devised warlike and fighting gods. Peaceful and quiet nations have had peaceful and quiet gods. As the Jews have been regarded as one of the meanest nations of men, in some respects, that ever had an existence, it is perhaps not strange that their God should be one of the meanest and most blood-thirsty that has been heard of on the earth. This is strictly true. Take all the gods of pagandom—horrible as many of them were—and roll them all into one, and they would not, in point of maliciousness, blood-thirstiness, vengeance, petulance, anger, unreasonableness, vindictiveness, selfishness, injustice, and all the attributes that are horrible and detestable equal old Jehovah, the God of the Jews. It is probably the most unfortunate fate that ever befel the people of Christendom that they adopted Jehovah and the abhorrent system of theology connected with him.

It is becoming more and more evident that God—whatever the word may mean—is wholly a creation of the human brain. Every man gets him up according to his own fancy. There are no two persons who have the same conceptions of God; and it is amusing to listen to the varied and ever-varying, wild, crude, and incongruous conceits about God that different persons will present you. Nobody that lives knows anything about God. Nobody that ever has lived knew anything about him. All that anybody knows he imagines from what somebody else told him, and the one who told him got it from somebody else who knew less, if possible, upon the subject than he knew himself. This shadowy conception that such a God has ever written a book, and embarked in the publishing business, is one of the wildest vagaries that has ever seized the human mind. I regard the belief in gods as wholly unfounded and unwarranted. This belief dates back into man's crude and unprogressed condition, when demons, satyrs, gnomes, genii, hobgoblins, furies, fairies, naiads, byaderes, and all the monstrosities of that class were supposed to walk the earth, but not one of whom was ever seen or known, save in the distempered minds of ignorant and superstitious men and women. The belief in gods has, in fact, been the grand central superstition of all the superstitions in the world. It has dragged poor humanity down into the chilly damps and mouldy fogs of mysticism and ignorant credulity more than all the other beliefs man has hugged to his heart, and the Jewish Bible has wielded a great and injurious influence in this direction. The gods have done nothing for man save make him a slave to a designing priesthood, who pretend to interpret and declare his will. Had man depended upon gods, and more upon himself, it would have been greatly to his advantage.

The following remarks from a sermon by Henry Ward Beecher are to the point and worthy of attention: "Nobody can see God. He is to everybody but an idea. It is an idea, too, which we fashion in our own mind and project into some external form, for every man in this life must put into form anything which he distinctly conceives of. The mode of forming that idea makes the difference between barbarians, semi-civilized and civilized men all the way up. All form the God they worship; some by one method and some by another. Some with higher materials, representing the elements of thought and beauty—that is the Greek; some with moral qualities and dispositional affections representing the true Christian conception of God, not magisterial, but paternal, as if paternity itself was the highest conception of which the human mind is capable, as if, under the element of divine paternity, justice, power and law rank themselves as subordinate, love being the highest, and parental love the noblest conception, and all moral quality, inhering in the supreme, superlative idea of love—an idea yet struggling for birth into human light, not yet born or grown." If we could throw upon a screen, as objects in science are thrown and magnified, the real conception which a Christian man forms of God, it is not probable they would come nearer together than the generic. Specifically they would differ from one another, as one man differs from another. This being is represented to us as compassing the Universe—as having scope that is simply immeasurable. The element of time, as well as scope of being, must needs belong, and does belong to our inherent conception of God."

I must confess to you that the picture you draw of an affectionate mother whipping her offspring with such unnatural severity as to make it shriek and writhe with agony, as an excuse for the still greater torment, which you faintly believe your God inflicts upon his offspring, almost shocks my finer sensibilities. Can you for a moment see anything in such cruelty and severity commendable in a parent? Is such a government your highest ideal of love and affection? Can you indeed respect a parent or a Heavenly Father who finds an excuse for beating unmercifully or torturing endlessly their own flesh and blood, the children of their own begetting? By far do I prefer the sentiments of Ingersoll, whom you seem to so greatly dislike. In a late lecture he said: "What right have you to tyrannize over a child? I have very little respect for a man that cannot govern his child without brute force. Think of whipping children! Why, they say that children tell lies. Suppose a man who is as much larger than you are larger than a five-year old child, should come to you with a pole in his hand, 'Who broke that plate?' you would tremble, your knees would knock together, and you would swear you never saw it, or it was cracked when you got it. Think of a member of the Exchange whipping one of his children for prevaricating! Think of a lawyer beating his own flesh and blood because he had evaded the truth! Think of a Wall street gambler in stocks striking one of his children for lying! What an inconsistency! Think of it; and some of these men, some of these women, that whip their children, that beat their own flesh and blood, I wish they could have a photograph taken of themselves when they are doing it, their brows corrugated with anger, their cheeks red with wrath, and the little child shrinking, trembling, crouching, begging! If this child should happen to die, wouldn't it be sweet in the autumn, when the maple trees are turning to gold and when the scarlet vine runs like a sad regret out of the earth—wouldn't it be delightful to go and sit on the little grassy mound that covered the flesh they had beaten, and look at that photograph of themselves in the act of whipping that child?"

"Now, think of it, think of it; and if all I say to-night will save one blow from the tender flesh of infancy, I am more than paid. I have known men to drive their own children from their doors and then get down on their knees and ask God to watch over them. I will never ask God to do a favor to a child of mine while I can do it, never. There are even some Christians who act as if they really believe that when the Savior said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me,' that he had a whip under his mantle, and simply said that to get them within striking distance. I will tell you what I say to mine. I say to my children this: 'Go where you may; do what you will; there is no crime you can commit, there is no depth of infamy to which you can sink, that will shut to you my door, my arms, or my heart.' Another thing. There is nothing in the world like being honest with these little children. Do not pretend you are perfection; you are not; and if one of them happens to tell a story, do not let on as if the whole world was going to burst. Tell them honestly you have told thousands of them. Do like the man did in Maine when he said to his boy, 'John, Honesty is the best policy; I have tried both.' Do not pretend you are perfection. You are not. But tell them the best way is the right way. Make them courageous, and, first of all, teach them not to fear you. So raise your children that the meanest thing they do they will tell you. And if you are honest with them they need not be ashamed of it, because you will simply compare experiences."

We see here the difference between the true conceptions of paternal love in an Infidel, who believes in no God that sits above the clouds frowning and raving at his children below, and does believe in improving the human race and raising them up to the highest plane of human perfection, and a pious Christian, who believes that the kind father of all delights in torturing his little frail, helpless children continually and hopelessly through all the endless years of eternity.

I am happy to think that we agree upon one point. You say: "Let us treat the Bible like any other book." Here I join hands with you, and say Amen! Let us treat it precisely as we would any other book. Let us criticise it; let us examine it; let us apply to it the test of reason and science; let us condemn its defects, its errors, and its absurdities, precisely as we would any other book that has ever been written. Let us despise to cloak or cover its fallacies and its ignorance. Let us give it due credit for all it contains that is beautiful, commendable, and of value; but let us not swear that it is a book sent from the throne of God in heaven, when there is not a passage nor a sentence in it that might not easily have been written by an ordinary human being. Let us not try to make more of it than it really is; let us not revere it. Let us not make a fetish of it; let us not claim that it is from a supernatural source, when there are not the slightest grounds for setting up such a claim.

I have already taken up too much space, and I must omit several remarks which I would like to make, until my next reply. I am sincerely yours, D. M. BENNETT.

Is not Humphrey a Myth?

MR. BENNETT: In reference to the discussion now in progress in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hear the question asked, Is not Humphrey a myth? Some seem to think you have originated a man of straw, and that you are only expending your force of argument upon an ideal being for the sake of discussion and the making out a case against Christianity. Others have it that it is a thing improbable that any intelligent minister of orthodox faith and sentiment would permit himself to discuss such questions of vital importance with so pronounced an infidel as you are, and in an infidel paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Then, again, the opinion prevails that no well-informed clergyman could take such untenable grounds as now and then appears; that he would not expose himself and his cause to such an apparent excess of weakness as he has done; and that he could not afford to lay himself open to just criticism in so many instances as is evident.

These are some of the varied notions a few good people entertain, who prefer to express a doubt as to the real existence of any such man as Humphrey.

But I am forced to entertain another view, and if it would not be regarded as impertinent, would like to say some things in connection with the subject under discussion. They say I am an old man—and I partially believe it—yet if so, I still have some recollection of an old proverb I heard in younger days something like this: "Old men for council; young men for war." Experience has been my schoolmaster in days when younger than I now am, and I think I can appreciate Mr. Humphrey's position better than those who have never traveled over the same road. For over eighteen years of my younger manhood I, too, was one of the ordained "defenders of the faith once delivered to the saints." Hence I think I cannot be entirely ignorant of the experience he is passing through, or of the difficulties he has to encounter in maintaining his cause.

Step by step thus far have I followed him in the discussion, with what I deemed a spirit of honest criticism. Certainly I have hoped he might bring to the surface the brightest and most convincing testimony that the Christian cause would permit. The best sympathies of my heart have been with him, if for nothing more, that I might be able to freshly review the foot-prints of the past in my own life's history, and determine, if possible, wherein I might have misjudged the evidences of my former faith. With me, it is honest and right that it should be so, as I can see no compensating values in that which is of self-sustaining truth in matters of religion.

With a kind of fraternal spirit of sincerity, then, I have been interested in this discussion, for myself personally as well as for Mr. Humphrey. He may not thank me for any sympathy I may express. I don't want he should. Yet I share the feelings of a brother man—I had almost said minister—and find I can hardly avoid it in this case.

In some portions of this important discussion Mr. Humphrey has done his work well, and proved himself a noble champion. But few men could have excelled him. Evidently to me then, you are not at war with a man of straw. Mr. Humphrey is a reality—real to himself and the world in which he lives. And I am forced to the conviction that he must be a man of a brave and noble soul. He feels undoubtedly that he has a mission to fill in this debate. He would gladly fill that mission to the approval of his own conscientious convictions of truth. I think he cannot from choice prefer untruth to truth itself. The goodness of his finer nature would forbid it. Error from choice has with him no scale of compensation to antagonize truth. He would not intentionally barter the true for the false. If he could perceive without a dimmed vision, humanity would stand forth enshrined as in a holy treasury in his view, aside from carping creeds and pinching dogmatisms.

And yet, after all, I think I can perceive down in his heart of hearts that he must feel himself floundering in waters too deep to maintain the elements of true manhood. On many points demanding honorable concessions from an honest disputant he has artfully skipped over into convenient obscurity, only leaving a blank surprise in the mind of the reader. Again, it is matter of regret that shrewdness of evasion answers his purpose better than arguments in many cases where frank admission would be far more honorable. Right reason demands better things, and cannot afford to bow its head in the very dust. It is hard for a man of good sense, or a good man of any sense, to divorce reason from his selfhood. Circumstances, however, tell the story.

With Mr. Humphrey, I think I can perceive how the force of events are as a land-lock to the liberties of his soul. I have been there before him. To himself he cannot easily dissemble, whatever may be the word of his exterior. His soul often sighs for a larger liberty. But what are the events surrounding him that discount the elements of his nobler manhood? Let us see. His office—by education, I presume—is that of a minister of God. What a dignified transaction! What a sublime event in the history of mortal man! Is he not unlike other men in this regard? In another sense, is he not partially unmanned, and—as anciently regarded—is he not god-man, or God's man? By this event, are not his liberties to be, to live, to act, to think, and speak like men in common, greatly abridged? Does he not feel it to be so in himself? If not, he is only a fraud, a deceiver, and has no heart consecration to the living God. Other men so regard him and do him reverence. If by the force of early trained conscience he has with fidelity pursued his God-work in life, there is to him a hallowed sacredness recorded on every page of that life's effort. Has such a man the liberty to think independently of his creed, and search for scientific truths that would prove the destruction of both his standing and his creed? Let those be his witnesses who have traveled the same road. Position, in the Church and in society, is everything to a minister. In the Church are all the springs of his earthly subsistence, without which no sacred ministerial office could be maintained twenty-four hours. Of course, the official has an eye to his living, and only by fidelity to his trust—that is, to keep within the prescribed limits of his creed—can he hope to be sustained. He is shepherd, teacher, guide, father and friend in the church that yields to him his support. Is there not a pressure in such an event as to make it appear almost superhuman over the creed and conduct of a minister in any church on earth?

To the outer society of the world an acknowledged minister feels that he has been placed as a beacon light for sinners, to point them to the Lamb of God, the way of life everlasting, and to reveal the miseries of the damned for unbelief. He must be consistent with the vows of his creed. Has he any liberty to call that in question? Indeed, restraint is upon him in every step he takes, look which way he will. If he looks up, the fear of God stares him in the face. In looking upon man, he sees the curious eye and critical ear ever open for exploration of his creed, his public and private life. With him the restriction of a Divine awe carries with it the enslavement of a human soul. And, poor man, he has no liberty to call in question the fetters that bind him. All the restrictions of a "supernatural revelation" to which he is religiously bound to yield a tame submission are but the proofs of the mind and the desolation that reigns within. Ages have been cursed with this same blight of mental imbecility. All is more the pity because men are so insensible to the fact. And then the pity, again, that this same insensibility should become the parent of superstition. Sympathetically yielding to the dictation of unauthenticated, contradictory and blind authority in this age of reason and sober thinking is anything but manly. Less manly still to emburthen the noble powers of the mind with a stubborn indifference to the claims of scientific investigation as to any religion presented for the good of human society.

How is brother Humphrey related to such a state of things?

In what I have to say, I intend no officious intermeddling in other men's matters. But this discussion has become public property and concerns every man, woman and child in the world. Every one has or will have an opinion on the great problem now under discussion, and none can deny them the right to express it. The world has too long been slumbering under the restrictions of ignorance and superstition. It is time to tear off the gloomy mask and let the sunlight of reason and science come in cheerily to warm the souls of men.

Although Mr. Humphrey has labored like a tall giant to do his work well, I fear he is flagging in the fight. He is on too low ground. Come up, brother Humphrey. Occupy the higher plane of reason, as well as revelation. Take fresh courage in a more healthy atmosphere. Abandon the low grounds of sophistry and the quagmire of sarcasm. The subject is too gravely pregnant with moral results for you to remain longer down there. Take higher grounds and let living truth be your shield and buckler. You cannot afford to close this discussion with the taint of mental imbecility and moral duplicity covering your nobler manhood. The voices of Reason, Science, and Humanity cry out for better things of you. That cry is more imploringly urgent than that of creed or sect. True, the howl of Infidelity may have its chilling terrors and frightful apparitions to alarm you.

But was not the Christ your beloved master in his day one of the noblest of Infidels—and for his Infidelity and blasphemy did not the Church crucify him? And now shall the servant be above the Master? What if the distorted and perverse definition of Infidelity have no more willing cheer in your ear than it has in mine? "Let not your heart be troubled." Polite and popular opinion is more inclined to brand that word with infamy. It is the policy and interest of the Church to have it so.

And just here I want to say, I perceive a double error, Mr. Bennett, in both of you as contestants—the fight being, as it seems to me, merely antithetical, rather than arguing to the question. The simple antithesis involved in the two words Christianity and Infidelity, are of minor importance. The perversion of either of those words may define everything or nothing, tangible and intangible. Christianity may include Pagan, Greek, Roman and Protestant, or neither. Infidelity, like Christianity, or Indiarubber, is a word of indefinite extension. It means much or little, just as the caprice or prejudices of the talisman may elect. It reaches from a cypher to infinitude—from one God to none. As a Unitarian or a Free-Religionist, I would be regarded as much of an Infidel by Bro. Humphrey as Mr. Bennett himself. All this play on words has only a tendency to feed the flames of partisan strife and lower the dignity of the main question at issue. I would that a fraternal unity might be the merit with both disputants in closing this discussion.

But I have a word more in relation to the Rev. Albert Barnes, whose words you have quoted from a sermon near the close of his long laborious life. Over thirty years ago it was my pleasure to be in happy accord with that truly good man. I thought it no wrong to cherish his merits as worthy of all patronage. To me his death was like the extinction of a star of the first magnitude. I was interested in your quotation and manly notice of him. I was also very deeply interested to know how friend Humphrey would respond to the deep heart-tones of that departed "father in Israel." Imagine my disappointment in his last to find that he had passed over it in profound silence. Could Bro. Humphrey rightly read and interpret the heart of that good man, Barnes, as he wrote those words—and more—he might have been able to look through that cloud of deep despair Mr. Barnes felt over the "mysteries of godliness," and perceived in the far beyond a bow of promise for humanity to temper the gloom of such surroundings. No minister in honest pursuit of spiritual truth, can evade the conviction it necessarily must produce. Out of my veneration for Mr. Barnes, you will allow me to repeat his words (as published Aug. 14, page 242, T. S.): "I see not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into the world, why the earth is strewn with the dying and the dead, and why man must suffer to all eternity. I have never seen a particle of light thrown on these subjects that has given a moment's ease to my tortured mind; nor have I an explanation to offer or a thought to suggest that would be a relief to you. I trust other men, as they profess to do, understand this better than I do, and that they have not the anguish of spirit I have; but I confess, when I look on a world of sinners and sufferers, upon death-beds and graveyards, upon the world of woe, filled with hearts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow-citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger; when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned; and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it, I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it" (Practical Sermons, p. 124).

The same steel of agony that entered the soul of that honest man, and "gave not a moment of ease to his tortured mind," long ago touched mine also. Has Bro. Humphrey's heart never been touched by the same anguish? I know it has. And if the man I have taken you to be, that anguish cannot slumber. Will you be honest with your own soul? "As in water, face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." Evidently the world can be made better only as men are bold enough and good enough to speak the truth in the love of it, lead where it may. Fiction is no fair guide for crippled humanity. If the blind lead the blind, will they not both founder in the ditch of despair? The true man—the man of intelligent discernment—who loves rather to lead his fellow brother to the fountains of scientific realities in search of the true is only to be trusted. Ministers, of all other living men, ought to be the conservators of truth. The nature of their profession demands they should be. Evasion or dissembling in any of the great truths demanded by yearning humanity, would be treacherous and ignoble. It is too late for the clergy to dodge the legitimate deductions of Reason and Science. Better yield to their honorable conclusions and share in the glory of an honorable conquest. If not, the time is at hand when they will go down in infamy, and their memory for good be lost forever. It is indeed a difficult task in this age of intelligence and reason, to make the abortive attempt longer to sustain the tottering fabric of Supernatural Inspiration, and by its false exegesis enslave the souls of men. History must not—will not—repeat itself in this regard, and gather back the pall of the dark ages, since by the love of a nobler humanity, man is beginning to see a brother in his fellow-man. G. W. W. Galesburg, Ill., Aug. 21, 1877.

REMARKS.—Our learned correspondent is quite right in regarding Bro. Humphrey as not a "man of straw." He is a real, living, able, ingenious, friendly, companionable man. He frequently calls upon us, and we have called upon him and his excellent lady. We trust there is naught but the truest friendship existing between us. With our correspondent we would greatly rejoice could Mr. Humphrey become convinced of the superiority of Nature, Reason and Humanity over theological dogmas, ecclesiasticism and religious fanaticism. We think there are grounds for hope that this may ultimately be the case. He is an honest man and eminently intellectual, with but a limited tendency to fanaticism and marvelously. If he can remove the effects of early education, the bias of the theological school he was educated in, it would seem that he ought in time to become an intelligent Rationalist.—ED. T. S.

Obituary.

Died, at Portland, Oregon, July 9, 1877, Miss HANNAH A. PERKINS, of Eugene City, Or., aged 28 years and 4 months.

Miss Perkins was a young woman of more than ordinary intelligence, and of sterling moral qualities. She was an observer of nature, a reader of books, a seeker for the truth, and a lover of her race. She possessed moral firmness and independence of character in a remarkable degree. She espoused and defended what she believed true, whoever dissented, and did what she thought right, whoever objected; yet a natural sensibility and tenderness of heart preserved her from anything like indifference to the feelings of those from whom she was obliged to differ. Her many noble qualities of mind and heart had endeared her to a large circle of friends to whom her death is a source of deep regret and inexpressible sorrow. Miss Perkins was heartily interested in all the good movements of the day, which she encouraged in every way she could. I remember well the interest she took in courses of lectures the writer gave in Eugene City a few years ago; not for herself simply, but for the sake of others whom she wished to see emancipated from the thralldom of superstition. She was a very radical Freethinker, and she deemed it a duty to defend her principles on all proper occasions. Shortly before her death she called her father to her bedside and expressed to him the fullest confidence in the truth of the philosophy in which she had lived, and the sufficiency of which in the last hours of life was attested by her experience. She requested him to tell her friends that she died with no faith in the Bible or its God, with no reliance on its promises of heaven, and no fear of its threats of hell. Without misgivings as to the future, calm and resigned, she passed into that sleep which awaits us all. She rests by the side of her mother in the family burial-ground at Portland. To the surviving parent we can only give our heartfelt sympathy on this great bereavement. A loss, an irreparable loss, her death certainly is, especially to those nearest and dearest to her—those who knew her best. No philosophy can make it appear "for the best" when a young life goes out, and no argument can or should stifle the most sacred part of our nature; but death must come to us all, and while it is human to weep at the grave of those we love, Reason bids us submit without complaining to that which is inevitable, while Time, if it does not always heal completely, never fails to soothe the wound produced by death.

Our friend's life was short, but it was not a useless one. The world is better for her brief but beautiful life, the influence of which will endure when all who now live shall have followed her to the silent realm. "We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

A Letter from Morgan R. Nichols.

ETNA, FILLMORE CO., MINN., AUG. 17, 1877. FRIEND BENNETT: Another brother has gone to his last, long sleep. Early on the morning of the 11th inst. Charles Stephenson of Rock Island, Ill., took his departure from life. He contracted a painful disease of the lungs while traveling from Texas (the details of which you got a correct account of in his pamphlet entitled "A few words about R. Peterson"), from which he has grown weaker and weaker until the heart ceased to beat. I lost in him an esteemed friend, and the Liberal press a valuable contributor. His poem entitled "Our Father in Heaven," which appeared in your paper of Nov. 18, 1876, was a sample of his many able contributions. He was but twenty-four years of age, and his talent as a writer was excellent, and it promised some day to make him famous; but Nature, the mother of us all, will not pass unheeded a violation of her exacting laws, so, reaching out her hands, she claimed that which she had loaned for a time. Charles lived an Atheist, and to his honor it can be said he never bent the knee to superstition's throne, and in death he was the same calm Infidel. I send you a copy of his last letter, written a few hours before death. M. R. N.

"AUGUST 10, 1877. "FRIEND MORGAN: It has come at last. I have been bleeding at the lungs for two days, and the doctor has the candor to tell me I can't live twenty-four hours longer unless a change takes place for the better. I write this to say good-bye. Think of me occasionally. I don't dread my fate. Why should I shrink from a rest. I have no fears for the future, for "In spite of all the learned have said, I still my old opinion keep; The posture that we give the dead Points out the soul's eternal sleep." "My folks will send you this letter. I can't write any more; I am very weak and growing weaker. Good-bye. Your friend, "CHARLES STEPHENSON."

Freethinkers' New Organization.

WORK TO BE DONE.

MR. EDITOR: Can you find a place for this communication in the same number of THE TRUTH SEEKER that contains the Articles of the Freethinkers' Association of Central and Western New York? If you can, as a large number of that copy should be struck off for circulation, I desire to recommend some work to be attended to at once:

First, The Vice-Presidents should appoint their associates and forward their names to me immediately. Then, the County Committees thus formed are requested to call a county meeting at some central point in the various counties, and perfect a county organization and make out a full list of all persons in each county who are willing to be identified with this movement. This list should be kept by County Committee, and a copy sent to the corresponding Secretary of the Freethinkers' Association. In that way we shall get a perfect list of all the Freethinkers within the bounds of our Association, which includes some thirty counties.

Second, The next thing to do, it appears to me, should be to get as many of these persons as possible to subscribe for some Liberal paper. It would be well for each County Committee to procure a quantity of Liberal papers of various kinds and circulate them through their county, thus giving all persons an opportunity to choose for themselves which they will take. I have no doubt that the publishers would be pleased to send a sample copy to each name in these lists.

Third. Not only should a county organization be formed, but in every town some sort of an organization should be effected, and, if possible, a Liberal League. Five persons are sufficient for such an organization.

Fourth. So soon as the County Committee is formed, application should be made to W. H. Hamlin, 121 Washington street, Boston, for National League Petitions to be at once circulated, and for instructions for forming Liberal Leagues.

Fifth. By the time we get organized in each county we shall have long evenings, and, wherever practicable, meetings should be held. Let us go to work in a way that will attract the attention of Liberals all over the Union, and stimulate our friends in Eastern New York, and in all the States to follow our example of organizing.

H. L. GREEN,
Corresponding Secretary.

Prospectus—Beyond the Veil.

POSTHUMOUS WORK OF PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH.

Though the minds and agency of Fanny H. McDougall and Luna Hutchison, they having been brought together by a series of singular circumstances. Together they wrote by spirit dictation and impression, most faithfully and sincerely trying to give the true meaning of whatever was revealed, either through clairvoyant vision or otherwise, as unfolded to them by different ones in spirit life, of whom Emanuel Swedenborg was the controlling spirit of the band. Several new and beautiful revelations are given of the life beyond, embracing many subjects of deep interest, besides descriptions of the formation of Spirit Spheres, Death or Spirit Birth, the Transit, also Food, Clothing, Habitations, Employments, Amusements, Travels, Education, Oral Instruction, Asylums for the Care and Cure of the Insane and Idiotic, and much more which the table of contents will show of the twenty-two chapters the book contains.

It is believed that it will be found an entertaining and profitable book, affording pleasant thoughts and cheerful contemplations for the minds of those on this side the Veil, lessening the shadows that have so long darkly hung between this and the after-life.

Special Notices.

WATER-CURE.—Dr. Lyon's Hygienic Home for the reception of patients for board and treatment, was established in 1874, and is meeting with marked success, both in numbers and cures. Send for circular, etc., to J. S. LYON, Box 247, Springfield, Mo. 12119

Spermatorrhoea.

Dr. R. P. Fellows' warranted cure should be in the hands of those suffering from this LIFE-WASTING disease. It is an external application and has made one thousand permanent cures, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition: had been in insane asylums, many had falling-sickness fits; others on the verge of consumption, while others, again, had become foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS,

The discoverer of this valuable remedy, and who uses it exclusively in his practice, is acknowledged to be the most skillful physician in all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases living. Terms extremely moderate in all cases. Address, with stamp, Vineland, N. J., where he is permanently located.

Dr. R. T. Trall's New York Hygienic Institute. Send for Circular. 21 E. 20 St., N. Y.

Dr. J. S. Lyon's Hygienic Home is in Springfield, Mo. Box 247. Send for circular.

SHORTHAND

Taught on the most approved system, by a member of the English Metropolitan Shorthand-Writer's Association. Terms moderate. Address ROLAND, TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Reader and Thinker!

Send stamp for E. C. WALKER'S Catalogue of Free Thought and Scientific Books, Pamphlets and Tracts, Dealer in

PHOTOGRAPHS, MOTTOES, "RELIGIOUS LIBERTY."

And other envelopes, etc., etc. Agent for ENGLISH AND GERMAN LIBERAL AND SCIENTIFIC PAPERS AND PERIODICALS.

Send three cent stamp for "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS" of the National Liberal League.

Don't forget to send fifty cents for seven Lectures by Col. R. G. INGERSOLL, and ABBOT'S "Truths for the Times," and ABBOT'S "Christian Amendment." Address

E. C. WALKER,

6133 Box 59, Florence, Benton Co., Iowa.

Beautiful Place of Summer Resort.

"The Sea Breeze House,"

Situated on the shore of LAKE ONTARIO, at the mouth of IRONQUOIT BAY, seven miles from ROCHESTER, affords excellent accommodations during the warm weather, in the way of good board at reasonable prices for families or single persons. The surrounding scenery is interesting, and the facilities for fishing, sailing and rowing unsurpassed.

Address MRS. G. W. ALLEN,
Sea Breeze, Rochester, N. Y.

EXETER HALL.

By WILLIAM McDONNELL, Author of "Heathens of the Heath,"
"The most Scorching Book ever published in America since the 'Age of Reason.'"
In paper, 60 cents; Bound, 80 cents. For Sale at this Office.

THE WORLD'S SAGES, INFIDELS & THINKERS.

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS,

BEGINNING WITH MENU.

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding, - - - $3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red
burnished edges, - - - 4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked
head-band, - - - 4.50

Address,

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION

OF

FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS.

Forms for organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 600 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected; for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc., etc. The whole supplied by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Nearly 600 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents in cloth. The price is made low, so that every family can have a copy. Let none fail to have it.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Heathens of the Heath;

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

DR. STONE'S "NEW GOSPEL OF HEALTH," for sale at this office. Price, paper, $1.25; cloth, $2.50.

Underwood-Marples Debate.

HELD BETWEEN

B F. UNDERWOOD

AND THE

Rev. JOHN MARPLES,

At Napanee, Ont., July, 1875. Continuing four nights.

PROPOSITIONS DISCUSSED.—First, "That Atheism, Materialism, and Modern Skepticism are illogical and contrary to Reason." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Second, "That the Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testament, contains evidence, beyond all other books, of its divine origin." Marples affirming; Underwood denying.

Reported by JOHN T. HAWKE, of the Toronto Leader, and revised by the disputants. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents, by mail.

MR. MARPLES writes to Mr. UNDERWOOD: "Copies of the Debate were sent me and I have looked them through, and on the whole I approve of them very much. You have done me full justice. . . . I intend to push the sale all I can."

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Heroines of Freethought.

BY MRS. SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

Containing most interesting biographies and descriptive sketches of Madame Roland, Mary Wollstonecraft, Mary W. Godwin Shelley, George Sand, Harriet Martineau, Frances Wright, Emma Martin, Margaret Chappell-Smith, Ernestine L. Rose, Frances Power Cobbe, and George Eliot. The work is written in a most pleasing style and the mechanical execution is of the best description. Every Freethinker who takes pride in the noble women who have bravely espoused the truth ought to send for a copy. Price, $1.75.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.

Save Doctors' Bills.

Either of the following books sent by return mail on receipt of price:

Mothers' Hygienic Hand-book, . . . 1 00
Health and Diseases of Women, . . . 25
Home Treatment of Sexual Abuses, . . . 50

Send stamp for Dr. R. T. Trall's complete list of publications, comprising books on Health, Medical, and Scientific subjects. Address, R. T. TRALL, M.D., 102 E. 22d St., New York.

Just Issued!

ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,

141 Eighth St., New York.

THE OUTCAST.

By WINWOOD READE author of "Martyrdom of Man."

This is his last work. Mr. Reade was unquestionably one of the ablest writers of the present century. His "Martyrdom of Man" attracted extraordinary attention in Europe and in this country, for its ability, brilliancy and boldness. This last work is regarded with equal favor. The English edition was published at two dollars. We give it entire for

THIRTY CENTS IN PAPER.

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH,"
"EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will remove the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty.—Martin Luther. First published in the Canadian Monthly. Price 10 cents, by mail.

The Spiritual Offering.

A FORTY PAGE MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

NETTIE PEASE FOX, EDITOR.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, $1.25; Six Months, 75 cents; Single Copies, sent postage paid, 15 cents; Five Copies to one address One Year, $5.00. Address the Editor, 3,600 North Ninth street, St. Louis, Mo. 2124

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors.

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the

History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark. Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 386 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

RELIGION AND SCIENCE. Truly one of the most valuable works that have appeared within the last ten years. By PROF. DRAPER. Price, $1.75.

Eating for Strength.

A NEW HEALTH COOKERY BOOK.

BY M. L. HOLBROOK, M.D.

Which should be in the hands of every person who would eat to retain and regain health, strength and beauty. It contains, besides the science of eating and one hundred answers to questions which most people are anxious to know, nearly one hundred pages devoted to the best healthful recipes for foods and drinks, how to feed one's self, feeble babes and delicate children so as to get the best bodily development. Mothers who do not nurse their children will find full directions for feeding them, and so will mothers who have delicate children, and invalids who wish to know the best foods. Price, $1, postage free.

The Resurrection of Jesus.

A new Lecture by W. S. BELL, of New Bedford, Mass., the able Liberal Lecturer. It is an excellent Essay. It costs but ten cents, mailed to any address. Send for a copy. Address

D. M. BENNETT,

SCIENCE HALL, 141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

ASTROLOGY.

PROF. LISTER, Astrologer, 505 W. 23d St., New York. 44 years' practice, 27 in Boston. Can be consulted by letter. Send for Circular. Address all letters 505 West 23d St., New York City.

PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION; or an answer to the question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Divinely-Inspired and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his Political Writings—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man," his Theological Writings—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall this city, in the winter of 1876-7, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person.

The titles of the Lectures are:

- I. Growth of Worlds.
- II. Life and Death of Worlds.
- III. Other Worlds than Ours.
- IV. Other Suns than Ours.
- V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
- VI. Religion and Astronomy.

ALL FOR TWENTY CENTS.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot.
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham.
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire.	Emerson.
Rousseau.	Garrison.
Humboldt.	Peter Bergh.
Goethe.	Henry Cooper.
Schiller.	D. R. Burt.
Aug. Comte.	S. P. Andrews.
Heine.	Walt Whitman.
Alex. Pope.	Froude.
John Milton.	Max Muller.
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase.
Shelley.	Jas. Parton.
Byron.	Wm. Denton.
Burns.	Dr. Slade.
Washington.	A. J. Davis.
Franklin.	Foster.
Jefferson.	J. M. Peebles.
John Adams.	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams.	E. V. Wilson.
Madison.	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske.
Lincoln.	Fred Douglas.
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks.
Gerrit Smith.	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Becher.
J. S. Mill.	Tilton.
Sumner.	Moulton.
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greely.	Th. Nast.
Castellar.	J. G. Bennett.
Pennyson.	Chas. A. Dana.
Darwin.	Phoebe Carey.
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer.	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley.	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor.	Lucy Stone.
Draper.	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh.	Chas. Cheney.
Holyoke.	Paulina Davis.
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis.
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten.
Seaver.	Lizzie Fowler.
L. Colby.	Mrs. Slenker.
Dr. Hare.	Susan H. Wilson.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	D. M. Bennett.
Lizzie Doten.	W. S. Bell.
Mrs. J. Conant.	J. C. Bundy.
Dr. Mary E. Walker	S. S. Jones.
(full figure).	Asa K. Butts.
	W. F. Jamieson.
	and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc., at 15 cents each singly, or eight for one dollar.
	Send Albums, by mail, to hold 80 photos., 80 cts., to hold 50, $1.
	D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St. New York.

YES! WE WANT an agent in every town. Easy work at home. Write now and we will start you. $8 a day sure to all. SIMPSON & SMITH, 60 Cortlandt St., N. Y. 35

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine. 11

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $3 outfit free. H. HALLELT & Co., Portland, Maine. 1750

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit $12 and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine. 1750

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C. O. D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk, no humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburgh, Pa. 6m027

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

SCIENCE HALL, No. 141 EIGHTH STREET.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1877.

The Wolcott Meeting.

Many of the secular papers have called attention to the Freethinkers' Convention that was held at Wolcott, Aug. 17, 18, 19, and a portion of them speak of the meeting and the attendance in complimentary terms. The moral effect it must have upon the people of the country will be by no means inconsiderable.

Attention is called to the appeal on a preceding page relative to the preliminary steps for organization. The Fall season will soon be with us. Long evenings will come and we cannot too early effect organizations with the marshalling of our forces preparatory to making a forward movement all along the line.

One feature of the Wolcott meeting may be mentioned. Perfect order and peacefulness prevailed throughout its continuance. The orthodox people in the vicinity got up a counter grove-meeting for the advance of temperance and the cause of Jesus, and threatened to wipe the Infidel concern entirely out. But the wiping out process did not take place. The Christians got into some serious quarrels among themselves, which necessitated the calling in of several deputy police officers, and from which a number of lawsuits originated. In our camp all was peace and quiet. Not an angry word was spoken and not the least disorder occurred. So much better is Infidelity than Christianity.

Among those from a distance whom we failed to mention last week, was the venerable Daniel Tuttle, of Poplar. O.

OUR FRIEND, MR. JOHN A. LANT, whose family, during his imprisonment of sixteen months in the Albany Penitentiary, received many donations from readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, desires to express his profound gratitude for their kindness at that time. He is now publishing a little paper called Labor, and as a slight return for these favors will be glad to furnish his paper to those who will send him their address. The paper, as its name indicates, is devoted to the labor question. After his long imprisonment Brother Lant steps once more to the front to assert his unabated interest in free speech and a free press. Though his health is impaired, his spirit is undaunted, and we desire for him success and a long subscription list, which is the most encouraging sight in the world to an editor. His address is, John A. Lant, Ed. Labor, 34 Park Row, room 46, New York City.

ALIUNDE; OR, LOVE VENTURES. New York: Charles P. Somerby, 139 Eighth street. This is a neatly-printed little volume of 226 pages, detailing the adventures of three festive young Government clerks among certain—or rather, uncertain—"spicy isles" in the South Sea. Three fast—that is, firm—friends, Tom, Dick, and Harry, sail from San Francisco for the Sandwich Islands, are carried out of their course, and finally shipwrecked. The lucky triad are washed ashore, and find themselves the only survivors; are captured and married by three dusky maidens, and become people of rank. After a year of happy love-life, Harry is blown out to sea in a canoe, taken aboard a passing vessel, comes home, and tells all about it. The book is written in a light, humorous vein, is not calculated to shatter the nerves of the sensitive, and contains several sly hits at Christianity. It will be found interesting and entertaining by lovers of light literature and the reading public generally. Price 50 cts.

THE SOCIETY OF HUMANITY of the city of New York have just issued a little work of sixty pages, entitled "An Epitome of the Philosophy and Religion," explanatory of that Society, including its Constitution and Regulations.

To those who desire to know what the Religion of Humanity is, and what the Positive Philosophy would substitute in place of the old faith, this little work is invaluable, as it is the creme de la creme of the Positive Philosophy or positivism "boiled down."

Miss Martineau's letter to her American friends is of itself worth the price of the book, sharply defining the difference between the new and the old faith, and as clearly stating her attitude and that of her co-thinkers to those faiths respectively.

The work will be supplied from this office. Price 25 cents.

FRUIT AND BREAD, A NATURAL AND SCIENTIFIC DIET. By Gustav Schlickeysen. Translated from the German by M. L. Holbrook, M.D., Editor of the Herald of Health. This remarkable book, translated with care, is one of the most interesting productions on the natural food of man yet given to the world. From the standpoint of anthropology, physiology, experience; from history, comparative anatomy, embryology; from an unperturbed instinct, and morality, our author shows man to be by nature frugivorous, using this word in its broadest sense to include fruits and grains; and while necessity may have compelled him to resort to flesh rather than to starve, yet this does not change his nature. As an original contribution to the all-absorbing subject of food, it will prove more interesting than any novel, and we believe more profitable reading. The benefits of its perusal will be:

1. To show what is the natural food of man.
2. To lead him to become a loving child of Nature.
3. To simplify and beautify his manner of living.
4. To emancipate women from the drudgery of the kitchen.
5. To lead to increased use of fruit.
6. To diminish the use of flesh, and, where possible, to do away with its use altogether.
7. Gradually to improve the health, and add to the enjoyments and value of life.

Freethinkers' Association of Central and Western New York.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.—NAME.

The name of the Society is "The Freethinkers' Association of Central and Western New York."

TERRITORY INCLUDED.

The Territory of this Association shall include the counties of Alleghany, Broome, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauqua, Chemung, Cortland, Erie, Genesee, Herkimer, Livingston, Lewis, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Orleans, Onondaga, Oswego, St. Lawrence, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Tioga, Tompkins, Wyoming, Wayne, and Yates.

OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

First. To stimulate free thought and investigation among the people in relation to their civil, religious, and political rights, and encourage the investigation of questions relating to religion, science, and reform; and to that end sustain Freethought speakers, hold Liberal meetings, and circulate Liberal, scientific, and reform papers and periodicals.

Second. To act as an auxiliary to the National Liberal League in its efforts to accomplish the total separation of Church and State, and to organize local Liberal Leagues in the counties above named in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the National Liberal League.

THE CREED OF THE SOCIETY.

Universal mental liberty.

PLATFORM OF PRINCIPLES.

The Platform of Principles are the "Demands of Liberalism," as published in the Boston Index, viz:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

MEMBERSHIP.

Any person may become a member of this society by signing these Articles of Association and paying twenty-five cents.

THE OFFICERS.

The officers shall be a President, one Vice-President from each county, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, and a Treasurer; also an Executive Committee of seven who shall have the general supervision of the Association. The duties of the officers shall be those usually pertaining to these positions with the additional duties hereinafter mentioned.

The Vice President of each county shall, immediately after his election, appoint two other persons of the county to act with him, and the three shall be the Freethought and Liberal League Committee of the county, the Vice-President to be the Chairman, and it shall be his duty to notify the Corresponding Secretary of this Association who his associates are when they are appointed. The duty of these County committees shall be to carry out the objects of this Association, and also to cooperate with the National Liberal League in all practical ways.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The officers of this Association shall be elected annually, and shall hold their positions until their successors are elected. The President shall have power to fill vacancies.

AMENDMENTS.

These Articles may be amended at any regular meeting of the Association by a two-thirds vote of all members present.

MEETINGS, WHEN HELD.

The annual meeting, and all other meetings of this Association, shall be held at such times and places as the Executive Committee shall direct.

Officers for the year commencing August 20, 1877:

PRESIDENT, Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Alleghany—Samuel Latta, Friendship.

Broome—E. E. Guild, Binghamton.

Cattaraugus—A. L. Branard, Salamanca.

Cayuga—Mrs. Mitchell, Aurora.

Chautauqua—E. Mitchell, Jamestown.

Chemung—J. V. Mapes, Elmira.

Chenango—C. S. Palmer, Norwich.

Cortland—William D. Hunt, Scott.

Erie—Geo. W. Taylor, Lawton Station.

Genesee—J. D. Richards, Batavia.

Herkimer—W. J. Lewis, Ilion.

Livingston—H. B. McNair, Dansville.

Lewis—Thomas Bacon, Leyden.

Jefferson—William Estus, Cape Vincent.

Madison—E. D. Van Slyke, Hamilton.

Monroe—Cornelia Gardner, Rochester.

Niagara—J. M. Harwood, Hess Road.

Oneida—M. Peckham, Utica.

Orleans—Henry Reynolds, Albion.

Onondaga—John W. Truesdell, Syracuse.

Oswego—Charles A. Gurley, Pulaski.

St. Lawrence—J. P. Armstrong, Ogdensburg.

Schuyler—Cap. D. P. Day, Watkins.

Seneca—E. W. Mitchell, West Junius.

Steuben—George Morehouse, Wayland.

Tioga—O. H. P. Kinney, Waverly.

Tompkins—D. B. Morton, Groton.

Wyoming—W. F. Graves, Castile.

Wayne—Samuel Cosad, Wolcott.

Yates—S. S. Ball, Penn Yan.

RECORDING SECRETARY—Edgar M. Sellon, Castile.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY—H. L. Green, Salamanca.

TREASURER—Amy Post, Rochester.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

C. D. B. Mills, Syracuse. Charles A. Gurley, Pulaski. Sigmund Block, Cape V't. David Cosad, Jr., Oaks C'n'ts. T. L. Brown, Binghamton. N. G. Upson, Nunda Station. Clement Austin, Rochester.

Please allow me to request each Vice-President named above to appoint at once two associates, and to forward me their names and post-office address, that I may correspond with them. And I hope every Liberal who reads the above Articles of Association, who has not already joined the Society, will at once forward me his name and P. O. address—with twenty-five cents—and thus enlist in the Freethinker's army of Western and Central New York, and prepare for a forward movement all along our lines against superstition, ignorance, and injustice, and in favor of truth, education, and political and religious liberty for all.

Salamanca, Aug. 21, 1877.

H. L. GREEN,

C. S. of the F. A. of W. & C. N. Y.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's Challenge.

I will give to any clergyman in San Francisco $1,000 in gold to substantiate that the death of Voltaire was not as peaceful as the coming of the dawn.

They say Tom Paine died in fear, in agony, hearing devils rattle chains in the other room, and that the Infinite God went to work to frighten a dying man. I will give a reward of $1,000 in gold to anybody who will substantiate the truth of that story.

A Common-Sense Funeral.

At the recent burial of Nettie Keasor Little at Warren, N. H., Mr. William Little made the following remarks at the grave: During her last sickness she was a great sufferer, yet she bore all patiently and with fortitude. She was anxious to live for the sake of her husband and friends, but often said if she could not recover her health it was better that she should die. She had no fear of death, for she did not believe the creeds and dogmas that make men cowardly of the future—afraid of the unseen and the unknown. Of a future state she believed that we know nothing whatever. Whence we came and whither we go is an unsolved, and perhaps an unsolvable problem. All that we can do is to so live that when we come to die we may feel that, if death ends all, we have lived usefully, nobly, and for the improvement and highest good of our fellow-men; and if there should be for us an immortality, for which we all hope, that we should be the best possibly fitted to enjoy it. The deceased was amiable in disposition, loved by her family and friends, and respected by all who knew her. She died calmly, peacefully, like one going to sleep. And now we bury Nettie, here in the bright Springtime, in this beautiful burying-ground—there is none more beautiful in New England. The little brook murmurs near; the rustle of the trees in the wind and the song of the birds are heard. The green hills and the great mountains around us look down on her grave, on which wild flowers shall grow; and we leave her here, peacefully at rest, knowing that none who have ever lived can be better off than she.

THE attention of our Spiritualistic friends is called to the Prospectus on the preceding page. The work will doubtless prove entertaining to those who are interested in Spiritualistic literature. Orders may be addressed to this office.

TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE
& MORALS

FREE THOUGHT
AND
HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 4. No. 36. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY } New York, Saturday, September 8, 1877. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., } $2 per Year.
BY D. M. BENNETT. NEAR BROADWAY.

Notes and Clippings.

THE question of the hour, "Who shall marry Brigham Young's widow?"—Rochester Democrat.

MOODY thinks that New England is his present harvest-field. Query: Has the gospel money of the large cities been exhausted.

A CLERGYMAN of rather ordinary abilities asked his bishop for a license to preach. "I grant you permission, said the bishop, but Nature refuses it."

WHEN the sluggard, in a time of great commercial depression, asked Solomon what he should do, Solomon told him to "go to the ant," but he didn't seem to like the ant, sir.

THREE young ministers have left the British Wesleyan Conference because they cannot conscientiously preach the doctrines held by that body on everlasting punishment in hell fire.

THE Murphy revival is not the kind for Kentucky. They say it is all very well as far as it goes, but what they need is something to teach men to be more temperate in the use of the shotgun.

THE National Baptist says: "Keep clean. Always keep two shirts; you cannot be admitted to good society without them." Such advice as this should be followed not only by Baptists, but by the clergy generally.

ELDER CANRIGHT has convinced twenty or thirty laboring men in Danvers, Mass., that Saturday is the proper day to observe as the Sabbath, and they have given notice that hereafter they will do no work on that day.

GENEVA is the center of the Swiss watch industry, and that city, with the cantons of Neuchâtel, Berne and Vaud, employ 38,000 workmen and produce annually 500,000 watches, the entire manufacture being estimated at a valuation of $9,000,000 annually.

MR. BRECHER, in a recent sermon, as reported by George Francis Train, spoke feelingly as follows: "My dear brethren and sisters, I have been with you now, off and on, for nearly twenty-five years, and I have been a father to most of you and a grandfather to many of you."

WILSON COLLEGE, which is a Presbyterian establishment for young ladies at Chambersburg, Pa., has just finished the erection of a complete gymnasium and bowling alley. President Wylie has practical common sense ideas about the muscular education of young ladies.

A BACKWOODS preacher, speaking on the subject of getting to heaven, said: "My brethren, it is as impossible for a sinner to get to heaven in his sins as for the best horseman in this congregation to ride a streak of lightning through a crab-apple tree without getting scratched."

THE Methodist missionaries in Moradabad, India, have had a lively discussion with the Mohammedans. It lasted for six evenings, each side being allowed forty minutes on a stretch. The Methodists think they came out ahead, but the Mohammedan side remains to be heard from.

A LADY tried to make the Martha's Vineyard camp-meeting fashionable by taking $3,000 worth of diamonds there. One of the participants stole them as a preliminary to becoming converted. The thief no doubt finds it more profitable to labor in Martha's Vineyard than in the vineyard of the Lord.

WHEN Mrs. Van Cott comes singing down the aisle, and fixes her reviving eyes upon a man, and he turns pale and trembles, she thinks his soul is awakened. Yet we have seen the very same look in a man's face when he turned round after having kissed the servant girl and suddenly encountered his wife's mother.

THE following is said by the Boston Herald about the defunct New York Witness: "It took great interest in noon-day prayer-meetings, and frowned upon theatricals, although there is little doubt that it would have noticed a moral menagerie containing the celebrated beast with ten heads, ten horns, and the same number of crowns."

THE Pope has sent his benediction to a devout New Yorker who has published a Catholic Geography. The pious publisher aforesaid next proposes to get up a Catholic arithmetic, with a Catholic Multiplication Table and a religious Rule of Three. He has already on sale Catholic slates and pencils and apostolic writing ink.

THE Khedive has discovered a wonderfully effective way of "spoiling the Egyptians." He has offered to send 20,000 of them to fight under Turkish direction, and—unless the breech-loading arms of Allah should prevail against the hand of the Christian God—they will be more thoroughly "spoiled" than were their forefathers by the meek and holy Moses.

A KANSAS paper is troubled about Talmage, and says that it is at a loss to know whether the following extract from one of his sermons is blasphemy or "damnable nonsense": "I am an herb doctor. I will take the 'root' without form or comeliness' and put it into the cauldron; then the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley; then some of the leaves from the tree of life; next, the branch that was thrown into Marah of the wilderness. Then I pour in the tears of Bethany and Golgotha. Then I stir them up and kindle under them a fire made out of the wood of the cross. One drop of that potion will cure the worst sickness with which any soul was ever afflicted."

ONE WAY OF BUILDING A CHURCH.—Recently a peculiar case in bankruptcy came before the Register in this city from Newmarket. It appears that certain persons, some four or half dozen in number, were authorized to build a church edifice in Newmarket for one of the religious societies there, and to raise the money the said persons gave their joint and several private notes. They got the money, built the church, and turned it over to the society. And now, as the notes fall due, all these men take to the bankrupt law, and it is said they can only pay a small percentage of the debt, while it seems probable that the society will get the new house for nothing.—Dover Democrat.

BROTHER ASHENFELTER, the Pennsylvania minister of the (German) Reformed Church who was accused of heresy, now saves himself and his Reformed brethren the trouble of a trial by stepping down and out. In his vaudeville to Zion Classis he says that he has become a Universalist, and can no longer preach the doctrines of the contracted faith to which he had been blindly attached. He adds that, desiring to exercise his ministry beyond the scope of a bigoted dogmatism, he has applied for admission into the ministry of the Universalist Church. On this statement of his views and intentions, Zion Classis proceeds to put Bro. Ashenfelter out, and to recognize him no longer as a brother.

ACCORDING to the London Times' Roman correspondence, an examination of Cardinal Antonelli's papers has revealed documents which throw enough light on the Lambertini scandal to decide it. The writer also asserts that the Pope, who from the first desired that the subject should never be mentioned in his presence, has refused to permit these documents to be produced, because they contain political matter, and has ordered them to be placed in the secret archives of the Vatican. The question may arise, can the Pope be subpoenaed? Antonelli was in the habit of employing ladies, often of high position, as his secret agents, and thus kept himself informed of what was passing in countries and courts where the Vatican had no accredited agents.

THE HORRORS OF FAMINE.—The editor of the Madras Times, who is a member of the relief committee, writes under date of Aug. 1, as follows: "The population in Southern India more or less afflicted by famine numbers 24,000,000. In the most favorable circumstances at least one-sixth of the people will die. The famine is immeasurably greater than in Bengal. Twenty-three people, in all, died of starvation in Bengal. In Madras, no camp of 3,000 rises morning after morning without leaving thirty corpses. In the interior the distress is most fearful. One gentleman passing down a valley in the Wynaad counted twenty-nine dead bodies on the road. A coffee planter seeking shelter from the rain in a hut, found six decomposing corpses in it. On any day, and every day, mothers may be seen in the streets of Madras offering their children for sale, while the founding portion of the poor-house is full of infants found by the police on the roads, deserted by their parents. Since the famine commenced 500,000 people have died of want and distress. The first big tragedy may be expected in Mysore. In that province, indeed, information has reached me from Bangalore of two cases of cannibalism already."

HOW SAMSON SLEW THE PHILISTINES.—When I traveled, in 1871, in Palestine an old servant from the monastery of Ramleh, about fifty miles west from Jerusalem, showed me the supposed place where Samson killed one thousand Philistines with the jawbone of an ass. When I expressed my doubts as to the length and strength of a jawbone, considering the great number of surrounding enemies, the good man explained the case in the following manner: "Well, he took hold of the ass by the tail and swung the animal against the Philistines in such a manner that only his head, and of this especially the jawbone, struck the Philistines, keeping off in this way the surrounding warriors, and giving the blow the necessary force to kill. I affirm that in this manner Samson could have slain a million Philistines, provided the tail of the ass did not break."

THE POPE'S STOCKINGS.—Among the many pilgrims who have of late visited Rome was an old French lady, who undertook the pilgrimage, according to an Italian paper, under circumstances of no ordinary interest. She had for some time suffered from an affection of the leg of so serious a nature that, acting under the advice of eminent physicians, she at last consented to have the limb amputated as the only chance of restoration to health. On the day, however, before that on which the operation was to take place one of her friends persuaded her to defer it until she had tried the effect of a stocking in his possession that had been worn by the Pope, and which he asserted would infallibly cure her. She accordingly put on the stocking, and, to her surprise and delight, at the end of a few days was able to walk about as thoroughly cured as though she had never labored under any infirmity. Having made a vow that if the remedy proved successful she would perform a pilgrimage to Rome, she lost no time in redeeming this pledge; and on being ushered into the presence of the Pope prostrated herself with emotion before his "Holiness," enthusiastically thanking him for the benefit she had derived from the use of his stocking. After hearing her story the Pope coldly replied, "You are most fortunate. One of my stockings has healed you and restored you a leg. As for myself, I put two of them on each morning, yet I am not able to walk, or even stand upright on my legs, and am obliged," he added bitterly, "to be wheeled about in a chair."

WITCHCRAFT IN ENGLAND.—An old man, aged eighty-six, living at Westdown, near Barnstable, was charged recently with using certain subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry and otherwise, to deceive and impose on certain of her Majesty's subjects. For some time a woman, named Elizabeth Sanders, living at Bishopslympton, had been ill. Doctors had been of no avail, and on Saturday, Aug. 4, her husband sent for a man named Harper, who is known by the name of the "White Witch," but who calls himself an herbalist. He went to the house of the deceased, felt her pulse, and said that he did not know whether he could do her any good, as he was only an humble instrument in the hands of God. He gave her four or five iron rods in succession, with which she tapped a piece of iron held in the other hand while lying in bed. At the end of the rods were the names of different planets, such as Jupiter and Mercury. Defendant also asked the age of the woman, and the hour she was born, saying he wanted to find out under what planet she was born. He gave her some bitters to take, but she died a few days afterward. The defense was that the rods and pieces of metal was a rude means of using electricity, by which the defendant had effected many cures, but no explanation was given as to the meaning of the names of the planets. It was proved that the White Witch charged the woman twenty-five shillings for his services, stayed in the house five hours, and had a glass of rum and some biscuits. Several witnesses were called, who proved having been cured of bad legs and bad arms by the defendant's magic rods when nobody else could help them. The Bench sentenced the old wizard to a month's imprisonment. Notice was given of appeal, and he was bailed out.

Events of the Week.

THE public libraries and the public schools were all opened on Monday, the 3d inst.

A MILLION dollar fire occurred in Paris, Mo. It is difficult to see how so small a town can afford so large a fire.

A HEAVY snow-storm has prevailed on Mount Washington. It will make the denizens of the cities seek their homes.

HUGH DIVINE, of Philadelphia, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. May it be considered a divine visitation?

THE great tragedian, E. L. Davenport, died at his home in Pennsylvania, after a painful illness of rheumatism in the thorax, of several months' duration.

THE hot days and nights have left us, and the cooler air of Autumn is making coats and blankets much more endurable than they have been for the past three months.

THE Gospel Tent was burned up entirely at the calamitous fire of last Monday. Those who saw it say that it seemed to burn in much such a same sort of a style as though it had been in the service of the Devil!

EX-PRESIDENT LOUIS ADOLPHE THIERS, of France, the distinguished historian, etc., died suddenly, on the 3d inst., at the advanced age of eighty years. His death was preceded by a very short and slight sickness.

THE Russians and the Turks have had several bloody engagements, which, for the most part, have been disastrous to the Russians, but the late fights before Shipka Pass, conducted by Suleiman Pasha, have been pretty severe upon the Turks. They admit a loss of 7,000 men. Probably both sides are pretty badly whipped. If the Czar would take his men back to the North, he would be acting much more sensibly than he is now. What earthly business has he down there, killing off the poor, feeble Turks, and trying to take their country from them?

THE DEATH OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.—Brigham Young, the Prophet of Utah, who for thirty-three years has been the head of the Mormon religion, is dead. A man of great natural ability, great powers of organization, he has made his mark upon the history of his country and his times. His influence on the Mormon Church, on the peculiar social system which belongs to it, and on the Territory of Utah, has been controlling. His powers as spiritual leader and church director were despotic; and he has wielded them in his own way through all the fortunes and misfortunes of his religion since the murder of its founder, Joseph Smith. It is understood that his successor as President of the Mormon Church will be the youngest of his sons by his first and legitimate wife, his son John W. Young.—N. Y. Sun.

A DISASTROUS fire took place in the upper part of the city, on Monday last. It originated in the large eight-story piano-factory of Jos. Hale, on 35th street, near 10th avenue. One hundred and fifty workmen are frequently employed in the building, and about one hundred were at work at the time of the breaking out of the fire. The structure was well adapted to the rapid spreading of the flames, and was filled with the most inflammable material. The fire progressed so rapidly, and climbed so speedily from floor to floor, the smoke and flames rushing up the stairways, that some of the workmen were unable to get out of the building. Many reached the ground by means of the fire escapes, some jumped from third and fourth story windows, escaping in some instances with broken limbs or severe contusions, and in other cases being killed by the fall, while several perished in the flames. At this writing it is not known how many lives were lost, but they are variously estimated at from ten to twenty. The wind at the time of the fire was high and fitful, the flames spread rapidly, and, despite the most desperate efforts of the firemen, the entire block was consumed and parts of the two adjoining blocks. Many business houses were utterly burned out and many families rendered homeless. The aggregate loss is estimated at $800,000.

Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.

HUMPHREY'S LETTER. NO XII.

IS THERE A STRONGER PROBABILITY THAT THE BIBLE IS DIVINE THAN THAT INFIDELITY IS TRUE?

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am neither satisfied nor dissatisfied with your flaunting of soiled "cloth." Knowing that Infidels have a chronic weakness for this kind of thing, I rather expected it. I thought it probable that you would compass sea and land to gather names, and come out a graduate, with first honors, from the "School for Scandal." But I confess you have gone ahead of my anticipations. I did not suppose you would believe everything you heard even about ministers. I thought you would make some allowances for malicious charges. I did not dream that you would include instances of notorious blackmail, such as the case of Mr. McCaffrey of this city. I expected you would remember that there are still some Potiphar's wives in the world. But in all this I was signally mistaken. You can put very sweet and sentimental constructions on the more than questionable conduct of men like Voltaire, Shelley, Paine, and Pike. But ministers must have no charity, no benefit of a doubt. Everything that every old hag, blackmailer, quack, or professional liar may choose to say about any of them, must be accepted with "blind credulity," and licked down like sorghum molasses. This is the conduct of a gentleman who has so much to say about being liberal, and hearing both sides before deciding!

But inflate your list as you will, you cannot show that more than a very small percentage of the Ministry is spurious. I believe that there is a larger proportion of it genuine to-day than in the days of Christ. In his time, one out of twelve fell in three years. Putting the number of the American clergy at seventy thousand, a triennial fall of one twelfth of them would amount to almost two thousand a year. But everybody knows that no such a number is found unfaithful. That jackal, The Jewish Times, after the most diligent scratching, failed to dig up more than forty for the year 1876. Your list covers thousands of years, and yet it does not aggregate three hundred. It is clear, therefore, that the percentage of faithful ministers is very high.

In your handling of this matter you are far less candid than even Ingersoll and Paine. The former says: "I most cheerfully admit that most Christians are honest, and most ministers sincere" (Oration on Paine). The latter declares: "It is not because right principles have been violated, that they are to be abandoned" (Age of Reason, p. 67).

We are not comparing Infidelity and hypocrites, but Infidelity and the Bible. In order to see what the Bible teaches we have only to search it. But as Infidelity has adopted no set of principles, or standard of right and wrong, we have no resort but to determine its character from the writings and lives of individual Infidels. We have found that many of the "Champions" of Infidelity were men of corrupt lives. It would not be logical to mention these shortcomings as arguments, were it not for the fact that they have been defended, justified, and even eulogized, by eminent "Freethinkers." This brings us right back to the postulate that Infidelity and Immorality are consistent. In final confirmation of this let me give you the following sentence from a report of a meeting held recently in "Science Hall": "The lecture at the Manhattan Liberal Club last night was an attack on the foundations of all morality, an apology for murder and an invitation to adultery."—N. Y. Herald, Aug. 25, 1877. In the report of a lecture before another New York "Liberal Club" we read that "Mr. Warner continued his defense of the Commune, and described some of the bloody scenes of which he was an eye-witness, and the retaking of Paris by the government troops. 'Though we may not, future generations will dare to call these men (the Communists) brave.'"—N. Y. Herald, Sept. 1, 1877. Thus you see that your brethren are going about to preach the holiness of vice and the righteousness of crime. You had better heed the Scriptural invitation: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor. vi, 17).

You doubt that the Bible has produced a marked effect where it has been freely circulated and diligently searched. In evidence of my assertion let me refer you to the Principality of Wales. Perhaps the Scriptures are not so profoundly understood by the masses in any other country as in that Principality. What is the result? That there are fewer instances of murder, robbery, defalcation, sedition, and riot, in Wales than in any other part of the world. Though it has its shortcomings, that little nook of rocks and hills is a model of Frugality, Industry, Honesty, Peacefulness, and sterling Manliness. The Scotch, too, are remarkable for their knowledge of the Word. And are they not eminent for their sound common sense and unflinching adherence to principle? John Adams' picture of a nation that made the Bible its rule of action, was not overdrawn (See Letter III.)

You intimate that the Bible is of no value because it is old. Now, will you try to realize what the world would be without its ancient books? What would history be without Herodotus, Thucydides, Siculus, Xenophon, Suetonius, Livy, and Tacitus? Where would poetry be in the absence of Homer, Euripides, Sophocles, Virgil, and Horace? Who can estimate the surviving influences of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, and Cicero, on philosophy? Archimedes, Ptolemy, Galen, Euclid, must all be classed with the ancient scientists. May modern Science therefore despise them, and claim that it is under no obligations to them? You will answer in the negative. Why, then, make mere oldness an objection to the Bible? We possess every facility to get at its meaning that we have to obtain an understanding of the Greek and Roman classics, which we profess to appreciate and admire. The long caravan of the successive centuries only serve to show how that the inculcated principles of the Scriptures ever commend themselves to human Reason and Conscience, and how that they have come out of a thousand conflicts only more polished and irrefragable.

You endeavor to show that the God of the Bible is a "monstrous, unlovable Being." Your quotations are mostly figurative expressions, designed to set forth the Lord's great abhorrence of Sin, and the terrible consequences of it. Could God be a perfect Being, and look upon iniquity with anything less than infinite displeasure? And is it not an omnipresent fact that vice and crime do continually plunge men into unutterable woes?

The jumble you quote to "satisfy our readers" that the Bible is "self-contradictory" is unworthy of a serious refutation. I was astonished to see you spreading out such, such, such—well, I had rather not name it. It must be attributed to the desperation of your cause. You would not think of treating any other book in so uncritical a manner. The helter-skelter, hit-or-miss "justice" of a police-court is much more equitable and considerate than the trial you give the Bible. After I had shown you that the Jews did not offer human sacrifices, you still repeat that they did. You will have it that the two expressions "God tempteth no man," and "God did tempt Abraham," are inconsistent. Do you, then, not know that the word "tempt" sometimes means "to entice to what is wrong," and at other times "to test; to prove" (Webster)? Is it contrary to "liberal" principles to exercise a little reason and knowledge of philology in the interpretation of language? You say "Jesus did not see fit to condemn adultery." Fy, Mr. Bennett! How could you so shut your eyes against the plain language of the Apostle? The expression, "Neither do I condemn thee," clearly means that he did not condemn the woman to be stoned to death, according to the Mosaic law. He did regard her adultery as a Sin, for he said, "Go, and sin no more" (John viii, 3-11). You ask, "If the unknown writers of the Bible were controlled by God, why they did not say so?" I answer that they did say so. The prophets generally introduced their messages with some such phrase as, "Thus saith the Lord." Paul declared that the Holy Ghost spake by Esaias the prophet" (Acts xxviii, 25); and that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. iii, 16). Peter wrote that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i, 21). You repeatedly employ the word "but" in a tricky kind of a way. Let me point out some specimens of your interpolations:

"By Luke xviii, 35, it was but one man" (D. M. B.).
 "A certain blind man sat by the wayside begging" (Luke).
 "Mark v, 2, says it was but one man" (D. M. B.).
 "There met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit" (Mark).
 "According to Luke it was but one" (D. M. B.).
 "And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him" (Luke xxiii, 39).
 "Matthew shrinks the number and says it was but one angel" (D. M. B.).
 "The angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone" (Mat. xxviii, 2).
 "John says but one woman came to the sepulchre" (D. M. B.).
 "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene" (John xx, 1).

The reader will notice that you tack on the Scripture a limitation and exclusion which its language does not express. Saying that one person did a certain thing is not in itself saying that nobody else did it. How you butt against the truth!

Did space permit, I would love to go over your "self-contradictions" one by one, and show that they are no contradictions at all. You follow hostile "critics:" suppose you show at least some candor, and read such works as Barnes' Notes, and Clarke's or Lange's Commentaries on the passages you have quoted. They were fully as honest, and infinitely better Biblical scholars than Voltaire, Volney, Paine, and the entire cortege of the Boston Investigator. But this kind of a weapon has another edge with which we may clip off the head of your god, more effectually than it has even bruised the Bible. Let me give you some samples of "self-contradictions" taken from the writings of Thomas Paine. I will give them with Infidel fairness, "without comment." Here they are:

"I will endeavor that my future conduct shall as much engage your honors' approbation, as my former has merited your displeasure" (Petition to the Board of Excise, 1766).
 "I have lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good" (Will, 1809).
 "The memorial before you, met with so much approbation while in manuscript, that I was advised to print 4,000 copies. . . . It is my first and only attempt" (Letter to Dr. Goldsmith, 1772).
 "I never published a syllable in England in my life" (Crisis, No. 2. 1777).
 "'Not to be led into temptation,' is the prayer of divinity itself" (Case of the Excise Officer).
 "He was a virtuous and an amiable man" (Age of Reason).
 "The idea of his concealment, not only agrees very ill with his reputed divinity, but associates with it something of pusillanimity" (Ibid).
 "I have furnished myself with a Bible" (Ibid).
 "I keep no Bible" (Ibid).
 "It has been the error of the schools to teach astronomy" (Discourse to the Theophilanthropists).
 "Every house of devotion ought to be a school of science" (Age of Reason).
 "All believe in a God" (Ibid).
 "The evil that has resulted from the error of the schools . . . has been that of generating in the pupils a species of atheism" (Discourse to the Theophilanthropists).

"As individuals we profess ourselves Christians" (Crisis, No. 7).

"All national institutions of churches, whether Jewish, Christian, or Turkish, appear to me no other than human inventions" (Age of Reason).

"Any system of religion that has anything in it that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system" (Ibid).

"Some people can be reasoned into sense, and others must be shocked into it" (Letter to Elihu Palmer).

"I hope for happiness beyond this life" (Age of Reason).

"I hold it to be presumption in man to make an article of faith as to what the Creator will do with us hereafter" (Thoughts on a Future State).

"Come, we shall be friends again, for all this" (Common Sense).

"'Tis time to part" (Ibid).

"Nothing is criminal" (Ibid).

"What wickedness there is in this pretended word of God" (Age of Reason).

"There shall be no laws but such as I like" (Common Sense).

"I have always strenuously supported the right of every man to his opinion" (Age of Reason).

"King William never appeared to full advantage but in difficulties and in action; the same remark may be made on General Washington, for the character fits him" (Crisis, No. 1).

"The commencement of his (Washington's) command was the commencement of inactivity. . . . No wonder we see so much pusillanimity in the President, when we see so little enterprise in the General" (Letter to Washington).

"Let it be brought forth, placed on the divine law, the word of God" (Common Sense).

"As to the book called the Bible, it is blasphemy to call it the word of God" (Letter to Mr. Dean).

"I have an established fame in the literary world" (Letter I. to the Citizens of the U. S.).

"His unknown humble servant and admirer, THOMAS PAINE" (Letter to Dr. Goldsmith).

"It is my fate to be always plagued with fools" (Letter II. to the Citizens of the U. S.).

"I attended the philosophical lectures of Martin and Ferguson, and became afterwards acquainted with Dr. Bevis, of the society, called the Royal Society" (Age of Reason).

"The root of the word is the Latin verb ligo" (Of the Word Religion).

"I did not learn Latin" (Age of Reason).

It would be very easy thus to arrange "144 self-contradictions of Thomas Paine." But I am afraid that Infidel "critics" do not always go by the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you."

Having exposed the common objections to the Bible, I will now offer some positive evidences of its superhumanity, or Divinity. Lest we may seem to assume anything unwarrantably, let us begin at the beginning.

I. You will hardly deny that the material Universe exists. I will suppose that you have confidence in the testimony of consciousness and of the senses. You believe in the reality of the Human Mind. You admit that that Mind is governed by certain inherent laws of thought. In short, it is taken for granted that Man has an actual, personal, conscious, and rational existence.

II. It is further self-evident that something must have existed from eternity—either Matter, or Mind, or both. It is true that the unbegotten being of either is an unwieldy idea. But from the very nature of the case, it must be admitted and entertained. It is an axiom that nothing can come of nothing.

To assume the beginningless self-existence of Matter, and of Matter alone, is to accept the most difficult of two suppositions.

1. By adopting this view we do not escape the Mysterious, the Unknowable, and the Incomprehensible. Even the building-lots of the Universe—Space and Duration—are too vast for the mind's survey. Force is in itself inscrutable. The immensity of the Creation eludes the grasp of the human intellect. Our own little sphere is a Sphinx, whose ultimate secrets no one can coax out. Yea, we are lost in the labyrinths of our own personal being. Nature has written over many of her gates: "Positively no Admittance." We must "Inquire at the Office"—we must consult the Divine Scriptures, if we would be admitted into the inner courts of her significance. And even there we are often refused an entrance. Mystery! Mystery! Mystery! is inscribed all over the Universe; and this Mystery is multiplied a thousandfold by the hypothesis that Matter is self-existent and self-evolving.

2. This supposition is discountenanced by the familiar law, That nothing can rise higher than its source. If man were entirely of the earth, he would be entirely earthy. But we know that such is not his character. He has ideas and desires that soar above and beyond all material things. His thoughts wander through Eternity. He has longings after Immortality, and aspirations after the Infinite. Now, if the artesian well of the human mind cannot eject thoughts higher than its own source; and if that mind sends up longings and conceptions that terminate on the Supermundane and Extramundane, it follows that it is itself the emanation of a supernatural Power.

3. If nothing exists but Matter and its properties, we have then the incredible and unthinkable phenomenon of thought without a thinker; law without a law-giver; foresight without a foreseer; and design without a designer. The Creation exhibits innumerable indications of plan, ingenuity, arrangement, beneficence, and wisdom. The hypothesis that all this has taken place independently of Mind violates at once our experience and necessary conviction.

4. If atheistic Materialism is true, nothing can have a moral character. Right and Wrong are mere figments. There can be no virtue or crime where everything is ground out from between the whirling millstones of Fate and Chance. The assassin's and the thunderbolt's stroke are equally irresponsible. Man is not a free agent. Volition and gravitation are alike unmoral. Thought, desire, love, malice, charity, envy, are as really matter as the rock, tide, volcano, or Dismal Swamp. This excludes Responsibility and Morality from existence.

But man is conscious of mental liberty. He is born with a judgment that certain acts are commendable, while others are culpable. He feels that he is to blame for being foolish or mean. There are Responsibility, Right, Wrong, and Free Agency in the Universe: therefore Materialism is untrue.

III. A God exists. This supposition is not only the most reasonable, but it also involves the fewest difficulties. We have here indeed the overwhelming thought of eternal self-existence; but it is the self-existence of Life and Mind. This is a more genial and probable necessity than the opposite one.

But if the eternity of God is inscrutable, the fact of his existence is not hard to prove:

1. Suppose we apply the Darwinian Theory to this question. We find that the stages of man's ascent are from Atheism, through Polytheism, up to Monotheism. The Ape is an Atheist. So are the races of men next to him (Lubbock's Origin of Civilization, N. Y., 1873, pp. 244, 253-6; Darwin's Descent of Man, N. Y., 1873, vol. i, pp. 62-66). As man advances in knowledge, culture, and morality, he leaves Atheism behind, and passes through a region where the gods are many, but all finite, until at last he reaches the ultimate conception of One God, who is a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. Theism is the point of man's highest development.

2. The most learned and intelligent Infidels have been believers in the existence of God. We may include in this list Celsus, Porphyry, Hierocles, Tindal, Toland, Collins, Shaftesbury, Herbert, Hobbes, Bolingbroke, Hume, Gibbon, Woolston, Blount, Voltaire, Cabanis, Barlow, Volney, Allen, Strauss, and Robert Dale Owen. Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley, Draper, and Spencer deny that they are Atheists. It is the stunted conclusion of the speculations of J. Stuart Mill that an Intelligent Mind has fashioned the present order of things (Three Essays on Religion, pp. 242-3). Goethe called D'Holbach's "System of Nature" a "cadaverous spectre." All these men denied the authority of the Scriptures, and professed to follow only the light of Reason. But in that light they learned to shun Atheism. Some of them attacked it with vehemence. Paine pronounced it a "scandal to human nature." They held that the being of God is "undeniable," "self-evident," "reasonable," "demonstrable." This admission from men who denied so much is weighty in favor of Theism.

3. It is not dogmatism to say that there is something in human nature which must assume and recognize the being of God. It is true that the intensity of this something may vary in different individuals. The brutality of some natures is so rank that its effluvia absorbs and corrupts the aroma of the heart's noblest promptings. It is possible too for a man to read and speculate in such a way as to greatly modify, if not reverse, the spontaneous workings of his mind. But we are now talking of natural human nature. I say that there is an innate recognition of a Supreme Being in such a nature. If we analyze consciousness carefully, we will find in ourselves, as Schleiermacher said, a constant feeling of dependence. We may not be always conscious of it. But let a tornado sweep the ocean, or a thunder-storm shake the firmament, and this dormant feeling will become a vivid reality.

This native disposition is sometimes brought out by some special circumstance. Even a godless man, when overwhelmed by some great agony, will ejaculate an appeal to an unseen Power. He does not mean Nature, Force, or Fate. He addresses Personality. But how did he come to shriek that appeal? Was it automatic? No; he had never trained his lips to pray. Was it the result of deliberation? Not at all, for it sprang from his soul unawares to himself. Was it the result of a religious education? Not necessarily. He may have lacked such an advantage. Possibly he lived only to despise it. That ejaculatory prayer—for a prayer it may be called—was nothing less than the soul's constitutional belief in a God, bursting its encrustments under the pressure of distress.

How, on any other theory, are we to account for the universality of this belief? We find that man, in every age and under all circumstances, when he has taken but a second step from the brute, ceases to be an Atheist. There must be a cause as universal as this effect. Tradition, imitation, and education are all inadequate to account for it. Why not explain it as we would some of the other universal traits of human nature. We find that mothers love their offspring, the world over. There is a conviction as extensive as the race that marital fidelity is a virtue and that adultery is a crime. No interpretation of these facts is correct and sufficient that ignores the inborn instincts of the human heart. Though mothers manifest their love very differently, in manner and degree, and though the laws of marriage vary almost infinitely, the great underlying instinct remains the same. It is so with the intuitive conviction that there is a God. It is the product of man's constitution. His ideas of the Most High are diversified. But the one great fundamental feeling that there is such a being is as general as the instincts of the heart and the intuitions of the mind.

All this is admirably supported by Phrenology—a system of philosophy adopted by many Infidels. According to that "science," there is a group of Faculties that have the Supreme Being as their object. They are called the Moral and Religious Faculties (Fowler's Phrenology pp. 48, 123). They terminate on God. Their function is righteousness, love, adoration, and worship. They are the organs of the religious sentiments.

But if man is constituted with faculties whose object is God, does it not follow that a God exists? We find the world full of such correspondences. A full udder answers to the lamb's instinctive craving and seeking for nourishment. The tendrils of the vine do not stretch out their fingers into vacuity. Throughout Nature, an instinct or a faculty indicates the reality of its object. According to Phrenology, the being of God is as certain as the existence of the crowns of our heads.

4. The argument from Design is absolutely conclusive. I am aware that this argument has been attacked of late. Two or three famous writers have made some belittling criticisms on it, and the thousand and one parrot-Infidels have learned to repeat their words. The gist of their denial is, that Nature contains evidences of design, as such.

To be convinced of the contrary, we have only to open our eyes. The Universe is full of arrangements. The stars in the firmament are not pitched together pell-mell. The solar system is systematic. In our own world we find innumerable instances and varieties of contrivance. Guyot has shown that the very positions of the earth's mountain-ranges are indicative of a far-seeing and beneficent plan (Earth and Man). The vegetable kingdom exhibits myriads of most delicate, ingenious, and admirable adaptations of means to ends. It is no less so in the animal kingdom. The study of physiology, anatomy, gestation, incubation, and instinct ushers us into an immense museum of marvelous wisdom, foresight, and purpose.

There are doubtless many things whose utility we cannot always perceive. Nature seems to contain some instances of failure. But we ought to remember that we are not omniscient. An apparent fizzle may be in fact a splendid success. The flower in the desert does not really waste its fragrance. It throws its mite of perfume into the circumambient treasury of the air. The city swell, visiting a country cousin, may say that the dunghill behind the stable answers no purpose. The country cousin knows better. Let materialistic swells keep in mind that there may be—as there certainly is—adaptation, contrivance, and success even where they are utterly unable to detect them.

I know of nothing so well worth reading on this subject as Paley's "Natural Theology." Let no Infidel turn up his nose at it, and say that it is old. It is not near so old as Voltaire's Works; nor is it quite so antique as Paine's "Age of Reason." It is unfair to sneer at it before it is read. I am confident that if you will give it a thorough study you will admire it and receive immense benefit from it.

There are other arguments for the being of God; but they are mostly of a metaphysical character. The curious reader will find an excellent summary of them in Hodge's Systematic Theology, N. Y., 1872, vol. i, pp. 204-215. They need not be given here. The foregoing considerations—the insurmountable difficulty of conceiving of the eternal self-existence and self-arrangement of Matter; the fact that only the very lowest races, the quasi-apes, are atheistic; the admission of the most distinguished Infidels; the universal conviction of mankind; the testimony of Phrenology; and the plans, designs, provisions, and contrivances so strikingly manifest in the world—all attest and, together, demonstrate the existence of God.

IV. We are now prepared to assert the supernatural. God is Himself the Great Supernatural. His existence being established, Miracles are possibilities and probabilities. Since there is a Revealer, a Revelation is to be expected. If a Creator exists, is it not credible that he would pay attention to his creatures, and especially to his rational creatures? Is it not likely that he would make his Character and Will known to them? In looking over the world we find that the condition of man is such that he needs such assistance. By contemplating the beneficence of his works, we must infer that his Maker is disposed to give it. Will you reply that his works are a sufficient revelation of his Being, Attributes, and Requirements? I deny it. The twilight of Nature has never satisfied the human soul. This is shown by the sad, unsatisfactory guess-works of the Greek and Roman philosophers, and by the alleged communications from above clung to by nearly every nation and tribe. Even Spiritualism is an undesigned testimony to this fact. There is an indestructible belief in the unsophisticated mind that the material creation is but the first volume of the Divine Revelation. Every eye turns to look for a Volume Second, wherein is contained the sum and conclusion of the whole matter. Man is dissatisfied and uncertain without it. Under such circumstances it is presumable that a benevolent God would bestow on his creatures and children that which they so much need and desire.

V. The claim of the Bible to be such a Revelation, is stronger than that of any other book or set of books. This I shall endeavor to show by reference to a few palpable facts:

1. The size of the Bible is an argument in favor of its pretensions. It is neither so small as to be contemptible, nor so large as to be impracticable. The "sacred books" of the Chinese and Hindus are ponderous and almost countless. A life-time would be insufficient to read them over. It is highly improbable that the Most High would reveal his Will, and then practically conceal it in immense and innumerable folios. It is reasonable to expect that a book given for his guidance would be tractable. Now the Bible bears this characteristic more plainly than any other venerated writings. The Koran is of a similar size; but in this, as in many other respects, it is only an imitation of the Bible.

2. The simplicity of the Scriptures is extraordinary. It is very natural to authors occasionally to put on airs, and make some flourishes of style. But there is nothing of this kind in the Bible. As we read it we never feel that its writers are making an effort. It is free from pedantry. It has steered clear of the dry formalities of legal documents. There is no affectation about it. It narrates its histories and states its doctrines with the grand plainness of a hale old sage that has outgrown the pomposity, sophomority, vanity, and affectedness of his younger years. This would be remarkable in a volume composed by a single author. How much more remarkable must it be in a book written by about forty different men!

3. Another striking feature of the Bible is its candor. It is common for a nation to magnify the virtues and to palliate or conceal the imperfections of its heroes. But the sacred writers did not seem to be even inclined in that direction. They told of the faults, sins, and crimes of the Hebrew patriarchs, prophets, and kings, as undisguisedly as if they had been recounting the deeds of their enemies. Where did the Infidel find out so much about the iniquities of the ancient Jews? Strange to say, it was from the Jewish annalists. Never did a nation's official historian draw such a dark picture of it, as the Bible has given of the Israelites. It is a marvel that Jews should write such a history, and a greater marvel still that the Jewish people should adopt it. Was not all this unhuman, to say the least?

